Sir,— Some few weeks ago orders came to prepare immediately the rejects for shipment back to Canada. This included the too old and the too young. The too-young marched off the parade ground just now to take ship "somewhere." It is a sight rare enough and moving enough to call for special comment. Eleven cheery, skittish lads, most of them away under eighteen, and as a consequence with the ends of their bones not fully hardened. But what care they? The band drawn up as usual at the edge of the parade ground plays a gay and sprightly air as the boys march to the parade ground with all their belongings, their kit bags on their backs, for final inspection. These young lads have often attracted my admiration. Half grown and utterly, in my opinion, unable to bear the weight of a rifle, their heavy pack with blanket their great coats, mess-tins, etc. They never grumbled, but always marched on route marches, and some long ones without a murmur and without a fall out. Plucky is no name for it. Whoever grumbled, they did not. Always ready to play, to frolic and to eat. They have not yet developed the drink craze or the craze to make beasts of themselves and then pretend it is all right and come up smiling and unblushing amidst the respectable, temperate, self-controlled people of a community. In a word you can see that they are boys, the young of the human race, with plenty of physical pluck. Away they went with the older ones, the O. C. included, and Major Watt and "Wally" Armstrong (acting adjutant), looking on half-laughing and half-wondering if they were once like that. It is no good trying to describe boys. You can see it sticking out of them with every way of the head and every gig gle. But away they went carrying heavy burdens as if they were nothing. A little bad language will no doubt accompany them as they move along, but the O. C. was merciful and marched them only two miles to the railway station instead of ten. They vanished, not because they wanted to go "home to mamma," but because they had to. They are a credit to their parents and we all said quietly, God-speed them," to the young harum-scarums as they left us and we turned again to more serious matters. I thought it a pity to leave a little incident that might profit us, unnoticed.

J. H. BURNHAM.

Otterpool Camp, Shorncliffe, Kent, England.

Pte. Wesley Nicholls, who went overseas with the 93rd Battalion, and who is now on the staff of the Canadian Pay Office, Millbank, London, in a letter to a member of the Examiner staff, says: "There are quite a number of Peterborough boys in the pay office. Sergt. Roy Thompson of the 8th C.M.R., Pte. Holyman, Pte. Geo. Brynton, who was Major Bennett's orderly, and several others I have not met yet.

Pte. Nicholls refers to one of the recent Zeppelin raids. He says: "We had a large Zeppelin raid here last Sunday morning, the largest London has ever known. There were thirteen Zeppelins in all, and, believe me, we experienced an exciting time for a while, until we saw one of the Zeppelins burst into a mass of flames and fall to the ground. The Lieutenant who did the good work was awarded the Victoria Cross. I got a piece of the Zeppelin and also a piece of one of the Germans' burned jackets."

The Cobourg Sentinel Star says:— This week C. P. R. Detective Goodson of Montreal, was in town looking after deserters from that company's boats. Fourteen of their seamen came here and joined the 235th Battalion. The officers of the battalion did not seem wiling to give up the men who acknowledged having been on the boats, and the matter has been referred to the Department of Justice at Ottawa, to settle the question of whether the men will be compelled to return to their boats or stay with the battalion. Seamen are hard to get now and the scarcity is causing delay in transporting troops overseas.

235TH AT COLBORNE.

Colborne, Sept. 22—The 235th Battalion, Lieut.-Colonel Scobell in command, is here to-day, having marched from Cobourg, a distance of sixteen miles. The soldiers gave an exhibition of drill and the residents presented each man with a pie and other eatables. To-morrow morning the battalion goes on to Brighton, and Campbellford, continuing its march through the country to help recruiting.

The following letter has been received by the Soldiers' Wives and Mothers Club in reference to a parcel that was forwarded by the organization. It reads as follows: "In reply to your letter of July 22nd, concerning a parcel of socks sent to the 4th C.M.R. This parcel had already been opened. The remainder is being distributed according to your wish, to members from Peterborough. With many thanks for the same.

Lieut. J. R. Woods.
Assistant Adjutant, 4th C.M.R

The Kingston Standard Says:

Yesterday Barriefield camp parted with 28 subalterns that had been selected from the various units in the 3rd Military District for overseas service. The officers went east some time yesterday. In front of the administration building, yesterday morning Lieut-Col. Brown, G.S.O. said good-by to the draft, and it is expected that these officers will soon be in the trenches.

Yesterday afternoon eight officers from the 136th Battalion arrived at Barriefield camp and reported to the G.S.O. With these came officers of the 120th, 139th, and 146th Battalions, who were unable to go overseas because of the changed condition of the units. Maj. Vanluven returned from the 146th, with Capt. Hanna and Lieut. Burton. Lieut. Mambrook, of the 136th Battalion, also returned to the city. Others will follow in a few days.

No provision has yet been made for officers who have cost the government a large sum of money to train, and who are suddenly thrown out of a place because of unavoidable changes in units. It has been suggested that these officers be given the first consideration in the organization of new battalions as they have had many months experience, and all well trained in their duties. If new officers are taken into the new battalions, these will have to have many months in uniform before they will be of real value in the work of training troops. The matter will be submitted to headquarters.

Any hardware store will sell you rubber dish protectors to put on your kitchen faucets, but you need not go to even that expense. Cut 1 1-2 inches of garden hose and attach a piece to each faucet and avoid chipped dishes.

Fires In The South Ward

Fire in a shed at the rear of 249 Sherbrooke street, gave the fire department a run about 2 o'clock this afternoon. Before the blaze was finally extinguished a number of roofs in the immediate vicinity were ablaze. The high wind scattered the sparks over a wide area, and for upwards of an hour the firemen had a busy time running from one conflagration to another. The main fire was close to the South Central school. The scholars were mustered out by the teachers. Sparks fell on the roof of the school and set it afire in several places. Bucket brigades were organized in several places and property owners throughout the neighbourhood were prepared for a speedy ascension to the roof in the event of a fire breaking out. Some of the residents kept the roofs saturated by means of the garden hose.

William Taylor's house, at the corner of Sherbrooke and Stewart streets, and Nichol's grocery store were among the places that caught fire through sparks dropping on the roofs. The shed in which the fire originated was totally destroyed. The loss will be in the neighbourhood of a couple of hundred dollars.

AGE OF THE EARTH

Deduction Made from Amount of Salt in the Sea.

"Real salt" has been used for a variety of purposes. It is the raw material in soda manufacture, and the basis of the glaze on our pots and pans. But Prof. Joly, of Dublin, used salt in calculating the age of the world. His method had the simplicity of genius. He first computed the amount of salt in the sea and found the quantity to be enough to replace the whole continent of Europe. Now, all this salt was brought to the sea by the rivers, so his next computation was the amount of salt transported annually from land to ocean. A little sum in long division gave him a quotient of between 90,000,000 and 100,000,000. That was the age of Mother Earth, who had deceived Lord Kelvin into thinking her a maiden of from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 years.

Sometimes the strap which connects to the wheels of the sewing machine becomes stretched too long. To tighten it, slip it out of its groove and take off a piece of metal connecting the two ends by the aid of pincers then cut off a trifle of the end of the strap and fasten together again.

There is a possibility that there will be no competition for this cup this year on account of the enlistment of practically all the athletes who have formerly entered. The Eastwood Trophy is for boys 18 and under, the Huycke Trophy for boys 16 and under, and the Peck Trophy for boys 14 and under. The events are being held somewhat earlier this year in order to give the Collegiate boys a chance to rest up for the Collegiate Field Day, which will be held about one week later. Most of the competitors of last year have already signified their intention of entering for Saturday's games, and a good programme is assured. Entries may be made at the Y.M.C.A. office.

HIGH SCHOOL RUGBY LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED

At a meeting in Port Hope on Saturday an Eastern Ontario High School Rugby Union was formed, with the following officers: Hon. Pres., G. N. Gordon, Esq., Peterborough; Pres., N. A. Irwin, Belleville; Vice-Pres., C. E. Jamieson, Peterborough and Alfred Johnston, Lindsay; Sec'y-Treas., Hugh Austin, Peterborough. It was announced that Mr. G. N. Gordon had donated a cup for competition.

On Oct. 14 Peterborough plays the Lindsay Collegiate Institute at Lindsay and the following Saturday at Peterborough.

Overseas Rugby League Formed

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Sept. 24.—At an enthusiastic meeting held at the Russell House Saturday night the Overseas Football League was successfully organized. It will be conducted along the lines of the Big Four, and it is expected that the season will prove one of the best on record.

The teams entered are those of the 207th, 205th, 180th and 244th Battalions of Ottawa, Hamilton, Toronto, and Montreal, respectively. It was decided to play according to intercollegiate rules, and the series will be open to all who are in khaki, whether amateurs or professionals. The season will open on October 7, and it must be wound up by November 11. The Hamilton and Toronto battalions will form the western section, with Ottawa and Montreal comprising the eastern group. These teams will play home-and-home games, after which the winners come together in a final round of two matches. Referees will be agreed upon by mutual consent and the receipts on the championship round equally divided.

Those present at the meeting were: Capt. Walter Molson, Montreal; Lieut. McKenzie, Hamilton; Capt. J. P. Fitzgerald, Toronto and Lieut. McCuaig, Ottawa.

Frank Shaughnessy, who has been coaching the 207th Battalion, will likely be found in khaki this week. The famous football and baseball athlete has decided to enlist and will be a Lieut. in No. 2 Company. He played for the Notre Dame University team on the American side and should be a valuable player as well as coach for McLean's athletes.

Cattle Markets.

Receipts at the Union Stock Yards yesterday were 205 cars, made up of 4,099 cattle, 221 calves, 914 hogs, 1,906 sheep and lambs.

There was a heavy run of cattle in yesterday. Quality averaged low, and buyers made a determined effort to lower prices by about 50c below last week. The result was a complete deadlock for several hours, prices finally breaking about 25c, when cattle began to move out to the scales. Lambs were steady. Hogs 50c lower.

SUBMARINE WARFARE SHOWS BIG INCREASE IN LAST TWO WEEKS AND ANOTHER CRISIS IS NEAR

One Hundred and Twenty-Six Merchant Ships, Including Forty-two Neutrals, Sunk Since July 14, State Department Has Learned, and American Lives Have Been Imperilled in Attacks Without Warning By Undersea Boats.

BOTH NUMBER OF LOSSES AND TONNAGE OF VESSELS GROWING IN PROGRESSIVE RATIO

Obtaining of Legal Evidence Difficult, But No Doubt Exists That the Crime Against Which the United States Protests Has Been Committed

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 26.—A review of official reports to the State Department revealed the startling fact to-day that submarines of the Central Powers sank a total of 126 merchant ships, including forty-two merchant ships of neutral nationality, in the period from July 14 to September 20.

Submarine warfare has shown an alarming increase within the last two weeks, these reports prove. In the thirty-day period from August 10 to September 20 the loss of belligerent merchant ships from submarine attacks averaged one a day, while the losses of neutral ships have become almost as great. Twenty-four neutral merchant ships were sunk by submarines in the last thirty-day period of the official reports.

Scarcely two months after the administration scored its "settlement" with Berlin in the Sussex case submarine warfare, these official reports show, began to be resumed. At first the operations were restricted and the victims of the U-boats were few and unimportant. But with each week that passed the number of merchant ships destroyed was increased. And not only do these reports show that the operations of the submarines became more extended, but their methods of attack became more ruthless.

Dividing the period covered by the official reports into three parts, it was found that five neutral vessels were reported sunk by submarines in the first period, thirteen in the second and twenty-four in the third. The size of vessels attacked has also increased, the losses first reported being confined to small craft and later increasing to vessels of the size of the Letimbro.

Press despatches have reported but a few of these losses—those in which the circumstances of the attack directly suggested international complications.

But this alarming record is viewed by many officials here in the light of the expressed conviction of President Wilson that it has become a "demonstrated impossibility" for submarines to continue warfare against merchant ships without an inevitable violation of the sacred rights of humanity.

"The use of submarines for the destruction of an enemy's commerce," said the President, "is of necessity, because of the very character of the vessels employed and the very methods of attack which their employment, of course, involves, incompatible with the principles of humanity, the long established and incontrovertible right of neutrals and sacred immunities of non-combatants."

AMERICAN LIVES IMPERILLED.

Already, in these recorded attacks, the lives of American citizens have been menaced, and the State Department now has under investigation cases in which the attacks were reported as committed without warning and in violation of law.

In sixty-five instances, in the period here under review, merchant ships were sunk without any evidence being obtainable as to the cause of the attack. It is not doubted that these cases represent those in which the submarines have violated the law, though with detection. The obtaining of legal evidence in such cases is extremely difficult, and it is this fact, and in all probability this fact alone, which is saving the United States from a crisis in its relations with Berlin. Any day, it is admitted, may develop a case in which the damning evidence will not down.

It is only the absence of American ships in the war zone which can explain escape from a direct issue over that score. It was a close call in the case of the Owego, shelled by a submarine, and the ships of practically every neutral European nation are included in the list of those sunk by submarines. Since August 10 the official reports show losses of the following neutral vessels:—

"Norwegian, eleven; Spanish, four; Danish, three; Swedish, three; Greek, two, and Dutch, one.

Under the rules of international law such neutral ships may only be sunk when they have on board more than fifty per cent. of contraband cargoes, and then only when it is impossible for the belligerent to take the vessel into port and "after all of the persons aboard the merchantman are transferred to a place of safety." The Prussians are still regarding small boats on the high seas as a place of safety. Whether they have proved safe, whether there has been a loss of neutral life, is still to be shown when the full reports in these cases are received.

Non-combatant lives on ships of belligerent nationalty have already been taken in these latest submarine attacks. It was only the lucky chance that Americans were not included which saved the crisis. Actually the crime against which the United States protests was committed in such attacks, but the United States was not involved through the loss of its citizens.

A CRISIS APPROACHING.

This is precisely the situation that preceded the attack upon the Sussex and that followed the "settlement" of the Arabis case. After the Arabic was sunk the United States refused to continue negotiations in the Lusitania case until immediate assurances were gven against a recurrence of the crime. Germany gave assurances with a string tied to them — the string which drew a distinction between a "liner" and a freight ship. But for a while after the Arabic disaster submarine warfare was curbed. Then, when public opinion in the United States had cooled somewhat, the submarines centured forth again. At first the attacks were few. Official reports recorded them, but the press paid little attention to them, and the American public thought that the atrocities were over.

Suddenly, however, the activities of the submarines accelerated, in response to a demand within the empire. And then, within a few weeks, there came the sinking of the Sussex.

Following the Sussex attack President Wilson made an address to Congress which was generally interpreted throughout the United States as a demand for a complete cessation of submarine warfare. No less would satisfy the United States. Berlin gave assurances again with a string tied to them. Then the State Department placed an interpretation on the President's words which permitted a continuance of submarine warfare provided that it was a legal warfare, albeit the President had declared that submarines could not conduct such warfare within the limits of the law.

There followed a two-months' period in which the submarines were withdrawn, and then the demand within the empire sprang up anew and the submarines were again unleashed. At first they moved cautiously, but now they strike among the ships of all nations, regardless of flag. Their attacks increase in number. It is, by every indication, precisely the situation that preceded the Sussex attack. The crisis, if this continues, cannot be far distant.

Britain's Latest Battleship Is a Wonderful Craft

Vessel Just Completed Is the Mightiest Battleship the World Has Ever Seen With a Speed Greater Than the Speediest Battle Cruisers—The Warspite is a Pretty Substantial Ghost—The Enemy's Futile Threat

TURNING OUT DESTROYERS

(By F. A. McKenzie.)

EDINBURGH, September 26.—By invitation of the Admiralty we visited the British fleet, examining ships like the Tiger and Warspite, which the Germans declare they sunk, and witnessing something of the completeness and magnitude of England's continued naval preparations.

I first saw on the Clyde the new ships now building. One, just completed, is the mightiest battleship the world has ever seen, with a speed greater than the speediest battle cruisers; with armour and armament exceeding the super-dreadnoughts; with 15,000 horse-power engines, which enable her to overtake and destroy any possible opponent.

Nearby was the keel for a still mightier vessel. Powerful destroyers are being turned out wholesale. Time after time I passed yards where whole lines of new destroyers are nearing completion, each on its stop, its keel ready to run into the water.

LIKE SHELLING PEAS.

"It's too ridiculous," one American explained; "they turn out destroyers here like shelling peas." The speed in ship construction has broken all records. One monster battle ship whose plans were not prepared in January, 1915, was launched in March, 1916. She was completed a fortnight ago.

The motto of one big shipyard, "Be sure Germany is working double tides," dominates the Clyde where employers and workers, both men and women, are working together in the same shops, all dominated by the determination to make good. Gentlewomen take their share of the daily labour in the workshops in order to beat the Huns. I can only say concerning submarines that what I saw convinced me that Britain's submarine fleet, for size, and long-distance capacity, need fear no comparison.

A SUBSTANTIAL GHOST.

I was specially interested in going over the Warspite, which Germany officially maintains was sunk off Jutland. It is a substantial ghost. The story of how the Warspite came home under her own steam after being the centre of one of the most concentrated attacks in that battle forms one yet unwritten romance of this war. "We do not wonder the Germans imagine the Warspite sunk," says the sailors, "she was so surrounded by columns of water from the German shells bursting around her, she was quite invisible for a long time."

To-day the Warspite is fitter than ever. She has been doing good work for weeks past.

HUNS' FUTILE THREAT.

Officers, discussing the general naval outlook, declared themselves absolutely unperturbed over Germany's threats of fresh submarine acticity. She has threatened that almost from the beginning, they say; she has striven to do all the submarine damage she can for two years. She has proved how limited her capacity to cause mischief in this direction. Naval men express frank amazement at Germany's two cardinal mistakes in this sea war. The first was in omitting to arrange to attack our merchantmen at the beginning by ocean cruisers properly distributed over different seas. Their next was by centralizing their effort now upon submarines, rather than disguised ocean destroyers. These mistakes, now irremediable, deprived Germany of a powerful weapon, while her submarine wars additionally stripped her of the last vestiges of sympathy from neutrals.

NO SURPRISE SPRUNG.

The navy considers that the Jutland battle unquestionably proved the soundness of our principles of naval development. The surprise of that battle was, they declare, the absence of any surprise. Zeppelins took no part in the fighting, nor can they. The Germans showed the absence of very big guns. If they had extra big guns they failed to make use of them. Their sailors, although firing excellently at the beginning, crumpled up when our shells began to get home, their nerves cleanly being rattled under fire. These points prove, officers maintainh that short service sailors like the Germans are inferior to old-time men like our own.

IN SPLENDID SPIRIT.

I found the spirit of officers and men one of great cheerfulness and optimism. They want the German navy to emerge, but scarcely anticipate it, believing that Germany will prefer to keep her ships as pawns when peace negotiations come.

I watched particularly among the crews of the various ships engaged in the recent fighting and previous battles for signs of staleness or weariness, but they were not observable. The navy was never better, never stronger. Obviously, however, the great increase in the number of our ships makes the demand for men urgent, and Canada's offer of naval recruits has been received with great satisfaction.

MORALE OF GERMAN TROOPS LOWERED SAYS JOURNALIST

LONDON, September 26.—A correspondent at British headquarters in France says the recent British advances in which they straightened their line from Flers to Courcelette, on the Somme front, have shown that the German morale has been lowered.

"We are receiving abundant proof of the weakening of German troops," he writes. "The German prisoners ascribe this partly to the system of keeping the men in the trenches for long periods without relief wit the result that they are completely worn out.

"German officers captured admit that their troops are incapable of prolonged resistance because of fatigue. Men of the German thirteenth corps repeatedly conceded the superiority of the British and French troops and were particularly impressed with extraordinary expenditure of ammunition by the allies' artillery.

Twenty-nine Persons Were Killed in Last Night's Raid, the Second Within Forty-eight Hours—A Number of Houses Wrecked

LOSSES STUN BERLIN

LONDON, Sept. 26.— Twenty-nine persons were killed last night in another Zeppelin raid on England, the second within forty-eight hours, Gen. French, commander of the home forces, reported to-day.

A number of small houses were wrecked or damaged, but the raiders were successfully driven away from the industrial centres. No damage was done to factories or military establishments.

LONDON, Sept. 26. —A despatch from Tilbury says that the debris of a third Zeppelin destroyed in a raid Saturday night was picked up in the North Sea. The loss of three airships has stunned Berlin. Swiss despatches report great depression in Germany in regard to the loss of Zeppelins in England.

British Troops Have Captured Two Fortresses

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Sept. 26.—British troops have captured two fortresses and trenches to a depth of a mile, severing German communication with Combles. Trapped by the lightning advance of both French and British wings in yesterday's great storming attack, a German force, estimated at from two thousands to three thousand, has been surrounded at Combles. Their surrender is believed certain unless Teutonic counter attacks open a wide gap for their retreat. In face of heavy German counter attacks British and French have held all ground gained near the Somme river. Allied artillery last night were shelling heavily for a fresh advance.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

Getting Ready: Yes, I plead guilty, it's only another way of saying "preparedness", the big word with the bigger meaning that has been used so much of late but what I started out to ask about is this: How many families of the present day are prepared to feed themselves for a few weeks even, some of them a few days, to say nothing of months in case of a prolonged railroad tieup or an invasion of any kind, even a rigid quarantine, blockade or a failure of wheat or corn crop. Just stop and think over the many possibilities. I am not an alarmist nor a pessimist, on the contrary I am rather an extreme of the American type of optimist. We are all inclined to say "I should worry and then let worry go hang.

The people on the farms are in a much safer position than the people of the cities and the people in the South, that is the real farmers of the South are much safer than those of the North. It is a lamentable fact, however, that the farmers of the entire country as well as the city dwellers have come to depend upon an almost daily supply of food products that are carried from point to point on the railroads. Any great calamity that would suddenly stop that transportation would cause widespread suffering. I believe heartily in the old-fashioned way of storing up a supply sufficient for emergencies and this should be done by the individual as well as the nation.

Last year this country produced a most bountiful crop of all cereals and at once we began to sell and export it. The present crop is surely sufficient for the needs of our country but selling for export is going on just the same. The people that look beyond the days supply for their own commissary as well as that of the nation are the ones that realize fully the tremendous waste that is constantly going on in this country. In the cities and even in some parts of the country many children hunger for the fruit and vegetables that rot in the fields on other farms. Great piles of manure lie wasting near the barns while the careless farmer complains that his land is worn out. Disease breeding flies come from this fertile breeding place to plague the careless farmers and his stock. When his cows fail to give the desired flow of milk he complains about that and when his family is stricken through the activity of the typhoid fly he blames the doctor.

The carless farmer lets the weeds grow rank where he should grow food. Many thousands of acres of most excellent land, which if cultivated would supply the needed surplus of fruits, grains and vegetables are turned over to weeds and their seeds increase the difficulty and labor of growing crops on the cultivated land.

In order to get ready for the ever increasing demand for more food by our steadily increasing population there must be more and smaller farms, more extensive cultivation of the land and less food allowed to go to waste. Surplus potatoes should be dessicated during the years of abundant crops and used when the crop is light, also the surplus fruits should be evaporated and thus easily kept over for the lean years. Above all, however, from the Home Health Club standpoint, lay in an abundant supply of good health. Treasure it as the most valuable possession of a human being. Incidentally don't forget that the Home Health Club is always ready to help you.

I will gladly answer all inquiries for information on health subjects from readers of this publication if the same are addressed to Home Health Club, 5039 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, Ill. Send full name and address with 4 cents postage.

Dear Doctor: I have had a severe cold for the past seven weeks; everything smelled and tasted bad. I am somewhat better but I cough a great deal, especially in the mornings, and my left lung feels sore about the middle of the left breast, also in the back. I seem to catch cold very easily and my throat is sore all the time, especially in the evening.

My little girl of four has some skin disease. It is not hereditary. I first noticed it a year ago and showed it to the doctor but he did not know what it was. The trouble comes like a chapped skin and gets as large as an American quarter, perhaps three or four of them. Then they go away for some time to reappear again. They seem to be worse in the summer but are not itchy. They smart if I apply eczema salve. Would you kindly advise me for which I shall feel deeply indebted.—Mrs. D. O.

Answer: The catarrhal condition that has set up from the severe cold can no doubt be entirely relieved by the practice of the exercises in Vol. 2 under the heading of Catarrh, and in order to keep the difficulty from going down into the lungs you would be wise to put into practice the instructions given in the same book on Consumption and its Prevention. You will find many other excellent directions for preventing colds and building yourself up into strong, healthy condition in the various books.

In regard to the difficulty in the case of your little girl I am inclined to think that it is what is commonly called Salt Rheum, and the simple home treatment described in the club books would overcome it. However, for the benefit of others I might suggest that it can as a rule be readily cured by the local application of hot vinegar. Take ordinary vinegar and heat it and apply to the affected part for several minutes at a time, afterward rubbing on warm olive oil.

Dear Doctor: Will you kindly tell me if strong, healthy persons of 38 or 40 can improve their form by a wise course of training? The one I have in mind spends much time out of doors in the open air and walks considerably.—Mrs. H. D.

Answer: To your question I would answer most emphatically yes. The exercises described in the Home Health Club Book, Vol. 2, under the heading of Dynamic Magnetism, when combined with the exercises in Vol. I of the Club Books, will improve the physical condition of almost every human being as well as the mental condition, and will make a well developed symmetrical form.

WHEN CUTTING TEETH
Babies Are Subject to DIARRHOEA

When the baby starts to cut its teeth, then is the time that the poor mother is under the stress of great anxiety. For some reason or other the bowels become loose, and diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, cramps and many other bowel complaints occur; the gums become swollen, cankers form in the mouth, and in many cases the child wastes to a shadow.

When the child gets into this condition the bowels must be looked after very closely, and for this purpose we know of nothing that can equal Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

This sterling remedy has been used for teething children, for over seventy years, by thousands of Canadian mothers who will swear by its efficacy.

Mrs. R. J. Waldruff, South River, Ont., writes: "Two years ago my little girl had diarrhoea while cutting her teeth. She got thin and very weak. I had tried different remedies, but all to vry little good. A friend recommended Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, so I procured a bottle at once, and after she had taken a few doses I could see a change, and by the time she had taken half the bottle she was cured. I think every home should keep it on hand."

LABOUR SQUAD.

Officificial Call to Navvies and Labourers.

There is urgent need of labour for the building and completion of the munition factories essential to the victory of the Allies. To supply the deficiency the authorities have set on foot a big labour recruiting scheme, which it is hoped will be brought by bold advertising and in other ways to the notice of suitable men.

The appeal is to navvies and labourers who are not at present engaged on national work. They are invited to join the building labour squad.

The men will be required to sign on for six months or the duration of the war, and they must agree to work wherever they are directed by the Ministry of Munitions. They will receive the pay of the district in which they enrol or of the district to which they are sent, whichever is the higher. Travelling fares will be paid from their homes to their place of employment and back again, and they will be provided with free accommodaiton or paid an equivalent allowance.

Enrolment will take place at the Labour Exchanges, where all particulars may be obtained.

WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR.

"Hard," say you? Mayhap 'tis so!
But I have ever found that straight
And narrow way the virtuous go
More difficult by far. For fate
Has made that pathway steep and bare;
The flowers that grow thereon are prim,
And 'neath the blossoms is a snare
To catch the eager hand of him
Who plucks, and lead him from the walk
That has no turns, no swift surprise.
There no delicious dangers stalk;
Thereon one plods, until one dies,
Along a road whose end one sees
From any point upon the way.
I long to try those paths that tease
My fancy, with their twists and gay
Bright patches, here and there,
Alluring me to come—explore
Their half-veiled beauties! Tho' I dare
Not go, I hate to stay, and, more
And more, I halt, or slow
My steps, and then I plod along
The cold, straight way the virtuous go,
Hearing, in heart and voice, no song!

A SOFT LIE.

The following story is told by a buyer for one of the most exclusive furnishing firms: A young workman, says the Daily Express, entered the showrooms of one of the firm's branches and asked to see a double bedstead—"a soft elegant bed" for himself and "old woman." After inspecting, sitting and lying on a large number of beds, the salesman wearily inquired if he would prefer two beds to stand side by side. Twin beds of various styles were critically reviewed. Finally the customer spied two exquisitely wrought brass bedsteads. "What about them beds?" "Those are exhibition beds made for the ——— Exhibition," was the reply. "They are priced at 84 guineas." "I'll have them," said the mechanic, and he paid for them on the spot with greasy banknotes. The beds were duly delivered and set up in his little five-shilling-a-week cottage.

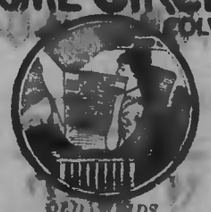
The HOME CIRCLE
EDITED BY COLVAN



This department, as a rule, is devoted to comforting, cheering and helpful words to mothers who weekly welcome it to their homes. This week we will digress and say a few charming words for a class of women second only to mothers in noble deeds. This community is not overstocked in what is commonly called "old maids" and the few we have are prize winners in their class. Mary Ashton Rice Livermore, one of our most gifted writers, has truly said that all through the land—in homes and outside of them, I find these women, unwedded; in the vulgar parlance of everyday speech, called "old maids" with a shrug of the shoulders and a light dash of scorn; in the finer language of sociologists and essayists, denominated "superfluous women. They have been brave enough to elect to walk through life alone when some man has asked them in marriage whom they could not love. With white lips they have said "no" while their hearts have said "yes," because duty demanded of them the sacrifice of their own happiness. Their lives have been stepping stones for the advancement of younger sisters; they have earned the money to carry brothers through college into professions; like the caryatides of architecture they stand in their places and uphold the roof over a dependent household; they invert the order of nature and become mothers for the aged childish parents, fathers, and mothers, whose failing feet they guide gently down the hills of life, and whose withered hands they lay and by fold beneath the daisies. They carry words of cheer and a world of comfort to households invaded by trouble, sickness or death. The dusty years stretch far behind them; beauty and comeliness drop away from them and they are faded and careworn. They become nobodies to the hurrying, rustling, bustling world, and by and by they slip out into the gloom—the shadow will veil them forever from earthly sight—the great surprise of joyful greeting will welcome them, and they will thrill to the embrace of the heavenly Bridegroom. Ah! Stewart, who from your one hundred million dollars of earthly treasure have given one million dollars to the working women in a pleasant home! Peabody, whose gifts of libraries, institutes and educational funds were princely! Ah! Vanderbilt and Drew, who put milions into endowments of schools and colleges—those poor women have given and are giving more than ye all. For out of your abundance ye have given but little and these superfluous women have given their all—themselves with their loving hearts, with their possibilities of happiness, with their dreams of the future! Ah, three-starred Grant and Sherman, not so heroic was your march through the fearful, bristling Wilderness, and from Atlanta to the sea, as is the lonely passage of this life made by an unmated woman whose desolate celibate life serves to point a jest or add cynical pleasantry to a story. Ye were stimulated by the cheers and prayers of a nation while the woman went through the hot shot of ridicule and satire.

We look into the future and see sons, great men, physicians, lawyers, scientists, authors, rich and honored, but we should be content to dwell with them in the present, gathering the sweets as they come, teaching them to be pure and honest, and praying for the future that they may be good men and true, whether they be wealthy and famous or not.

THE CHEERFUL WOMAN.

There are emergencies in every household which call for the display of a statesman's skill. The cheerful woman is pre-eminent on such occasions. She conquers the grim uncle or the dyspeptic cousin with her infective cheerfulness, and her servants recognize her as their friend and ally in all matters that are essential to their welfare. The length of time she keeps her servants is a source of wonderment to her less fortunate friends, but the secret of it is her own winsome disposition. She soothes the tired worker with a word of kind commendation where another might make a querulous complaint. When direction is needed she delivers it in such a gentle, albeit firm manner that it has no sting or reproof.

This gentle, tactful woman is not afflicted with work that is from "sun to sun," or that is "never done." She does not moralize much perhaps, but by some means she manages to accomplish a great deal of work, and have plenty of time at her command. It is by means of that same cheerfulness of disposition. There is less delay in executing her commands, and she possesses the gift of "timing her turns," so that sometimes it seems as if the "fairies did help her." And the fairies of gentle breeding and of kind heart do help her.

Everybody welcomes a smiling face. All doors are welcome to it; all social circles welcome it. It is an open sesame to heart and home. By it burdens are lightened, cares dispelled, sorrows banished, and hope made to reign triumphant where fear, doubt and despondency held high carnival.

SUCH EXTRAVAGANCE.

A man who had consulted a doctor about a deranged digestion was ordered to give up drinking spirits. "But, doctor," he protested, "I can't—I get so thirsty." "Then," replied the doctor, "whenever you feel thirsty, eat an apple instead of drinking whisky." The patient paid his fee and then departed. Later he was talking it over with a friend. "All nonsense, I call it," he complained. "Fancy eating thirty apples in a day!"

DIVISION COURT COLLECTIONS

If a man has to collect by law a debt of $5 in Ontario, he goes to the Division Court. It's the cheapest thing there is.

The first thing he has to do at the Division Court is to make a preliminary deposit of $2.50 to cover costs.

This entitles him to the issue of a summons, or notice to the alleged debtor to pay up, or appear at court and defend himself. But this summons must be served by a Division Court bailiff, who costs money.

If the alleged debtor fights the case, there is liable to be considerable more costs; but such cost of course can't be helped.

If the alleged debtor makes no defence, the court records a judgment against him for both debt and costs. If he pays, allright. The creditor gets off without expense unless he may have happened to engage a lawyer.

But if the debtor does not pay when notified of the judgment, a writ is issued. This is handed to a bailiff, who goes to take possession of the debtor's available assets. If the debtor doesn't happen to have any seizable goods, the creditor loses:

1. The deposit of $2.50 originally made with the court.
2. Any additional bailiff's fees beyond the execution of the writ.
3. All legal fees.

As a creditor generally acts through a lawyer, it may sometimes cost $10 to collect or attempt to collect a $5 debt.

Contract this with the Manitoba condition, where a creditor can sue for any debt up to $100 at a cost of 50 cents.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Man Hater

How She Was Converted From Her Antagonism

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

There are all sorts of persons in the world, both men and women. Those who have an abnormal development of some kind are usually called cranks. Miss Clara Bedford was one of these. There was no ism too radical for her. One of her idiosyncrasies was antagonism to man. Man had kept woman under his heel for centuries, making her what she is, or, rather, what she was, for, thank heaven, she is now every day asserting herself.

"How about children?" she was asked. "There must be fathers as well as mothers. If women hate men, where will the babies come in?"

Miss Bedford had no reply for this. Unreasonable persons don't seem to need a reply to questions that tumble their theories about their heads; their confidence in what they believe is not a whit lessened from the want of reason. They go right on just as if they had an answer and a perfectly satisfactory one.

Nevertheless, Miss Bedford was a very human being. Down in the bottom of her heart she loved an imaginary man and yearned for a child.

However, acting upon her prejudices, she arranged for her summer to get away from men. She was wealthy and bought a tract of land in New Hampshire upon which she built a cottage. There she went with servants and a few companions of her own sex, resolved that if any man trespassed on her property she would call upon the law to eject him.

She used to get up in the morning early and take long walks. One morning on one of these walks she saw on the border of her domain a tent. What was worse than the tent was a man walking away from it. Miss Bedford started at once for the trespasser, but before she reached him he had disappeared among the trees. Reaching the tent, she pulled back the canvas in front and peeped in.

What was her astonishment to see lying on a bed of boughs a child—a little girl about two years old—asleep. One chubby arm was thrown back upon the pillow—for there was some bedding—the other was under the cover. The fine hair was tumbled, the cheeks were round and rosy, in the chin was a dimple. The lips were parted and showed a few little white teeth set in pink gums.

Miss Bedford went into the tent and approached the sleeping child. The cover at the foot of the bed was disarranged and showed five little toes. Miss Bedford could not resist a temptation to take them in her fingers. The child gave a little kick, opened its eyes and frowned at the trespasser. Then, its brow smoothing, it said:

"Mamma."

Miss Bedford bent over the little girl, who put out both arms to be taken up. She lifted the infantile burden of flesh from the rude couch, kissing it as she did so, and, pulling its clothes about it, took a wicker chair the only article in the tent on which to sit, and hugged the baby to her breast.

"Dindin," said the little one.

"Dindin," repeated Miss Bedford. "How am I to get you, dear little child, any dindin?" She looked about her and went on, "There's nothing here for a grown person to eat, much less for a child." There were a cup and a saucer and a spoon, but not a morsel to eat.

"Dindin," repeated the child.

"I'd like to know where that horrid man is who left you here to starve," said Miss Bedford.

"I am here," said a voice, and a man, with a cup of milk in his hand, threw back the tent flap. Miss Bedford saw that he had gone for the baby's breakfast and forgave him.

"Where did you get the milk?" she asked.

"From one of your cows. I presume you are the owner of the cow I milked."

The man poured the milk into another cup and without a word went away. While he was gone Miss Bedford gave the little girl milk to drink, which, being warm from the cow, did not need to be heated. As she sat holding the white milk to the vermilion lips she was wondering how the man came to bring a baby on to her property and feed it with milk from her cows. Had it not been for the innocent little baby she might have upbraided him, though he wore a sad countenance. She remembered her principles and resolved to give him a piece of her mind as soon as he returned.

But by this time the child had drank the milk and was ready for more.

"Is there not a morsel of bread in the tent?" asked Miss Bedford.

"Not a crust," replied the man sadly.

"Go to my house and tell the cook to give you some of the cereal she is preparing for breakfast and such other food as she can find that will do for a baby's food."

"You are very kind. I am surprised. I was told that you would permit no trespassing on your property, so I did not camp on it. I am just beyond your border."

"What do you mean by keeping this child in a tent with nothing to eat except what you can get by foraging?"

"Poverty," was the laconic reply.

"Where is the child's mother?"

"Dead."

"What are you going to do?"

"God knows."

There was something woeful in the words.

"I think," Miss Bedford went on, "that you had better let me take the baby to my house."

A tender cord was touched in Miss Bedford's breast. She forgot her notion of hating all men in this union of a living man with a dead woman, cemented by their child. She said in a kindly voice:

"It need be only a temporary sojourn if you prefer it, till you can make other provision. You can come if you like. Have you had a breakfast?"

"No."

"Do you know where to get one?"

"No."

"I can give you one."

"You are very kind, but I can manage without your help, I think. The baby"—

"Yes, the baby. You will not let your pride stand in the way of your baby. Certainly you will carry her to my home."

"Of course."

He took the child from her arms and together they started for the house. On the way he gave her a brief explanation of the situation. He was an artist and, like most artists who have not made a name, very poor. Not being able to keep up a home, he and his wife and their child started on a sketching tour, camping here and there, the husband painting landscapes. The wife had died, and the husband, not having any other abode, stuck to his tent. It was a pathetic story, and Miss Bedford's horror for man—at any rate this particular man—melted before it. When they reached the house she said to him:

"It is in your power to do me a kindness. Sit down to the same breakfast table with me and your child. I shall enjoy every mouthful you eat more than you can conceive."

He gave in to this way of putting it. Miss Bedford placed herself between him and his child, and it is questionable which she the most enjoyed helping, the man or the child. He had managed to get the simple food required for his little girl. For her he would take what did not belong to him or accept it from strangers, but not for himself. He was very hungry and ate a great deal, his hostess pressing him to do so. After he had finished she said to him:

"You have done me one favor; now I wish you to do me another. Leave the child here with me while you make your sketches. You are welcome to come here to see her whenever you like, and you may feel privileged to take her away when you can provide for her."

The artist could scarcely conceal the relief this offer brought him. "Since I have only a tent for her," he said, "I have no right to deprive her of the comfort you can give her."

"And you have no right to deprive me of the happiness I shall have in taking care of her."

An hour later the artist kissed his child and took his departure. The tent disappeared, and nothing was seen of man or tent for several weeks. Then he came to Miss Bedford's home with a number of sketches. One of them, a water vista, the original being on her own ground, Miss Bedford very much fancied. She offered the artist a good price for it. He declined it on the ground that through charity she would pay him more than it was worth. But when she proposed that he should send it to a dealer in New York to fix its value he accepted the proposition. Miss Bedford privately wrote the dealer to fix a price she named herself, and this she paid the artist.

Now and again he came in from his sketching tours to see his child, and every time he came he offered to relieve Miss Bedford of her charge. She invariably declined to be relieved unless he insisted on his right to take his baby to himself, and the longer the removal was put off the more difficult it would be for Miss Bedford to give up the child. But the father would not accept of the lady's hospitality, and this made it awkward. If he would have made his headquarters at the house when not out painting it would have been much pleasanter, for the child was constantly fretting for him.

Finally when he began to get some return for his pictures Miss Bedford proposed that if he would make her house his lodging place when not out sketching she would permit him to pay a nominal board. After much haggling as to the amount, the lady declaring what he proposed to pay nothing less than robbing him, a compromise was made, and for the rest of the summer a room in a wing of the house was at his disposal whenever he chose to use it.

The truth is nature was working in Miss Bedford, the artist and the little girl to make the three one. They were becoming necessary to one another, and a time arrived when the woman found it out. One would suppose that her antipathy to men in general would have at least troubled her at finding herself in a position to succumb. But it did not. The child stepped in to render that a thing of the past. One day when Miss Bedford was on one side of the baby's crib and the father on the other, he trying to unwind the little one's arms from his neck that he might go forth to sketch, Miss Bedford said:

"There's no use in our making ourselves uncomfortable and troubling the child any longer. You won't propose to me, that I know. 'If the mountain will not go to Mohammed, Mohammed must go to the mountain.' You can marry me whenever you like."

After that when he went on sketching tours he usually took his wife and the child with him.

The Modern War Horse

The enormous number and variety of automobiles used in the present war and the great variety of other conveyances have thrown the horse very much into the dark. We are very likely to think that the present war has reached such a stage of development that horses are of a very minor consideration, being used hardly at all. That is far from the fact. To every army corps are attached thousands of horses, and it is certain that more than one and a half million horses are continually in use by all armies now in the field. So important is the horse that any serious epidemic among the horses of one army could readily spell defeat for that army and victory for its enemy. It is no wonder then that elaborate hospitals are provided for them, just as for the fighting men. These are in charge of highly experienced veterinary surgeons with assistant surgeons, nurses and attendants. Every horse received at a horse hospital is critically examined and sent to the particular ward set aside for similar cases. At the head of each stall is a record board on which are entered all items about that particular case, much as in any city hospital. The patients are carefully and scientifically attended and cured as rapidly as possible, many thousands being continually returned to the ranks. Every patient is examined every three weeks for glanders, and those showing symptoms are immediately killed. Other incurable diseases are also killed. In cases where the horse is cured, but not strong enough for war service, it is sold to a farmer at a fair price. Many cases of extensive operations are performed and the horse cured and sent back to the front. Besides preventing disastrous epedemics and having an enormous wastage by deaths, the horse hospitals of the present war are teaching invaluable lessons and giving wonderful experience to a whole army of veterinaries, available for peace work.

HUSBAND SCORED FOR NOT KEEPING WIFE IN CONTROL

ROCHESTER, Sept. 25.—Should a husband give his wife her own way? This question, which sounds as though it might have appeared in a Dolly Dimples column of a newspaper addicted to answering all sorts of intimate questions, was propounded to a jury in Supreme court to-day when the separation action of Anna Thelma Collett against Francis Walter Collett came to trial. Mrs. Collett charges her husband with many acts of alleged cruelty and he brings a counter suit in which he asks for a divorce on the only grounds possible in this state. It is the counter-suit which is being tried first. Should he win, the separation suit is quashed but if he loses then the wife's charges will be tried.

Mrs. Collett is accused by her husband of misconduct on motorcycle trips to Cleveland, Oneida Castle and Buffalo. William J. Baker, who is her attorney, told the jury that the husband is responsible for his wife's actions, because he failed absolutely to govern her, letting her do exactly as she pleased. Mr. Baker said that the girl wife was taken from a home where she had been under a father's strict discipline and had gone to her husband's home where she was entirely undisciplined and that if she did indiscreet acts, it was the fault of the husband. Mr. Baker on behalf of his client, however, denied all charges made by the husband.

The morning session was taken up entirely with the testimony of a young woman, who was the companion of Mrs. Collett on the long motorcycle journeys. The girl, who is 19 years old, told her story quietly and gave no evidence of emotional strain, despite the character of her testimony. This afternoon she will submit to a cross-examination. Mr. Baker told the jury that this witness is testifying because she 'has her eye on Collett' and wants him to have his freedom. The young woman denied this aspiration imputed to her by counsel. The Colletts were married June 17, 1913, and separated July 3, 1916.

They lived first at 272 Campbell street and there, in the first, three months of their wedded life, the wife says her husband was cruel to her. Later they lived at 131 Wooden street where the cruelty is alleged to have continued. Since March, 1914, they have lived in the Riverdale apartments in Lake avenue. The wife is a striking beauty and busies herself during the testimony with making copious notes on a pad.

GOOD HEALTH TO THE SHERIFF

At Ayr Sheriff Court, Sheriff Substitute J. T. Robertson on the bench, an old soldier named John Higgins, pedlar, of no fixed residence, was charged with having stolen a pair of spectacles from a dwelling house in Kirkmichael Road, Crosshill, occupied by William Wilson. The accused pleaded guilty to taking the spectacles without intention. Sheriff Robertson—"What does that mean?" Accused—"I went into the house to get a pair of spectacles as my eyes were weak. I saw this pair lying handy, so I just took them." (Laughter.) Sheriff Robertson—"You are 71 years of age and an old soldier?" Accused—"Yes, sir. Never been in trouble for a case like this before." Sheriff Robertson—"What about other cases, then?" Accused—"Well, of course, I have had my little bits of trouble." (Laughter.) Sheriff Robertson—"I will let you off. Accused—"Thank you, sir. I wish you good health." (Laughter.)

MYSTERY SHIPS THAT ARE TRAPPING SUBS.

Mr. Alfred Noyes has given an extremely interesting description of the silent manner in which traps are laid for boats.

There is a tale in Devonshire that Sir Francis Drake has not merely listened for his drum during the last 300 years, but has also heard and answered it on more than one naval occasion. It was heard, as the men of the Brixham trawlers can testify, about a hundred years ago, when a little man, under the pseudonym of Nelson (for all Devonshire knows that Nelson was a reincarnation of Sir Francis) went sailing by to Trafalgar. It was only a little before the great naval action in the North Sea—perhaps the greatest British victory since Trafalgar—that word came from the Brixham trawlers again. They had "heard Drake's drum beat" and that the ghost of Sir Francis Sir John Jellicoe.

There is good reason why the trawlers should be aware of this first, for it is among the 3,000-old trawlers, drifters and other fishing crafts of the British auxiliary fleet that the seamen who broke the Armada would find themselves most at home to-day. Nothing is more striking as the conduct of this war than the way in which the British method of "slow and sure" has justified itself. It was done in silence and silence was one of the weapons. Submarines went out and never returned. Other submarines went out, perplexed against a mystery; and these, too, never returned; or returned in mysteriously diminishing numbers. Nothing was said about it till the destruction of the fiftieth was quietly celebrated at a small gathering in London; and then neutrals began to inquire, with a new note of curiosity, "What is England doing?"

We heard tales of steel nets—as vague as the results would have been, but for certain great preliminaries of which we never heard. To begin with, a body of men, larger than the United States army, was chosen from the longshore fishermen and trawler crews. They were gradually drilled, disciplined, and trained, and put into naval uniform. This force is now over 100,000 strong. They have tough sea dogs, of all ages, inured to all the ways of the sea, but not at all to any form of discipline. This in itself implies very great preliminaries, for the finished product is fit to man a battleship. The vague rumors that we heard in the earlier stages of the war led one to suppose that these nets might be used, perhaps in the English Channel and other narrow waters.

But I have seen traps a hundred miles long—traps that could shift their position and change their shape at a signal. I have actually seen the course of a German submarine—which thought itself undiscovered—marked from day to day on the chart at an English base.

On a few occasions the hunters have themselves been trapped. Three men, taken off a trawler by a submarine endured an eighty hours' nightmare under the sea that shattered the mind of one and left permanent traces on the other two. Periodically revolvers were put to their heads and they were ordered, on pain of death, to tell all they knew of our naval dispositions. On the third morning they heard guns going overhead and watched the Germans handing out shells to their own guns. Finally a torpedo was fired, and they heard it take effect. Then they emerged into the red wash of dawn and saw only the floating wreckage of the big ship that had been sunk, and, amongst the wreckage, a small boat.

A SMALL CAPTURE

On another occasion a neutral tank steamer was overhauled. She was believed to be carrying suspiciously large supplies to a suspiciously vague destination but was allowed to proceed for political reasons, and in the name of the freedom of the seas. Nevertheless, with innocent fishing boats dotting our waters at intervals of half a mile, and wireless telegraphy to help them, the sea has almost as many eyes and ears to-day as it has fishes, and at dusk a drifter rolled up to our neutral friend again.

"Begorra, it's twins!" said the gunner, training his twelve-pounder on to her; and twins it was. For, tucked close under either quarter, lay a German sumbarine, quietly being fed. Before they could submerge or bunk away, the crew of the drifter had boarded the neutral and had persuaded the submarines, with the help of a dozen revolvers, that they were prisoners of war.

THE POSITION REVERSED

The sinking of unarmed fishing boats was one of the favourite amusements of Fritz in the earlier stages of the ar. This suddenly ceased, except on rare occasions; and, for certain reasons, it is now an acknowledged fact that when a submarine sees one it submerges or bilts immediately.

Details must not be given, but these smaller fishing boats now form a class to themselves, and they are known among the other auxiliaries as "mystery ships."

Only one hint may be given here. There was once upon a time a simple fishing boat shooting her fishing nets for simple fish. A submarine appeared and gave her men "five minutes, you swine!" Immediately there was a panic, which had been part of their drill in port. Two of the crew went on their knees for mercy, and others hauled at the boat like men possessed. The resultant picture was this.

A dummy boat on deck in four pieces, and a fine big gun levelled straight at the submarine, attended by gunners of his Majesty's Navy, "like gods in poor disguise."

There were two Germans kneeling for mercy, and after they had scrambled into safety there was an abolished submarine and oil upon many troubled waters.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put us in the grave."

"EVEN IF 15,000 PERISH."

Fire-Eating Hun's Threat to a French Town.

The German terrorism in Northern France is illustrated by a letter from Commandant Schranck to the corporation and leading citizens of Halluin (north of Lille.) The workpeople of the town refused to work for the German army.

The Amsterdam Telegraaf publishes a threatening letter sent by the commandant saying: "The people's appeal to The Hague Convention cannot be gone into; it is a matter for the diplomats after the war. The German authorities' interpretation is at present alone valid. Everything needed for the maintenance of the German troops must be manufactured by the workpeople of the occupied region, and the German military authorities will not abate their demands and rights on any condition, even if a city of 15,000 inhabitants must perish."

Strength of The British Army

LONDON, Sept. 21.—Few civilians have had a more vivid glimpse of the fighting front of the British army than Mr. Alexander Watson, an elocutionist, who has just returned from a three months visit to France, spent among the men.

Describing what he had seen and heard, Mr. Watson had an interesting story to tell. "I've been along the front from Ypres to the Somme lines," he said, "and the strength and magnitude of the British army appeared to me overwhelming, its organization colossal. Everything is wonderful, down to the food, and I may say that often I had army rations which were far better than civilian food obtainable in many places.

"My visit was made under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, which has about two hundred huts and stations at and behind the front, some of them only a few hundred yards from the trenches. It was to meet these most advanced stations I went, and I gave recitals to men literally coming out of the trenches.

"I was sent directly from the base to the front, and, arriving at a small town in Flanders, had my first taste of shell fire. The Prussians suddenly started shelling the place, and for three days I was there, creeping out to give my recitals along a road which was directly under fire. Shells came unpleasantly near our car sometimes, but the sergeant who had charge of me was kind enough to report me as 'cool under fire.' The day after I left I heard that two shells had hit the very room in which I had spent most of my time."

Of the unique conditions under which his recitals were often given Mr. Watson quoted two striking instances.

"At one place I had an audience in a marquee erected on ground occupied by Prussians only a few weeks previous; in fact, I nearly fell into an old trench as I came out. From the door I could see a battery of guns at work, and further off a monster. The 'Tommies' were watching me to see how I took the firing, but I managed to keep composed and going. Onl yonce, when the 'grandmother' first went off, did I momentarily stop; but I said to the men, 'That wasn't a full stop, boys; only a comma.'

"Then there was another occasion when I had an audience, in complete darkness, in the courtyard of an old mansion, and I gave them Tennyson's 'Defence of Lucknow,' to the sound of our own guns—and the enemy's."

The appreciation by the men of the best literature quite surprised Mr. Watson. Shakespeare, Tennyson, Dickens, Longfellow, Mark Twain, Kipling and other masters delighted them, and they invariably asked for more. At one place Masefield's "The Everlasting Mercy" was specially requested, and while this was being recited there was a fight on overhead bettween a Taube and an English plane.

"But the men were more interested in Masefield," said Mr. Watson, "for not one of them went out to see the fight. I myself, by the way, witnessed a very thrilling aeroplane duel later on, and I also saw Prussian observation balloons destroyed by our airmen."

Two modern poems, Noyes' "Hich wayman" and Kipling's "Gunga Din," were often asked for by the men, and Mr. Watson was surprised to find that poems on battles and fighting were more popular than, as he had imagined, those which were far from the subject of war. "At one little gathering of Colonials in a hut, the heat was so intense, there being no ventilation, that after an hour I tried to finish. They wanted more, and I said it was too hot. 'Then take your coat off, laddie, and go at it,' was the answer.

"One last thing I should like to say," concluded Mr. Watson, "and that is to bear testimony to the serious spirit of our men and also to their amazing cheerfulness under every trial. I heard of a sergeant addressing as follows some men who had come out of a mine explosion more dead than alive for the moment:—'Now, then, you ——, pull yourselves together; many a time you've paid a bob to see a worse show than that.'

"The courage and cheerfulness of our wounded, too, are something to be very proud of."

OLD MAN FOR AN OFFICE BOY

A Broadway business man was talking to a friend who was looking for a good office boy. "Cut out the boys," he said, with confidence, "and get an old man who is willing to work for less than a man's wages. I began it about a year ago and I never did a better thing.

"I got the suggestion from a man not in business, but a physician. He had ordered some article or other which had not come promptly, and he came in person to see about it. I told him, which was true, that I had been bothered so by changing my office boys that I couldn't get it to him. Then he blew out at me and asked me why I didn't get an old man to do office work and I wouldn't have any more bother.

It looked so different at first that I laughed at him, but he insisted so that it was the only cure that I concluded I would try it. I knew of an old chap, honest and living with his son, doing small jobs and helping all he could for his keep, and I asked him how he would like to be office boy for me. He laughed just as I did at first, but I insisted on his trying it and he agreed to come and do the best he could, but wouldn't guarantee that he would be satisfactory.

"He came the next day and though he was a bit slow at first he was always ready and willing and in a week or so I was so well satisfied with him that I wouldn't have traded him for all the boys I have been bothered with for five years. He isn't perfect, nor is anybody for that matter, but he is reliable and honest, never soldiers on me, doesn't smoke cigarettes or read dime novels, isn't fresh around the store, is always polite and is always on time.

"I pay him $7 a week and he is glad enough to get it, and he isn't so old but that he is good for at least ten years of duty, which will also be ten years of comfort for me and my entire store. I don't say that any old man will be as satisfactory as this one, but I do say that nine-tenths of the old fellows will make better office boys than the average we have to put up with.

"Try an old man for an office boy and see if you can do any worse than you have been doing. Several of my friends are doing it and so far they are all pleased with the change."

WEAK, NERVOUS CHILDREN QUICKLY GAIN STRENGTH UNDER FOLLOWING PLAN

Nervousness, just like weakness, is a family predisposition. We inherit tendencies to disease just as we inherit physical resemblances. The strain of study, social duties, work at home — these all tend to make nervous troubles among children. No wonder that St. Vitus Dance, Epilepsy, and constant headaches have become alarmingly common. Pale, nervous, listless young people are met everywhere.

It is nothing short of criminal for parents to neglect signs of weakness in their children. By ignoring the slightest symptom of nervous or mental strain, you may condemn your child to life-long invalidism. If any member of your family complains of headaches, fear of going into dark places, give them that wonderful tonic, "Ferrozone." Strength of body and mind, hardy nerves, ability to study with comfort, all the attributes of health quickly follow the use of Ferrozone. It establishes strength, colour, endurance, vim — does this by filling the whole system with nourishment and tissue-forming materials.

It's because we know the enormous good that Ferrozone will do, because we are sure every child and even grown folks, will be permanently benefitted, that we urge you to give it a trial. All dealers sell Ferrozone -in 50c. boxes, six for $2.50, or direct by mail from The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

TOUCHY SHELL TO HANDLE.

Germans Fire Tubes of Sheet Steel Filled With Scrap.

Only air-guns could throw the shell without exploding it, and these new air-guns must be 10 inches in bore and many feet long. One of these big shells which fell in the British line unexploded has been taken apart by experts.

It was 10 inches in diameter and 15 inches high, made of sheet stell, with wooden plug discs at each end. This big steel can contained seventy-six pieces of scrap iron and 25 pounds of trinitro-toluol, and the whole missile weighed 51 pounds.

The firing of the big shell must have been touchy work. Imagine a "fire-cracker," 10 inches thick, that would blow a hole in the earth six feet deep and 10 feet in diameter.

Imagine yourself facing the duty of lighting the fuse of this 51-pound cracker, and then, while the fuse is splittering, placing the cracker in the mouth of a giant air-gun and firing off the gun in time to get the cracker out of your neighbourhood before it went off.

Gold and silver, brilliant, tarnished, soft and bright lustre, embroidered in gorgeous silks, on modest serges, on filmy laces, are more in evidence than ever in new winter materials. Wherever one looks in the shops there is the glitter of precious metals. It hits the eye and leaves an impression on the brain that everyone will be aglitter in this winter's garb. In fact, the robe for day, as well as evening, which has not some touch of shimmering brilliancy will not seem right.

Ruffles are not out of style yet. Scant ones are seen on serge, silk, and even velvet dresses. The only difference from last year is that the dresses with these frills do not stick out.

ENGLISH ORGANIZATION

Society Formed and Rules Drawn Up to Put an End to Mischievous Scandalmongering.

A young girl recently killed herself in an English village. The coroner's jury, however, brought in the verdict: "Killed by idle gossip." The girl had been guilty of nothing actualy wrong, but "the gossip disseminated by the women of the village blackened her name until she could bear the suspicious looks and spoken taunts no longer, and so she ended her life." The event caused an anti-gossip crusade, an account of which appears in Pearson's Weekly (London.)

"A society has been formed and rules drawn up. The entrance fee has been fixed at a nominal sum, because the society desired to embrace all classes, both rich and poor. Our richer women are just as adept at robbing others of their character as are the women of the working classes who chat with each other from their respective doorsteps.

Talk From Habit.

"The organizers are quite hopeful of minimizing the number of gossips, because they are convinced that the worst offenders talk scandal more from a matter of habit than through an really malicious desire to injure another.

"Members must take a vow to avoid either starting or spreading any unkind remarks about any one else, nor will they listen to a person who tries to tell them. To repeat what they have heard, even if known to be true, is equaly as bad as to set the ball rolling. For the first ten breaches of this law a fine is imposed, graduating from a shilling up to the maximum fine of ten shillings. After ten slips the women are to be blackballed as incurables.

"If we pick up and throw it at a fashionably dressed lady and spoil her clothes she can get redress through the law; no well-brought-up woman, however, ever dreams of throwing mud at her friends.

Does Great Harm.

"If, on the other hand, we imagine that she is too flighty in her behaviour, and, in order to strengthen our belief, we repeat all her trivial little indiscreet actions, we are flinging mud at her character, and she can get no redress unless it should happen to interfere with the earning of her livelihood, or can be proved a malicious act.

"Idle gossip does more harm than anything else in the world, and if the organizers of the anti-gossip crusade have only the perseverance and courage to make it universal they will do inestimable good for the general happiness of the community.

"Charity, like all else, should begin at home, and those who can not join the crusade should begin in their own family circle and resolve not even to think all of their friends, acquaintances, or those of whom they have little knowledge. When ugly tales are told them these should be immediately forgotten.

"Before making a statement about any one do not forget to let it pass the three golden gates: 'Is it true?' 'Is it needful?' and 'Is it kind?'

British Troops Capture Combles

BRILLIANT ALLIED SUCCESSES ON SOMME

Keystone Of The Somme Line Captured By Gen. Haig's Men

British Take 1500 Prisoners and More Are Being Brought In---Rancourt and Fiegecourt Captured By the French While British Troops in Addition to the Capture of Combles Have Also Taken the Villages of Norval and Les Boeup---Are Pressing On Towards Bapaume Now

FRENCH SCORE BIG WIN IN MACEDONIA

LONDON (Special Cable), September 26.—Combles, the key point of the whole German battle line from Bapaume to Peronne, has been captured by the British after eighteen hours of the most furious battling north of the Somme. General Haig this afternoon announced that British troops entered Combles, overcoming German resistance. The enemy's losses, the official report said, were severe.

The British victory, achieved after three weeks of desperate driving against the German centre, is the most striking single achievement of the whole Somme offensive. It removes one of the last two obstacles to an Anglo-French thrust to squeeze the Germans out of Peronne, one of two objectives of the great allied advance.

The capture of Combles followed a day and night of the most brilliant Allied successes, including the capture of the villages of Morval and Les Boeufs by the British, and Rancourt and Fregicourt by the French. In summing up the day's successful operations, General Haig reported that 1,500 Germans were captured by the British, and that more prisoners are being brought in. The work of listing the large supplies of war material also captured has not been completed. Combles fell after thrusts by both British and French in yesterday's fighting drew a noose about the German garrison which made their escape almost impossible. For weeks, the Germans had used the town, with its wonderful system of fortifications, as a pivot point from which to swing attacks north and south at the Allies' lines. The British not only gained this important victory, but pressed forward in their drive toward Bapaume. A strong redoubt between Les Boeufs and Guerdecout fell before the British attack.

The French also swept forward again last night carrying Fregicourt village, and later repulsing German attacks against positions won yesterday.

Berlin Admits The Successes of Allies

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, September 26.—The loss of several villages to the Allied forces under one of the most terrific attacks of the whole Somme offensive, was officially admitted this afternoon.

The statement says: "The Allied infantry after a four-day artillery duel launched a uniform attack between the Ancre and the Somme. Fighting commenced at noon and went on last night with the same fury. The successes obtained by the enemy east of Faucourt-L'Abbaye, and the conquest of villages on the line of Gaudecourt-Bouchavesnes must be recognized, but before all we must think of our heroic troops who face the united Anglo-French principal forces and massed employment of the whole world's war industry prepared for many months."

At other points, says the statement, French assaults failed.

The German official statement that the Allies have conquered villages on the line of Gaudecourt-Bouchavesnes is seemingly an admission that Combles has been captured by the Allies. The villages of Les Boeufs, Morval and Combles lies on the line indicated.

Brilliant French Successes Reported

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official Communique), September 26.—French troops captured the village of Fregicourt, a little more than a mile east northeast of Combles, last night, closing still further the Anglo-French noose about the German garrison of Combles. The War Office also announced to-day that the French advance guards penetrated the Combles cemetery, while others reached the southern edge of Combles.

Southwest of Combles, a German trench was captured. The capture of Fregicourt was accomplished with scarcely any lull in the great battle that began yesterday when the British and French advanced simultaneously on a twelve-mile front. A storming attack last night swept the Germans out of Fregicourt. Southeast of Combles the French spent last night consolidating positions won in yesterday's attack. German attacks between the Bethune Road and the Somme were repulsed and 800 prisoners taken.

The Teutons made a violent attack on the northeastern front of Verdun at nine o'clock last night on the sector between Thiaumont and Fleury. The assault was stopped short by a French curtain of fire, the Germans losing heavily.

THE NEW WAR LOAN IS DOUBLY SUBSCRIBED

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, September 26.—The new Canadian war loan has been doubly subscribed. A hundred million dollars was asked for. Over two hundred million dollars has been subscribed. This gratifying intelligence was imparted with justifiable pride by Finance Minister White this morning.

This makes $300,000,000 raised in Canada by the two flotations of this and last year. Numerous congratulatory messages have been received by Sir Thos. White.

NEW SYSTEM OF RECRUITING IS TO BE INAUGURATED

Details of National Service Board Are Defined---Not Under the Control of the Militia Department--All Labour Will Be Utilized---To-day's General Military News.

OTTAWA, Sept. 25. — The scope of the new recruiting organiation, to be known as the National Service, is set down in the terms of a new order-in-Council passed as a result of conferences between the Government and the Director-General, Sir Thomas Tait.

The National Service directors and such boards as are appointed in the various military districts will work under the supervision of the Prime Minister, and not under the Militia Department.

The powers set out in the original order-in-Council passed in August are widened in the new order, which provides as follows:

The powers and duties of a director shall be as follows: To make himself acquainted with the nature and importance of the various industries (agricultural, manufacturing, mining, lumbering, fishing and others) which are being carried on in any locality within his district. For the purpose of obtaining necessary information respecting conditions of industry and of employment from time to time, the directors or the board, as the case may be, shall confer with and receive communications from persons engaged in the industries hereinbefore mentioned and from any organisation especially interested, such as agricultural societies, labour organizations and manufacturers' associations.

To Utilize All Labour.

For the purpose of maintaining and carrying on all important industries and of affording to the greatest possible number of men the opportunity of military service, to take such measures as may be expedient to have all available labour in the Dominion utilized to the greatest advantage and with that view to make an estimate of such available labour. For the like purpose to arrange, as far as possible, for the employment of women in work within their capacity where additional labour is necessary.

For the purpose of securing the largest available military forces in the present war, to co-operate with and to afford all possible information to the military authorities engaged in recruiting within his district.

To take into consideration the character and the importance of the employment in which any persons proposed to be recruited may be engaged and to notify the commanding officer of any unit which is being recruited in any such locality whether the service of such persons would be of more value to the state in the employment in which they are then engaged than if such person were enlisted for active service in the military forces of Canada.

In case the director determines that the services of any person are of more value to the state in the employment in which he is then engaged such person shall not be enlisted in the military forces of Canada without the written authority of the Director-General.

The officer commanding any unit which is being recruited in any such locality may appeal through the regular channel from the decision of the director to the Director-General, whose decision shall be final.

The Governor-in-Council may at the instance of the Director-General appoint a national service board or boards in any military district. Each board shall be composed of three persons, of whom the director may be one, and the director, if a member, shall be chairman ex-officio. The order-in-Council appointing such board may invest the board with all or any of the powers and duties which otherwise would be invested in the director, or with any additional powers.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Col. Glass, of the 252ndnd Battalion, expects to be able to announce the personnel of his staff some day this week. In this connection it is worth knowing that the O. C. cannot by regulations appoint his own paymaster or quartermaster, although he may recommend them for office. It is compulsory that these officers be appointed at headquarters and also that the paymaster take a six-weeks' course at the head pay office so as to thoroughly familiarize himself with his new duties.

The O. C. of the 252nd is also forbidden to take on more officers than he has men for; that is there will be no surplus number of officers drawing pay for doing comparatively nothing. Officers will only be attached when there are sufficient number of men in the battalion.

It is also important to note that officers wearing the King's uniform, but who are not attached to any company in a battalion are liable to arrest and to a heavy penalty.

Col. Glass has had over 35 applications for the office of paymaster and quartermaster.

In Camp Orders issued by Brig.-Gen. T. D. R. Hemming, Camp Commandant, on Saturday, the following notice appears:

"The attention of officers commanding battalions is drawn to an article in the local paper, the British Whig, of the 22nd instant, relative to the circumstances under which a private of one of the local battalions was sentenced to one year in jail for desertion. The attention of men generally, should be called to the heavy

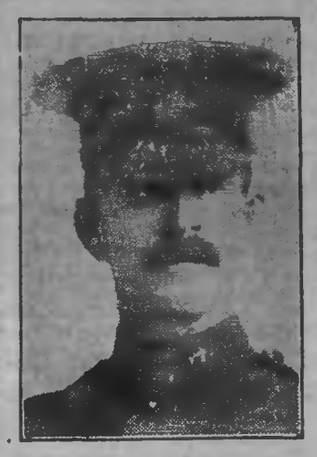
ANOTHER ZEPPELIN RAID ON ENGLAND



MAJOR G. W. ANDERSON, formerly of North Monaghan, and brother of Mr. Wm. B. Anderson, who is officially reported wounded. Major Anderson, who was for some time an officer in the 57th Regiment, has been living in Prince Albert, and went overseas with the 53rd Battalion.

Six Zepps Visit the North-eastern and Southern Counties—Bombs Dropped on Several Places.

TO ATTACK BERLIN

LONDON, Sept. 26.—Another Zeppelin raid on the east coast of England occurred to-night. The following official statement was issued at midnight by Sir John French:

"Several hostile airships crossed the east and north-east coasts of England between 10.30 o'clock and midnight last night," says an official communication issued shortly after midnight.

"Bombs are reported to have been dropped at several places in northern and north Midland counties.

"An airship is also reported off the south coast.

"No reports of casualties or damage have been received."

Later the following statement concerning the air raid was made public:

"Several hostile airships—probably six— visited the north-eastern and southern counties during the night. Bombs were dropped in the northern counties and some casualties and damage are reported.

"Full reports have not yet been received."

TO ATTACK BERLIN

In the attacks on the Somme the past two days it is reported the French employed for the first time a new type of aeroplane, which is capable of flying almost 1,000 miles. It is declared in Paris that these machines, which are being turned out in great numbers, probably will be employed soon in an air raid on Berlin in reprisal for attacks on open towns in France.

The Amsterdam Telegraaf says that 40 Germans were killed or injured in the British air raid on St. Denis Westrem, Belgium, on Friday. Two sheds and three aeroplanes were burned.

BERLIN STUNNED.

A news agency despatch from Geneva says:

Loss of the two Zeppelins in Saturday night's raid on England has stunned the Berlin public, Swiss correspondents in the German capital telegraphed to-day.

No recent reverse on the battlefield has had such a depressing effect on the German people, the correspondents reported.

The official statement regarding the air raid on England, issued to-day, reads:

"On the night of September 23 and 24 several squadrons of naval airships extensively bombed London and places of military importance on the Humber and in the middle counties of England, among which were Nottingham and Sheffield. Success everywhere was visible from the heavy conflagrations which could be seen for a long while.

"The airships when approaching England and before crossing the English coast were shelled by patrol boats and during the attack by defensive batteries, which used incendiary projectiles. The airships silenced some batteries by well directed volleys. Two airships fell victims to the defensive fire around London. All the others returned undamaged."

Regarding the German official report on the Zeppelin raid, the Official Press Bureau to-day states:

"In addition to the fact that no anti-aircraft defences for places of military importance were damaged, this account is full of the usual misstatements."

ONLY A QUESTION OF TIME NOW IS AMERICAN VIEW

Germany is Defeated and There is No Longer Any Question as to the Ultimate Outcome of the Conflict, Says New York Tribune

HAVE HAD THEIR CHANCE

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, Sept 26.—The Tribune in its leading editorial under the heading "Defeated Germany" says:

As we approach the end of the third campaigning period of the great war, one fact stands out clear beyond all cavil. There is no longer any question in the minds of any but the most pronounced of Germany's sympathizers as to the ultimate outcome of the conflict. It is patent to the least trained military eye that Germany is beaten. Germany has had her chance and she has not won. She did not succeed in crushing unprepared enemies possessing inferior numbers of trained troops when she chose to strike. Now numbers preparation, everything has turned against her. It is only a question of time.

TEACH THE FOREIGNER.

A hair-splitting member of the School Board of Toronto objects to teaching foreigners in the city night schools because many of them are not taxpayers. His objection is not well taken. We daily teach children in our schools who are not themselves taxpayers because we improve the quality of the citizenship they represent when they grow up. In one sense, foreigners who seek a home with us are children, and we shall make better citizens of them more quickly, assimilate them into our citizenship if we help them to become educated in Canadian language and learning, and in Canadian ways and manners. One of the greatest of our national problems is to mould over, assimilate and incorporate into the body of our citizenship, the foreigner who comes to the country—to make him one of us in mind and spirit and ambition. The first step is to get him to read our language and literature; and this is a step to getting him to think our thoughts and adopt our ways. He will thus not only become a taxpayer—which some seem to think is the chief end and aim of civilization—but an intelligent, useful and loyal citizen.

AFTER THE WAR.

A group of Toronto ladies is heading a movement to erect a monument to Edith Cavell, the Hun-murdered nurse, by erecting a $100,000 nurses' home for the Western Hospital. Nothing in the way of a monument or recognition of the angelic work of Edith Cavell can be too good for her. We may do our best in this way and yet not do nearly enough. But is the present a proper time to launch such an enterprise as a monument, which has nothing of a national character? The nurses of the Western Hospital need and deserve a home, and a good one; but a civic hospital, one of hundreds similar in Canada, does not seem to be in these days of peril and sacrifice, justified in dragging itself into invidious importance by taking advantage of public sentiment to achieve a local object. Edith Cavell deserves a monument, and no more fitting form than a nurses' home could be thought of. The time chosen to make appeal to public generosity is, however, not well chosen. There is plenty of time in the future to raise monuments to Edith Cavell. Her memory will be immortal anyway, and we might wait till the war is over—wait till far more presently urgent appeals for war work and war giving are satisfied. Our first business is to win this war; and all our means and powers are called upon now. The needs of the soldiers in the battle field, and hospitals are presently urgent. We should be more concerned for the comfort, and consequently, efficiency, of our nurses in the war zone, who, under difficulties, are doing the noble work of tending our wounded soldiers, than we should be for home nurses who can do without a house till we have adequately cared for our war-nurses and our wounded soldiers, and meet the hundred other demands upon our purses, to help win the great fight for humanity. When the war is over, by all means erect a monument to Edith Cavell, but not at a time and under accompanying conditions, that might imperil the very interests for which she did such noble service. If she could speak to us and express her feelings in the matter, there is no doubt that she would deprecate the erection of a monument to herself at a time when the means and efforts of the people should be concentrated upon the multitudinous demands of the war.

THE PRICE OF NEWSPAPERS.

The cost of living constantly climbs. All the necessaries of life, food and clothing, etc, rise. The people face and meet these advances with more or less philosophical recognition. The price of everything has risen, except that of a prime modern necessity, the newspaper. If newspapers are to make ends meet they must in some way economise, use less paper or print smaller papers. The cost of everything that enters into the making of a newspaper has advanced and already some papers as in Brantford have advanced their rates for subscription. Western papers, faced with a shortage of print paper, have joined together to economise in the most thorough manner. If butter mounts in price and bread and other things also, the dealers cannot put their finger on the cause. But if newspapers have to advance rates, the cause is open and above board. The expense of publication—war news telegraph tolls, illustrations, etc., while not advanced in price constitute an added expense due to war conditions and these things added to the enhanced cost of material, justify publishers in seriously considering some slight increase to make up for the greatly increased expense.

SPARE THE BENCH.

One could as easily fancy the sun rising in the west as to imagine a British Cabinet Minister making the disgraceful scene made by "Hon." Robert Rogers, minister of Public Works in the Borden cabinet, in a Manitoba Court of Justice, when he assailed a judge on the bench and accused him of accepting "graft" when he accepted a honorarium for his services. The judiciary of Canada has always her own boast and pride, on account of its high character, and the deserved popular respect paid to it. At times a disappointed litigant, who felt that he had not received justice might grumble, but he took mighty good care to do his grumbling in private; sometimes a degenerate newspaper might inveigh against a judge, but never before did a minister of the crown so forget the dignity of his own office, the dignity of the bench, as to copy the attitude and action and manner of a moral degenerate by publicly berating a judge to his face. If Mr. Justice Galt as a commissioner had no legitimate claim to payment for his services there was a regular and proper and dignified way to deal with such a fact. There was evil in the fact of Hon. Mr. Roger's action; and their was the added evil of an evil example, which was not slow to be followed. Two newspapers in sympathy with the offender, repeated and amplified the attack upon, and insult to, the bench. Wickedness in high places finds easy followers. Whatever we do we must protect the dignity of, and the reverence for, the bench.

THE NEW LOAN—A WARNING.

Sir Thomas White announces that the new Government loan has been largely over-suscribed, the indications being that there will be at least $80,000,000 over and above the $100,000,000 asked for. Let us hope that there will be no such discreditable exhibition in connection with this loan as there was on the last occasion, when a loan of $50,000,000 was floated, and the whole of the $100,000,000 which was subscribed was seized and kept by the Government. The Government owes it to the public to exercise the same honesty in financial transactions as would be exercised in private business undertakings. To say "We want $50,000,000 for a certain purpose," and then, when an extra $50,000,000 is suscribed to remark, "We can spend the whole of that, too," and proceed to do so, is not honest.

Canadians generally will be proud of the success of the new loan. It is an evidence both of the financial stability of the country, and of the wholehearted determination of the Canadian people to see the war through to its logical finish. We hope that neither Sir Thomas White nor his fellow-members in the Government will see it in any other light. There have been various signs that some, at any rate, of the members of the Government are making the mistake of imagining that the whole-hearted manner in which the people are supporting war measures is more a tribute to the genius of the Ministers than an expression of single-minded patriotism. It would be regrettable if a similar mistake were made over the success of the new loan, and the extra $80,000,000 taken as a mandate from the people to scatter the nation's wealth around wholesale, regardless of to-morrow.—Montreal Herald.

DUST IN THE EYES.

Hon. Robert Rogers has simply made a desparate effort to change the subject. Instead of having the whole country talking about what he had done with the public money of Manitoba, he chose to set the whole country talking about what he had to say about the judges of the land. He wanted to kick up a row any kind of a row not caring how many of his friends he left in jail so that under cover of the racket he could slip back to Ottawa, and get into his entrenchments there.—Toronto Star.

A commission of 21 church dignitaries has recommended a change in the wording of the marriage ceremony of the Protestant Episcopal church, from "Love, honor and obey," to "Love, honor and keep."

Three Tactical Blunders Made In Government War Management

Much as the people all over Canada must regret the failure of the French-Canadians of Quebec to join as heartily as they should have done with the rest of us in waging this war in defence of democracy against the military autocracy of Germany, yet nobody can look over the events of the first two years of the war without perceiving that Canada, as officially represented by the Dominion Government has shown a marked lack of statesmanship in this connection—in failing even to try to interest Quebec along with the other Provinces in prosecuting the war.

The Ottawa Government seems to have yielded right from the first to the expectation that Quebec would hang back and help little in the war, and so little or no effort was made to interest or arouse that Province.

The Borden Government found itself in office when this greatest of all wars came upon the world. The Borden Cabinet became the War Ministry. People everywhere became conscious of the littleness of party differences in the presence of the colossal issue of the war. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had been for sixteen years Prime Minister of Canada. He still was political leader of half the population of the Dominion. More than that, he was and had long been the most distinguished man of the French-Canadian race, which forms at least one-fourth of the population of the country. Yet when this tremendous war came upon us the Ministry of the day went right along in its routine course, making no changes in a Cabinet that had been tossed together by the accidents of local and domestic politics, and not inviting any co-operation from—even rebuffing the friendly overtures of—the man who was at one and the same time political leader of half the population of the Dominion and the foremost French-Canadian of his generation. The course of the Borden Ministry in this was not politic, and it was a course followed by men who failed to realize the seriousness of the days they were living in and the responsibilities resting upon them. They saw in Sir Wilfrid Laurier only a political opponent, and they had the opportunity—and they took it—of excluding him from any participation, except in the most private way, in the great events of these times. The greatest French-Canadian of his generation was not called into conference at all in the great crisis of the country's history.

Perhaps, at first, here as in England, party feeling would account for the holding apart of political leaders who had long been engaged in hot controversy, but here, as in England, after a year had gone by and the seriousness of the war was known to all there should have been a realization by the Government at Ottawa of the need for calling together the leaders of the people, in an advisory capacity, if not in a coalition Ministry.

Another mistake was made in the case of Major-Gen. Lessard, C. B. When the war broke out and when it was desirable that Quebec should rally to the conflict along with Ontario and the other Provinces, the Government might well have considered it a fortunate circumstance that the foremost soldier in Canada, the senior general in the permanent force happened to be Gen. Lessard, a French-Canadian. Much might have been made of that fortunate circumstance. If Gen. Lessard had been given at the outset of the war the high command to which his seniority his ability, experience and great popularity with the forces entitled him to, something like enthusasm might have shown itself among French-Canadians called upon to follow this general and of their own. But Gen. Lessard, foremost of Canadian soldiers, was tossed aside because Sir Sam Hughes had some old score to settle with him, and politics had put Sir Sam in a position where he could settle all kinds of old scores.—Toronto Star.

MAN WHO BOMBED ESSEN IS FAMOUS AVIATOR

Before the War He Flew from Paris to Berlin and Cairo.

PARIS, Sept. 26.—Lieut. Henri Daucourt, who, in company with Captain DeBeauchamp, flew over Essen, dropping several bombs on the home of the Krupp works, as reported in the official communique, was famous long before the war broke out. Lieut. Daucourt was born at Troyes in 1879, and is one of the most celebrated long-distance fliers in France.

In April, 1913, Lieut. Daucourt flew from Paris to Berlin, and in the following October made a flight from Paris to Cairo by way of Constantinople. On his arrival at the Turkish capital he was congratulated by Talaat Bey, then Minister of War, who said: "In the name of the Government I salute the bold aviator who comes from the country representing intellect, scientific culture, enterprise and courage."

Lieut. Daucourt has been at the front since the beginning of the war. He has been commended in army orders several times. Capt. De Beauchamp has commanded a squadron on the eastern frontier since the outbreak of hostilities.

Beer Illegal At Barn Raising Under C.T.A.

STRATFORD, Sept. 26.—Holding that beer bought for and provided at a barn-raising in Canada temperance act territory is illegal, Justices of the Peace T. H. Beattie and James Dickson yesterday afternoon fined Mr. Joseph Taylor of Ellice township $50 and costs.

Mr. F. R. Blewett, K.C., counsel for defendant, intimated that the judgment will be appealed, on the ground that men and women assisting at a barn-raising are guests of the proprietor within the meaning of the act, and that therefore six kegs of beer purchased in Stratford and delivered to Mr. Taylor on his farm in Ellice were for "private use."

The case was opened ten days ago and adjourned until to-day to get further evidence.

Inspector R. T. Kemp, who laid the charge held that "beer" means illegal strength of that liquor, and that in this case there was a breach of the Canada Temperance Act. Purchase and delivery of the beer was clearly proven by the evidence of several witnesses. The seller, J. Colquhoun, local agents for the Kitchener Lion Brewery, had told Mr. Hanna, neighbor of Mr. Taylor's who bought the beer for the latter, that there was no illegality in taking it into a Canada Temperance Act county for the purpose for which it was intended.

The case is looked upon as a test one, and an appeal was anticipated no matter what verdict was given.

PAPER MONEY USED INSTEAD OF SILVER

Berlin Newspaper Correspondent Reports that Five Mark Pieces are Hardties.

LONDON, Sept. 25.—The Berlin correspondent of a Swedish financial journal Affearsvoerlden writes that the public is complaining that practically all the silver coins have disappeared from circulation among them, says the Stockholm correspondent of the Post here. Five mark pieces are now very seldom seen, and from this fact it is inferred that they have been replaced by paper money, which the public views with great suspicion.

There was only a slight increase in the production of pig iron last month as compared with June. There as no rise in prices of either steel or iron, although a rise is expected in the near future.

The same paper reports that a person occupying a prominent position in financial circles has been permitted by the censor to state officially that the third year must be the last year of the war.

NOT LIVING IN LUXURY

A party of journalists who were invited to go round Donington Hall, in England, where German officers about whose over-generous treatment there have been many rumors are interned, report the absence of any form of luxurious accommodation, and dismiss the stories of feasting on rich foods and rare wines as inventions. Prisoners' expenditure on drinks is restricted to an average of 1s a day. The most expensive wine in common use is Hochheimer at 3s 6d. The following is a specimen menu:

Breakfast—Porridge, tea, bread, margarine.

Lunch—Soup, cold meat, boiled potatoes.

Dinner—Roast mutton, potatoes and cabbage, jam pancake.

Prisoners, of course, supplement this to any extent they like from the canteen. The chef is an Englishman. Money and parcels come regularly from Germany. There has been hardly any food in the parcels during the last six months.

Donington Hall is a large and hideous house built about 1780 by "Capability Brown", who seems to have been as bad as an architect as he was good as a landscape gardener. It is a wandering old place and must be difficult to keep warm in winter.

First Icelandic Ship in 900 Years Arrives

NEW YORK, Sept. 26.—The Gullfoss, said to be the first Icelandic ship to visit the shores of the western hemisphere since the days of Lief the Lucky, tied up in the harbor here Friday with a cargo of herring. Aboard the Gullfoss, a little steamer of 886 tons, is a crew of Icelandic sailors officered by Icelandic navigators, and speaking virtually the same language that Leif, son of Eric the Red, spoke when he landed at Cape Cod about the year 1,000. The ship is in command of Captain Sigurdur Pjetursson who told of the remarkable prosperity that had come upon Iceland since the European war started.

Amazing high prices for the products of the island have brought prosperity in the last two years. The war created the first millionaires in Iceland, he declared, and also gave the island its first experience with labor troubles and other disorders of modern civilization. A strike of the fisherman's union of the island lasted throughout last summer, the captain said.

RUSSELL AND DUNN SEEK FIFTEEN-ROUND MATCH

Camp Borden is to have another star boxing bout in the near future. Both Johnnie Dunn of Buffalo and Frankie Russell, the soldier boxer, who recently boxed an eight-round draw at the camp, have asked for a meeting at fifteen rounds.

The athletic authorities at Borden are now endeavoring to arrange the match. The previous bout was a spirited affair, in which both boys showed great cleverness and ability to give and take hard blows.

Silver sequins are so popular and so beautiful that they are rather crowding gold lace and gold beads off the sartorial man.

REPORTED HIS OWN DEATH

Los Angeles, Cal., September 23—Harry Howland, a newspaper reporter wrote the story of his proposed suicide, it developed to-day, and then carried out his plan, except that he took poison instead of shooting himself. Howland took poison at his desk in a newspaper office here. The copy was found after his death. Howland had grieved over the death of his wife and child.

In his story Howland detailed how "after writing the story of his death and suicide, he had shot himself outside the newspaper office." A blank space to be filled in with the time of the suicide was left in the copy. The story closed with "thirty."

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

A BAD MIX-UP.

In handling the slugs which make up the lines in a newspaper, and in separating the various items, the make-up man sometimes gets the lines mixed up and they naturally read rather queer. As an illustration of what can happen, we cite the make-up of a certain paper a few days ago when the printer got a wedding and an auction sale mixed up with the following results:

"William Smith, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Smith, and Miss Lucy Anderson were disposed of at public auction at my farm one mile east in the presence of seventy guests, including two mules and twelve head of cattle.

"Rev. Jackson tied the nuptial knot for the parties averaging 1,250 pounds on the hoof. The beautiful home of the bride was decorated with one sulky rake, one feed grinder and two sets of work harness, nearly new, and just before the ceremony was pronounced the Mendel and Sons wedding march was rendered by one milch cow five years old; one Jersey cow and one sheep, who, carrying a bunch of bride's roses in her hand, was very beautiful. She wore one light spring waggon, two crates of apples, three racks of hay, one grindstone of mousseline de soie and trimmings with bridal party left yesterday on an extended trip."

Cocoanut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, taht contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and afew ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

In cutting the string binding a package pick the knot up and cut immediately below and you will release the string entire unless it has other knots.

What Hindenburg's Appointment Means---The Last Phase

Mrs. S. T. Medd, 152 Charlotte St., has received word from her husband, Major Medd, of the 5th Canadian Mounted Rifles, to the effect that he has returned to England for a few days after a long period of duty in Belgium. Major Medd in one of his letters home, encloses the following interesting clipping from the Daily News and Leader of London, England. The clipping reads as follows:

This week will be one of the historic landmarks of the war. Its events have made the writing on the wall clear to the most myopic vision. That writing has been there two years. Its characters were traced at the Marne, and though they were written in ink that only time could make visible to the material eye they were as indelible as fate. Anyone could see them who had vision., The "profesional whimperers," to use Mr. Asquith's phrase, did not see them, the panic mongers did not see them. Ferdinand of Bulgaria did not see them, Enver Pasha did not see them, King Constantine did not see them. But Venizelos saw them as soon as they were written. "Germany," he is reported to have said in October, 1914, "Germany has lost the war at the Marne, but it will take her two years to find it out."

The two years are over. Next Thursday is the second anniversary of the beginning of the battle of the Marne, and this week has witnessed the first reaping of the harvest of its consequences. When in the future men go with bared heads to the spot most consecrated by this tragedy it will be to that plateau by the Ourcq where, eastward, you look down upon Meaux and the valley of the Marne, and westward towards Paris, and where the little wooden crosses scattered among the ripening corn marks the graves of those who fell on that immortal field and, falling, turned the tide of battle.

THE FINAL CATASTROPHE.

From that moment the character of the war changed. It was no longer a tour de force in which the side which had prepared for the struggle had the certainty of victory; it was a tug of war in which time had made ultimate resources and not immediate resources the capital factor of victory. To day those ultimate resources are realized, and in the events of this week their fruits have become apparent both within Germany and without. Italy's declaration of war against Germany, Rumania's entry into the conflict, and the fall of Falkenhayn announce in terms that cannot be mistaken the approaching doom of the Central Powers. It has been well said that Falkenhayn has fallen because Verden stands. The attack on Verdun was the last bid of Germany for victory. It was, apart from the battle of Jutland, the final attempt to raise the siege, the final sortie on a grand scale. It failed and the war has entered on its last phase as definitely as the war of 1870 entered on its last phase when the Prussian army drew its lines round Paris.

What will be the course of that phase? We have some indication of it. I think, in the fact of Hindenburg's appointment as the Chief of Staff. The Kaiser's selection of this rough old soldier is profoundly significant. Whatever extravagant opinion the public may have in regard to Hindenburg, we may be sure that the Kaiser knows the limits as well as the merits of the man. He has not chosen him because he is a man of genius who may work miracles of strategy. He has chosen him because his dreams are at an end and because the final catastrophe is upon him.

TIRPITZ AND FALKENHAYN

The alternative which Bernhardi set before Germany was "World Empire or Downfall." Up to Verdun the men who dominated events in Germany were the Apostles of the "World Empire," of whom Tirpitz and Falkenhayn were the ablest and most powerful and of whom the figurehead was the Crown Prince. It was they who were the true architects of the war, and having achieved it they directed its policy and its methods. While success seemed within their grasp they rode rough-shod over the unhappy Bethmann-Hollweg who had opposed the war and who vainly sought to stem the torrent of frightfulness. He had been the obstacle in their path long before the war, and the scene which the Crown Prince created in the Reichstag in 1911 when the Chancellor was speaking on the subject of Morocco was the first public intimation of the formidable military conspiracy which was beginning to cohere around the person of the Kaiser's heir. Bethmann-Hollweg survived the early stages of the war only because he had the Kaiser at his back. As the struggle proceeded and the extravagant hopes of the militarists were disappointed, the prolonged conflict between him and Tirpitz turned in his favor and the fall of the creator of the German navy over the question of America and the submarine policy was the first clear indication that the men who made the war were losing the control of it.

Their rout is now complete. Their policy lies in ruins before Verdun, and the dismissal of Falkenhayn, and still more, the appointment of Hindenburg, show that the war is to take on a wholly new character. It is to be frankly a war of defence waged to the cry of "the Fatherland in peril." It must be remembered that it was that cry with which the militarists played upon the fears of the nation at the beginning. They were out for a war of adventure, but it was the fear of Russia which they used as their warrant for the adventure. That fear was not real to them, for they knew that so long as Germany remained on the defensive she was invincible, and the course of the war has shown that fact to be incontrovertible. But it was real to the nation and no analysis of the motives of the people, as apart from its leaders, can ignore the extent to which it is operated.

THE COMING OF FEAR.

And now the phantom has become the reality. The adventure is over, the adventurers are gone and the fear which they exploited so infamously, is at Germany's door. The Kaiser sees, what all the world now sees, that Germany must soon be fighting single handed against her foes, if she fights at all. Her allies are withering away. The hope she helped to receive from Turkey and Bulgaria has been exhausted and they are becoming a drain upon her rather than a source of strength. The new development in the Balkans should very speedily wind up their share in the struggle, and with Bulgaria and Turkey silenced and the Dardanelles open to the Allies the rounding up of the Central Powers will gain enormous impetus. Already the pressure upon Austria-Hungary has reduced that power to the direst straits, and yesterday's news that the Russians have begun a new offensive with the capture of nearly 300 officers ond over 15,000 men, gives the assurance that the end is near. She must go out of the fight by the sheer compulsion of events, for she has not a man with which to defend herself, and it is inconceivable that Germany can spare the men to save her. She has the alternative of making peace or being ridden to the ground. If she makes peace it will be on the Allies' terms, and these will put her soil in the possession of the Allies for the purposes of the war. If she elects to be ridden to the ground the result will be the same. Then the Kaiser's prison will be narrowed to his own territory. The siege will no longer be a siege of the Central Powers, but of Germany alone.

A CONTRAST.

These are the calculations which the Kaiser has to face to-day and in the light of which he has handed over supreme power to Hindenburg. What is the essential fact about Hindenburg? It is not that he is a great strategist. The German people may believe he is, but the Kaiser knows better. But he is a popular hero. He represents no high-falutin' dreams of conquest, but he does represent the ideal of national safety and to that ideal the ambitions of the Kaiser have shrunk. His war-gods have failed him, his great military engine is outranged and dominated, the encompassing doom is closing in on him on every side. All that is left to him is to fling himself on his people and to summon them to fight with him to save the Fatherland. And he gives them their idol as the assurance of his policy.

What may we expect as the result? We have to remember that Hindenburg is not a political soldier and that he comes upon the scene when political ambitions are discredited. He comes in to protect the Fatherland, and his reputation rests wholly on an episode of an entirely defensive kind. His obession, like the obession of the people, is Russia. Throughout his life his gaze has been turned eastward, and throughout the war his interest has been concentrated on the Russian front. His conflict with Falkenhayn arose from his fixed idea and from his relative indifference to the war in the West. That is the fundamental difference between him and the Falkenhayn-Tirpitz - Bernhardi - Reventlow school. They were out for world empire and world empire could only be won by a conclusive victory in the West. Hindenburg is concerned for the security of Germany and to him the menace comes from the East.

RETREAT IN THE WEST.

That we may assume, will be the governing consideration of his policy. In this he represents Bethmann-Hollweg, and, in the changed circumstances, the Kaiser also. The corollary would seem to be obvious. The war in the West, the war of conquest, will be abandoned and all the available power will be concentrated on saving the Eastern situation, where invasion is a real spectre, from utter disaster. If this interpretation is right, we may expect a rapid withdrawal on the Western front—a withdrawal to the Meuse, perhaps even farther. It could not have been carried out by anyone else for on the part of a Falkenhayn it would have been such a confession of failure as would have convulsed Germany and reduced it to an abyss of despair that would have menaced the very existence of the Hohenzollerns. Hindenburg is the only person whose sanction can cover that terrible admission. The Kaiser has brought in the old man to shield him in an operation which must be done which on every military ground should have been done months ago. certainly when the Russian offensive began in Galicia, which has been delayed simply from fear of internal consequences, and which he hopes may now be done under the glamour of Hindenburg's name. The retreat from France and Belgium was sounded with the fall of Falkenhayn. It may be in progress at this moment. We may wake up any morning to find that France is free. But before that let us hope that the blow on the Somme will be driven home. We do not want the enemy to secure their retreat in the West before they have sustained visible and indisputable military defeat.

AND AFTER.

That defeat accomplished, Germany driven back upon her own soil, her allies fallen away, her people faced with a siege as complete, as inexorable as that which their armies imposed on Paris 46 years ago, the moment will have come for considering the terms of surrender. The overtures may come from either side. If Germany makes them they will have to be made in accordance with the accomplished fact of her defeat. That fact will be so demonstratable and irrefutable that the Allies may properly take the initiative. It would be idle for them to talk of terms when the enemy are on their soil, and are pointing to "the map," and claiming the position of conquerers. But when we have set the seal of defeat indisputably upon German arms we can and we should disburden ourselves of any responsibility for continuing to make Europe a charnel house. We should state the terms upon which Germany may have the peace that she so criminally broke.

Those terms will not be easy to formulate for all the Allies have their separate aims and look for their own particular rewards which will not always be reconciled. But there are certain principles which must govern their character and purpose. They must be terms of stern justice but not of revenge. The full price must be exacted for the wrong that has been done; but we must do no wrong in establishing the right. The authors of the crimes against humanity and the laws of nations must be punished, whoever they are and whatever their rank, as Mr. Asquith has said, but we must not outrage any principle of nationality. That principle will be the sure guide in solving the problems of territory and governance, and we must take care that the Peace Congress does not repeat the crime of the Vienna Congress by settling the fate of Europe on dynastic grounds. Above all, the purpose should be to make the settlement one that will heal the wounds of the nations and lift from our children the menace which has brought our world to ruin and sorrow. If we emerge from this dreadful ordeal only to begin again to pile up new armaments and stagger towards a new catastrophe more vast than this, the world would be delivered over to bottomless despair.

FROM COPENHAGEN.

Recently some soldiers of a local garrison saw a picture in a German paper showing Field Marshall Hindenburg and General von Lindendorff seated at the same table, in the middle of which lay a military cap of seemingly exceptional size. Discussion arose as to who was the owner of the cap, resulting in svarious bets, and in order to obtain a final decision letters were despatched to the two commanders enquiring who was actually the owner. The following telegraphic reply has arrived: Eastern Headquarters: Of course, the cap belongs to Hindenburg. My wife declares that I am not nearly as thick-headed as Hindenburg. Please drink a bottle of champagne at my expense. Settlement after the war. — (Signed) Lindendorff.

Germany Is Worried

FOOD DIFFICULTIES ANNOYING BUT BEARABLE—HUNS MISS COFFEE AND BEER.

LONDON, Sept. 21.—The Times prints a letter from a neutral in Frankfort, whose occupation, says the Times, gives him unusual means of being in touch with a considerable number of Germans of the upper and middle classes. The writer says.

"The food difficulties are quite bearable, although annoyinng, especially in the large towns. In most parts of Germany no milk is given out except to those under nine years of age and the potato crop has been disappointing. Game is plentiful at present. On Oct. 1, venison ducks, pheasants and the rest are to be served ont on meat tickets only. Our meat allowance is now one half pound per week and weighed with the bone.

"I was in Berlin the other day and there, I think, the shortage is greater than here in Frankfort. No sugar is served anywhere, the restaurants providing small packets of saccharine. Fish is dearer owing to the new regulations made by the English with the Dutch, but a new experiment is being made of seal meat. Bootocki gave a dinner at the Kaiserhof in which it was served in all forms, hot and cold.

"I dare say you have rumors that fat people are dying freely here, but I do not beleive them. I think the people grumble more at the bad coffee and greatly deteriorated beer than anything else.

"Personally, I do not know what to make of the war. Our croakers, of whom there are always a few, say things are going badly; that Verdun should have fallen long ago; that our submarines for some reason or other are unable to operate."

BIG EATERS GET KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against Kidney trouble, because we eat too much and all our food is rich. Our blood is filled with urio acid which the kidneys strive to filter out, they weaken from overwork, become sluggish; the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health.

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or you have rheumatism when the weather is bad get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate clogged kidneys; to neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water beverage and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

THE REASON WAS GOOD.

It was the custom of the manager of a provincial touring company after the first night's "show," in every town to line the performers up on the stage and criticize them. The players would stand in a row, the leading lady at the head of it, the least important super at the foot, and the "chief" would walk along it, giving praise or censure as he thought fit. One night he passed one of the actors without saying a word, and later he sought the manager out. "As you did not say anything about my performance," he said, "I take it I was all right?" "My boy," replied the manager severely, "I did not speak to you because what I have to say can only be said in private!"

A GENTLEMAN AND AN OFFICER.

A war story which is true, was told by a civilian official at a R.A.M.C. mess. He was travelling down to Winchester in a carriage, into which several "Tommies" had got, and overheard the following fragment: "Our Major, 'e's an officer and a gentleman. The other day he comes into the canteen, and says he, 'Any complaints?' And I says, 'Yes, sir. Beg your pardon, sir, this tea ain't fit to drink.' So he says to the bloke who had served us, 'Give us a cup.' And when he'd tasted it, "Ogwash," says he, "ogwash!" And he says to the bloke, 'Line these men up,' and when he'd done that, he says, 'And now give them back their tuppence.' And I'd never paid mine!"—Blighty.

"He fell in love with a girl whose face he saw on a magazine cover." "Sounds romantic. Did he follow up the romance and marry her?" "Did not have time. There's another magazine out this month." — Louisville Courier-Journal.

SHAUGHNESSY AT SASKATOON

Head of C. P. R. and Directors Have Had Long Trip Over Western Lines

SASKATOON, Sept. 23.—Baron Shaughnessy and party of Directors of the C.P.R. arrived here last evening being practically on the last leg of the long trip over western lines. Edmonton was visited yesterday morning, the party spending the time there inspecting the office building or the Company and in a general survey of the city. To-day the party will make the day-light trip as far as Minnedosa and reach Winnipeg Sunday afternoon going direct from there through to Montreal.

Since leaving Winnipeg Tuesday, September 12 Lord Shaughnessy and the Directors have inspected practically all the lines west of Lake Superior going for the first time over the new scenic routes of the Kootenay Central and Kettle Valley lines. They looked over the immense trail smelter, the largest on the American continent visited the completed Hotel Vancouver and many other of the more important constructed by the Company during the past year.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

Peterborough, Sept. 25.

To the owners of dry closets in the City of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—I take by pen in hand in your behalf concerning the unconsidered by-law the City Council of Peterborough has nailed you to without the least hesitation, namely, the raising of the scavenger's fee from 15c. per month to 40c. per month, very near triple what he got for 1915, and also forcing you to pay this triple amount 12 months of the year. What and where you only paid $106 in 1915 you pay $4.80 the 12 months to come. Now if our Council had given this any consideration, could they not have left the winter months out, as years gone by they did not consider the owners of some houses with big mortgages on their houses unable to pay those conveniences in their houses. They gave the poor working man no consideration, and his monthly wages will not allow him to live in such a house with all conveniences in. My dear men, you were never considered. Now, gentlemen, there is only one thing we can do and that is this: Every man of you that is affected by this damnable by-law, is to be present at the next Council meeting, the first Monday night in October. Come all of you. If there is not room in the hall there will be room on the street. We will quish this mutton-headed by-law or some part thereof.

Through Windshield Soldiers in Accident

AUTO COLLIDED WITH POLE — ALLEGED JOY-RIDERS IN "CIVIES" HAD LIQUOR.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 25.—Two privates of the 169th Battalion from the Niagara Camp, while returning to camp, when about three miles west of here when attempting to turn the corner on the Queenston road a mile north of Galley's Corners, at a high rate of speed, fouled an Ontario Power Line pole with their seven seated car. Both were thrown through the wind shield. They escaped with a few scratches but about $300 damage was done to the car. It snapped the pole like a pipe stem. The automobile belonged to Captain Dingman of 71 Balsam avenue, Toronto. The two men were arrested later. They gave their names as Percy McKee and H. S. Hubbard. Each had two bottles of whiskey in his possession. They were dressed in civilian clothes and in a suit case had their khaki uniforms. It is claimed that one of them took care of his captain's car and was out on a joy ride. They had visited the American side yesterday afternoon.

A good sauce to serve with croquettes is made with one cup of drawn butter to which is added just before serving one quarter cup of diced cucumbers and one teaspoon of chopped parsley.

Put 57 Bottles Whiskey In His Home

MAGISTRATE HOLDS MAN IN LOCAL OPTION TOWN WAS WITHIN HIS RIGHTS.

St. Thomas, September 25. — The County Magistrate has decided that J. Vogen of Rodney was within the law in putting 57 bottles of whiskey in his home for his own use. Rodney was under local option but at 4 o'clock on September 16 he stocked up. The claim was made that he had violated the local option by-law but the defendant asserted that he was justified under the new temperance measure, and the magistrate upheld him in this view.

WHAT WAR LOANS TELL

IN CANADA

"I am confident that when the subscriptions now in the mails are received the total will reach one hundred and eighty millions and probably more. Ninety-five per cent. of the subscriptions are Canadian. The number of subscribers may reach thirty thousands.

"In Great Britain and elsewhere abroad the notable success of the issue cannot fail to be regarded as further and infallible evidence of the spirit of Canada respecting the war and her invincible determination to persevere to the utmost of her power until final and conclusive victory is achieved."

SIR THOS. WHITE.

IN GERMANY

LONDON, Sept. 26.—Small investors are not subscribing to the new German war loan in the same numbers as to previous issues, according to a Reuter's Amsterdam despatch quoting the Cologne Gazette.

"However, important and valuable," says the Gazette, "are subscriptions by the million our war loans would never have been a great success without small single subscriptions.' The paper adds that the farmers are afraid that Germany must suffer bankruptcy owing to the gigantic and ever-increasing cost of the war.

Three Loopholes In The New Act

No Difficulty in Those Who Want Liquor and Beer Getting It—Breweries Deliver Right to House

That there are at least three loopholes in the Ontario Temperance Act, and that apparently nothing but an act of the Dominion Parliament can block them up, is admitted by the Ontario License Board, plus Eudo Saunders, K.C., and other liquor law authorities. While there are several minor technicalities which permit evasions of total prohibition, the three main weaknesses of the act insofar as concern the absolute prevention of the sale and use of intoxicants are:

(1). A consumer can secure any brand of beer or liquor from local breweries and distilleries by sending his order to Montreal dealers. Breweries and distilleries can deliver the brands of liquor to the home of the consumer.

(2.) Distilleries can have their liquor placed in government bond until ready to dispose of it. They can supply the home trade, providing the consumers send their orders to a point outside the province and an outside dealer handles the transaction.

(3) Beer and liquor can be shipped into the province from any other province or country by rail, ship or waggon and as long as it is delivered to a legal address no action can be taken under the law.

WHAT IT DOES.

The whole effect of the act is not to prohibit the sale of beer and liquor but rather to handicap its sale and to abolish the bar, shop and club.

A householder who has not more than two boarders or roomers besides his family can keep his cellar full of wet goods if he so desires. Practical use of the loopholes in the act are being made use of daily in this way.

James X., 140 Blank street, wants beer and liquor. He secures a money order and sends it with his order by mail to the Montreal dealer who is advertising in the press that he is handling those particular brands. The Montreal dealer wires the local brewery or distillery making those brands, and instructs them to deliver a certain quantity ot James X., and to charge the same to the account of the dealer. The government officials admit that can be done.

In a nutshell the act permits everybody to get as much booze as they want provided they send the order outside the province. It takes a little longer than if the order could be left at a liquor store, but the breweries are increasing their delivery services and hope to give prompt service. Where imported liquors are concerned the Montreal dealer simply keeps liquor in bond at the many points in Ontario used in the past as distributing centres and he has his agent attend to the release of the quantities wanted by the Ontario customer.

The act provides that liquor or beer cannot be kept for beverage purposes on any premises but a dwelling house and that the same shall mean a place where there are not more than two other lodgers in addition to the regular family. It can be seen from this that house parties are already becoming popular and that and ways means will be used to beat out the main purpose of the act, viz., restriction of the use of liquor by the working class.

"EVERYWOMAN"

Henry W. Savage, the theatrical producer, who has a habit of doing big things in a big way, will offer the dramatic spectacle, "Everywoman," at the Grand Opera House, Peterborough, Ont.

The production is described as mastodonic. Two car-loads of scenery, costumes and electrical effects are transported from city to city to aid in illuminating the peculiar play and no less than one hundred people are employed in the representation. A special orchestra is carried by the organization to interpret the score which was composed by George Whitefield Chadwick, dean of the New England Conservatory of Music, and the cast includes thirty-seven speaking characters. In reality "Everywoman," most difficult to place under the ordinary classification of the theatre, is a combination of grand opera, musical comedy and drama, deftly intermingled. It admits of astonishing electrical effects and scenic splendors. There are thousands of square yards of scenery and armies of super-numeraries. It is the Barnum of stage pictures. Aside from all this "Everywoman" is a play with a purpose, a play with a high moral lesson which has been endorsed in the most glowing terms by educators, scholars, clergymen, editors and sociologists. Written from the view-point of a many-sided man who had been an actor, a sinner, an editor, a lecturer, a financier, a stowaway, a circus performer, in America, England, Africa, South America, India and China, it is a compendium of philosophy, wit, biting, satire, grim humour. Hunger stalked about the door of Walter Browne when he wrote "Everywoman." When he had run the gamut of disaster and had finished the play no one would read it. After much buffeting it reached the eyes of Henry W. Savage who produced it. It has been witnessed by four million people, and has been played in five countries. Reserved seat sale at Box Office on Thursday morning at 9 a.m.

"Of course you are eager for the triumph of right." "Yes," replied Dustin Stax. "but it's hard sometimes to tell which the right side of the market really is."—Washington Star.

DOLLY TAYLOR AND ANDREW M'GEE ARE COMMITTED TO TRIAL

Conclusion of Preliminary Hearing Before Magistrate Langley of Concealment of Birth and Another Charge Against Girl

DIVERGENT STORIES

Dolly Taylor of Westwood, was committed to trial by Magistrate Langley in the County Police Court this morning on two charges, concealment of birth and neglect to provide reasonable assistance therein, in consequence of which the child died.

Andrew McGee, also of Westwood, was committed on a charge of concealment of birth. These actions revolve around the birth and death of Miss Taylor's child some time last May.

The charge against Miss Taylor of neglecting to provide reasonable assistance at birth was heard yesterday in the evidence of Police Inspector Miller, Dr. Huycke, Dr Sweeney and Mr. P. M. Howard of Hastings.

This morning the evidence of the first case was taken as given in the second charge against Miss Taylor and supplemented by McGee's testimony.

The same course was agreed upon in the charge against McGee, Mr. O'Connell and Mr. Hatton, who respectively conducted the defence and prosecution, agreeing to this procedure to expedite the hearing.

Dr. Sweeney's Evidence.

Dr. Paul J. Sweeney, of Hastings, who assisted Dr. Huycke in the post-mortem examination of the child's body, stated that it was his first autopsy for a coroner's jury. His evidence was practically a corroboration of Dr. Huycke's yesterday morning.

"Inspector Miller called at my office. He told me of the case and asked me to go out and look at the body to see whether it was premature or not. I didn't know then where the body was. I went with him. He took an old sack out of the buggy and went to Lynch's blacksmith shop. The contents of the bag were emptied out on the floor ,the contents being the body of the child in a granite dish. I told him I thought it was the body of a matured child. I think it was left at the blacksmith shop. Mr. Howard, the undertaker, embalmed the body that night."

Witness described the extent of the decomposition of the body. Parts of the stomach, heart, intestines were in a process of decomposition.

Mr. O'Connell asked if witness could detail the work at the autopsy. I couldn't give an accurate account of what we did.

Did you examine the spleen?
We did.
Where did you find it?
I don't know positively.
You received written instructions from the coroner telling you what to do? Yes.
Did you do anything else? Yes.
Why did you examine the navel?
Dr. Loucks, the coroner, had particularly drawn our attention to it and we specially examined it.
What was the object of the autopsy?
To determine whether the child had breathed or not. The coroner had asked us especially to decide that point. The conclusion would be that if the child breathed it had lived.
Dr. Sweeney stated that gas was found in the lungs, but he would not say that it was oxygen. It might have been a gas caused by decomposition. The hair, finger nails and other conditions suggested a mature child. The absence of blood in the intra-abdominal structures and the growth of skin that practically covered the navel were the predominating evidences that the child had lived.

Andrew McGee's Evidence.

Andrew McGee said he was the father of eight children, the oldest of whom is twenty years old. Last May there were six children at home, the oldest being Rosie, aged fourteen. The others ten, nine, seven, etc., years. Dolly Taylor lived with the family until this spring, leaving early in June. Witness recalled the birth of Miss Tayor's baby in May. He was informed of it on the morning following the evening during which it was born. Witness was out in the garden when his daughter came to him and told him Dolly wanted him. There was no one in the room but Miss Taylor. She said the baby had come between eight and nine o'clock on the previous evening. It was dead, she said, and asked witness to dispose of it. He did so.

Mr. Hatton—Who were in the house that evening?

"My wife, her sister, my wife's brother and his wife, Henry Hicks, a soldier, and the children. To my knowledge they did not know of the infant's birth.

Mr. Hatton— Whom did you tell about it next day?

"I didn't tell any person."

How long afterwards was it before you first heard of it from anybody?

"I heard no more of it until Mr. Miller called."

Argued No Intent to Conceal.

Mr. O'Connell argued that there was no evidence to show intent on the part of the accused to conceal the fact of birth.

Mr. Hatton remarked that this case would probably be not pressed in any event.

Mr. O'Connell continued that Miss Taylor had requested the head of the house to dispose of the body, all that she could do in her condition. The disposition might have followed the regular course of notifying an undertaker.

Magistrate Langley held that all the evidence had to be considered. He admitted a certain weakness in the Crown's case on this charge.

A prima facie case in a preliminary hearing Mr. O'Connell defined as sufficient to secure a conviction without contradictory evidence being put in.

Mr. Hatton stated that the Magistrate had to decide only whether there was sufficient evidence to send the case to a jury.

Magistrate Langley' remarked that had there been election for [illegible]

Mr. Miller Recalled.

The Court received Inspector Miller's evidence in the charge against Andrew McGee yesterday afternoon in order to permit his early return to Toronto.

He recounted the visit to McGee's house on July 4th when he had asked the accused if Miss Taylor had given birth to a child.

McGee replied that if she had he didn't know of it.

Witness interviewed Miss Taylor and returned to McGee. "I told him what Miss Taylor had told me regarding a premature birth and that the foetus was only about six months old.' He said it would be older than that. Inspector Miller pursued. "He was informed at the time by Dolly that the child had been dead two weeks before its birth. He didn't know anything about the trouble until his little girl told him Dolly wanted him."

Didn't Think It Any Harm.

Mr. Miller continued his recital of McGee's story leading up to the burial of the body in a hen house. "He said he didn't know what else to do with it, and didn't think he was doing any harm."

Miss Taylor had been living with the family, including Mr. McGee and children, but had gone to her father's home a few days previous to Inspector Miller's visit.

BOYS UNDERWEAR AT 19C NOT 9C AS PRINTED

Owing to the breaking off of a figure, with large advertisement of N. Sukloff, which appeared in yesterday's Examiner, it made it appear as though they had offered Boys' Underwear at 9 cents a garment. The correct price should have been 19c, a special two days' bargain offer, but the figure "1" being broken in the press, made it read only 9c.

Special Services For The Hebrews

Friday evening, from seven until eight o'clock.

Referring to the occasion, the Rev. Aaron Saltzman says: "To convey a small idea of the liberality which is embodied in our prayer the following is a quotation of one of our prayers":

"Our God and God of our fathers! Reign over the whole world in Thy magnificence; raise Thy Majesty over the whole earth and appear in the splendour of Thy glorious victories to all the inhabitants of Thy country."

"This quotation," said Mr. Saltzmain, speaks for itself and shows that our prayer is unselfish and when we pray our prayer is for every member of the universe, and not for ourselves in particular. As it is impossible for me to give New Year greetings to everyone personally, I therefore wish everybody a happy and prosperous New Year."

"The reason that the Jewish New Year is observed at this season of the year is because it was at this period that the world was created," explained Mr. Saltzman.

'The Bohemian Girl"

Imagine a reproduction of an ancient Hungarian fair with acrobats, mountebanks and trained animals in an operatic performance. This is one of the several sensational features shown in the Aborn Opera Company's stupendous spectacular version of "The Bohemian Girl" that will be presented at the Grand Opera House, Thursday, Sept. 28th.

Victory For The Russo-Roumanians

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 26.—Two thousand Teutons of Von Mackensen's army were made prisoners in Dubrudja. Big victory gained by the Russo-Roumanians. Late reports indicate a substantial gain by the Roumanians in Dubrudja.

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, lossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

These are fine Cashmere Combinations perfectly fitted and made with either v-neck or round neck with different length sleeves. They have remarkable wearing qualities.

Each Garment 49c, Suit 90c

This is a light natural shade of heavy union quality in women's size, made with a close elastic rib. An exceptional value, built to wear and be warm. Look over your supply as soon as possible and if in need, be sure to see these. They are a quality unusual at such a price.

sentences being inflicted for this cowardly crime and it should be impressed upon them that their duty to the Empire should be their first consideration."

Down in New Brunswick they have inaugurated a novel recruiting scheme. The Victoria County News of Perth, N.B., describes it as follows:

Active recruiting for New Brunswick's kiltie regiment, the 236th, Sir Sam's Own, will begin on Monday night, when the beacon fire will blaze forth the call to arms from the huge trestle on the hilltop on the Jamer farm. Great preparations have been made for the opening night all over the province, and the campaign and scheme which some time ago was prepared by Colonel Percy Guthrie the officer commanding, and since somewhat elaborated upon, have been put into effect. This is a Highland Scottish regiment, so why, ask the promoters, should we not go back into Scottish history for our methods in calling to the colours the sons of New Brunswick who may have a drop of Scotland's blood in their veins? There will be fifteen meetings in the province on Monday night, to be addressed by fifteen of the most prominent speakers in Canada, also by fifteen returned soldiers who have come back to take their place in the Kilties. Fifteen of the highest peaks in the province have been topped by trestles, upon which have been piled faggots and oil barrels ready for the torch. At 8 o'clock on Monday night, just as the chairman at each of the meetings rises to announce the beginning of the campaign in his district, the pile will be fired, and the sky shall blaze forth in the red call of war, and there shall be neither man woman nor child who, standing on the doorstep of his home whether it be in the city streets, country homestead or silent lumber camp, gazing at the sky, cannot see there the reflection of one of these fires of "Creighgowan" Height."

Says the Kingston Whig:

Because of the fact that sufficient recruits did not come forward to bring the battalions up to full strength, even after the most strenuous efforts on the part of the officers, Barriefield Camp will have an addition of several officers who were not able to go overseas with their units from Valcartier. When the 130th, 136th, 139th and 146th Battalions were called from Barriefield to Valcartier, the authorities sacrificed all chances of bringing the battalions up to strength. The public were so disgusted with the movement that there was no support given the recruiting agencies. The result has been a rather embarrassing position but one that was unavoidable in view of the young men not enlisting in their home battalions sufficiently to bring them to full strength. The battalions went overseas as three company units and of course, the officers of the fourth company have not been ordered to report at Barriefield camp. These officers, who are all qualified and have passed all the necessary examinations, will undoubtedly be eagerly taken by officers commanding the new battalions to be organized and they will have an opportunity of "doing their bit" in this way.

Major Dudley of the 136th Battalion was a visitor at the Armouries this morning.

As reported in the Examiner yesterday Major G. W. Anderson of Prince Albert, Sask., who went overseas with the 53rd Western Canada Battalion, has been wounded. Major Anderson is a brother of Mr. Wm. B. Anderson of North Monaghan and formerly lived in that township, not in Otonabee as stated yesterday. Major Anderson was formerly a member of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers.

Lieut. Hayes of Peterborough, formerly of the 235th Battalion, Bowmanville has reported for duty to the 247th Battalion to which he is now attached.

Mrs. Wm. Hill, 621 Union Street, received official word this morning that her son, Gunner Henry B. (Holly) Hill who went overseas with the 33rd Battery is officially reported seriously ill and admitted to the Military Hospital, Shorncliffe on Sept. 24th suffering from multiple gun shot wounds. Gunner Hill was reported wounded a short time ago, this being the second message received from Ottawa.

Capt. C. R. Widdifield, of the 93rd Battalion, had a unique honour while on a visit to London recently. He took advantage of his visit to drop in at The Ring, the best boxing arena in the world, and was called upon to referee one of the bouts. Capt. Widdifield met Lieut. Ganey Stratton in London. The well-known Peterborough boy, who went overseas the first of the year with the Mechanical Transport, and has been in France for some time, is joining the Flying Corps. Capts Widdifield and Mowat of the 93rd, have been taking a special course at Napier Barracks, Shorncliffe.

Two Peterborough boys were among the invalided soldiers who reached Quebec on Saturday. One of them is Lance-Corp. Fred Long, son of Mrs. Geo. Long, Westcott St., and formerly of the C.P.R. Telegraph Co. Lance-Corp. Long went overseas as a signaller in the 16th Battalion, enlisting at Vancouver. He was wounded and taken prisoner at Ypres in April, 1915. As a result of his injuries, his leg was amputated, and afterwards the Peterborough boy was exchanged and sent to England, where he has been for a long period.

Holloway vs. Sangster.
Mowat vs. Denham.
Neill vs. Ray.
Matthews vs. Hamilton.

The Geo. A. Macdonald Trophy.

The following is the draw for the above trophy:

Logie vs. Campbell.
Bond vs. Trebilcock.
Bradburn vs. Mulholland.
Patterson vs. Dela Fosse.
Ackerman vs. Roy.

Both the above draws to be played off by Monday, the 2nd of October inclusive.

SCOTS IN HEROIC CHARGE.

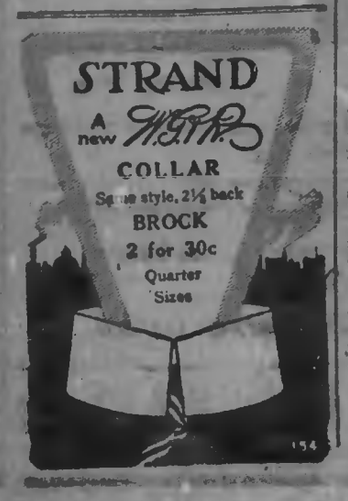
A story of the heroism shown by Scottish and other troops at Loos was told by Winston Churchill in the British House of Commons. He was referring to the disbanding of four Scottish battalions which had covered themselves with glory at the front, and said:

"The Ninth Scottish Division, which played a notable part in the battle of Loos, lost 6,000 in killed and wounded out of 9,500 infantry. One battalion of Cameron Highlanders went into action 850 strong; with 30 officers, and the Colonel and the adjutant and 110 men alone, who were survivors, took and held their objective.

"Four successive lines were swept away, and the fifth went on without hesitation, while two days later the remnant was asked to make an attack, and they did it with the utmost elan and good spirit.

"These troops," Mr. Churchill went on, "1,200 selected out of a brigade of 4,000, swept over the parapets to the attack. You talk about the charge at Balaclava and the Fusiliers at Albuera; even these deeds pale by these new divisions raised in the British army. Needless to say, no account of these achievements, other than a very jejune account published many months afterward, has reached the public."



A RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE

Utilities Commission Record Its Deep Regret at the Death of Ex-Alderman J. C. Anderson

A meeting of the Peterborough Utilities Commission was held yesterday afternoon when the following resolution of condolence was submitted and adopted by the Board:

"Resolved, that this Commission place on record its deep regret on account of the death of the late John C. Anderson, who was Accountant in the office of the Commission for two years, and who had previously served the city as a member of the City Council for four years. Mr. Anderson was efficient and conscientious in the discharge of his duties, and courteous and affable with all whom he met, and his loss is a serious one to the service of the Commission. The Commission also desires to express to Mrs. Anderson and the other members of the family their deep sympathy with them in this hour of their very sad bereavement."

ADJ. MCELHENEY FELL OFF ROOF

Yesterday's fire at the rear of 249 Stewart Street, nearly cost the life of a member of the Fire Department, in the person of Adjutant McElhiney. The latter, who is Chaplain of the Fire Brigade, invariably turns out whenever a call comes in. When yesterday's fire was at its height and sparks were flying al over the neighbourhood, setting fire to a number of roofs, the Adjutant was employed in extinguishing an incipient blaze on the roof of a house at the north west corner of Stewart and Sherbrooke streets. Through some means or other Adjutant McElhiney's foot slipped and he fell from the roof of the house to the ground. The fact that the fall was broken by the verandah roof probably saved him from a severe, if not fatal, injury. As it was, the Adjutant was badly shaken up and today is nursing a number of bruises besides a stomach full of smoke. In all, ten fire were reported in the neighbourhood of the main fire. The smaller fires were caused by burning brands that were carried away by the high wind which was blowing at the time. The property loss was small.

Peter Perry Clark Dies At Belleville

BELLEVILLE, Sept. 26.—After an illness extending over several months Peter Perry Clark, ex-Warden of Hastings county, passed away Saturday evening in this city, he was a native of Tweed, and was almost sixty years of age. He was a lifelong Liberal and was a candidate for the Commons in 1911 for the riding of East Hastings.

Mr. Clark spent most of his life in St. Ola, where he was engaged in the lumber business, owning a sawmill and a general store. For more than thirty years he was Reeve of Limerick township ,and sat in Hastings County Council.

He was a large property owner in Limerick, Madoc and Belleville. Some three years ago he retired from business, and latterly had been living in Bellevillo. He was a Methodist. He leaves one son and one daughter, besides his wife. The remains will be buried at St. Ola on Tuesday.

WINTER WHEAT CAN BE SOWN FOR FEW DAYS

Prof. Zavitz Would Not Advise Seeding in October—All in at O.A.C.

Guelph, Sept. 26.—The winter wheat has all been put in at the Ontario Agricultural College. Prof. Zavitz says that there are still a few days left to get in fall wheat. The season has been so unusually dry that farmers in many sections, according to college reports, have been unable to plough, and on this account fall wheat has not been seeded. "As a general rule," said Prof. Zavitz, "we regard around August 26th as the proper time to start with winter wheat. From then on to the first week in September it has been found, according to records covering a great many years, that the best results are obtained. After the 7th or 9th of September we find there is a gradual falling off in the yield from winter wheat planted after that date, although very good yields do sometimes come from a later planting. Winter wheat can be put in for a few days yet, but not after the end of September. I wouldn't advise seeding in October."

MUST NOT SERVE BREAD IN AUSTRIAN HOTELS

ZURICH, Switzerland, Sept. 26.—Press despatches from Vienna say there has been a bread famine there for several days, owing to transportation difficulties. An official decree has been published forbidding hotels and restaurants of Vienna and lower Austria to supply bread to guests, who must bring their own. Railway service has been greatly dislocated since Roumania entered the war.

Arthur S. Thurston of the Department of Floriculture at the Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass., has accepted a position as assistant professor of floriculture at the Iowa State College.

Two Toronto Pulpits Discuss The Subject Of Hell's Nature

The following are excerpts from two sermons in Toronto on Sunday on the question of Hell:

The following is from Rev. Father Minehan's sermon—

"Who, according to Catholic theology, are those who go to hell? Those who, knowing they are grievously violating the laws of God, nevertheless do so with full deliberation and consent— those who, with eyes wide open, sin against the light those who hurl in God's face the challenge I will not obey, whatsoever Thou dost threaten; those, in fine, who are rebels against the Almighty and die in that state — they, and they alone, shall be condemned to hell. The man who does his best, according to his lights, to fulfil his duties to God and to his fellow-men, who, if he offend, is truly sorry because he has offended his all-good Creator, who would gladly belong to the visible body of the Church were he able to recognize it as divinely institutional—that man, though he be a pagain like Socrates, can and will be saved.

Endless Torments.

"Here is the statement of Catholic teaching concerning hell: 'Hell, the place or state where the devil and those who die at enmity with God are punished with endless torments. The pains of hell are two-fold—pain of "loss" and pain of "sense." The pain of "loss" consists in the privation of the beatific vision, given as punishment for having turned away from God, and the pain of "sense" consists in various positive afflictions given as punishment for having turned inordinately to creatures. As to the fire of hell, it is theologically certain that it is real, and not metaphorical fire, but as to its nature or how it affects the condemned, there is nothing defined.'

"There is no room for metaphorical quibbling here. A judge does not pronounce sentence in metaphors. The last judgment is not a metaphor. The words Jesus shall address to the just on His right hand are not metaphorical, neither are those He shall hurl against the reprobate on His left, and the everlasting punishment of the latter shall be as truly endless as to the everlasting bliss of the former. It is this everlasting hell that is so repugnant to us. Yet an everlasting hell there must be. Be not deceived. God is not mocked. For what things a man shall sow, those also shall he reap."

Fallen Soldier's Eternity.

There was an air of hushed expectancy throughout the service at Jarvis Street Baptist Church last evening. An inspiring audience almost filled the extensive building and listened attentively while the Rev. T. T. Shields gently shredded the much discussed theory as expressed in Dr Henderson's sermon of Sunday, 17th.

"It is not important to me what a certain man thinks of the future state of the soul of a soldier who dies in battle," said the preacher; "it is pure speculation at the best, and unless there be a divine revelation no one knows anything at all about the future. I affirm that the Scripture teaches the necessity of salvation, which is not by human effort but Divine grace, therefore no man can atone for sin by sacrificing his life. Christ sacrificed Himself for the whole world, and man has only to believe. To me it is nothing short of outrage to the Divine God to say that His nature does not claim appeasement. Do not the red streaming fields of Flanders attest that the Divine Nature cries out for pacification? Some of the best men living—all honour to them—are in the military camp, but multitudes of wrecked and godless lives, too, are there. That a soldier who has polluted his tongue with foul language abused his body and sold his soul to hell, can after death on the battlefield enter into the Divine Presence, I declare by this Holy Book, that it is impossible, absolutely untrue."

The Pennsylvania State Chemist believes that the business of dealing in bad and discarded eggs has been revived in Philadelphia in the form of a trust, which is carrying on an enormous business with immense profits.

WEDDING BELLS

O'CONNOR—MOHER.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at St. Joesph's, Douro, by the Rev. M. J. McGuire, when Catherine Geraldine, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Moher, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Joseph Vincent, youngest son of the late Wm. O'Connor. The bride looked charming in a gown of grey silk with black hat and white plumes, and was assisted by her sister, Mary, who wore a pale blue voile with hat to match. The groom was ably supported by Joseph Allen. After the ceremony the young couple drove to the home of the bride's parents, where a dainty wedding breakfast was spread.

The bride received many beautiful and costly presents, showing the esteem in which she was held. The happy couple left on the 4.58 train for Niagara, Buffalo and Rochester. On their return they will reside at Lot 6, Con. 3, Douro.

DEREHAM TP. WOMAN TAKES PASTEUR CURE TO LIFT SUSPENSE

INGERSOLL, Sept. 26—While the report of the analysis of the dog's head did not state definitely that the animals had rabies, Mrs. Kay McKay of Dereham Township, who was bitten by the family dog over a week ago, left Saturday morning for Toronto to take the Pasteur treatment. There was room for doubt and as the animal's case was suspicious it was considered advisable for Mrs. McKay to take the Pasteur treatment.

SAYS HOT WATER EACH DAY KEEPS THE DOCTOR AWAY

Life is not merely to live, but to live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, look well. What a glorious condition to attain, and yet how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, splitting headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stofach, liver, kidneys and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, awate and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble, rheumatism; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store which will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of internal sanitation.

MAN ONCE DOWN NEED NOT STAY THERE

Former Inmates of Prison Farm Risk Lives to Fight For Law and Order.

GUELPH, Sept. 26.—In a letter to a friend here, a former inmate of the Prison Farm, now a member of the 5th Overseas Pioneers, speaks of the number of Prison Farm men who left Valcartier Camp during the week for service overseas. The letter says: "These men less than a year ago were at the Farm for transgressing some laws, but their very presence in the uniform of the King proves that they believe in law and order to the extent of risking their lives to fight for it. Their appearance gives the lie to the belief held by some that a man once down must stay there. Dr. Gilmour would be proud to-day were he able to see these boys in line as we saw them."

Fall of Bapaume and Peronne Expected Shortly—British Alone Have Captured Over Three Thousand Prisoners—Enemy Made No Attempt to Recapture Positions—Allies' Guns Cleared the Way and the Blue and Khaki-clad Infantry Swept Over the German Lines With Irresistible Fury—German Officers Say the Huns Now Only Have Such Trenches As They Are Able to Dig Under the Allied Fire

FRENCH OFFICIAL REPORT

LONDON. Sept. 27th-- Thiepval and Guaudescourt have been taken by the Allies. Fall of Bapaume and Peronne is expected shortly.

PARIS (French Official), September 27.—Rolled back by the tremendous Allied blow yesterday, the Germans made no attempt to recapture positions taken by the French north of the Somme last night, it was officially announced to-day. The French spent the night organizing their new positions. North of the Somme a brilliant attack enabled the French to carry a strongly defended wood forming a salient east of Vermandovillers.

LONDON, September 27.—In two days of the great battle on the Somme front, the British alone have captured between three thousand and four thousand prisoners, General Haig reported this afternoon.

A THRILLING SPECTACLE.

BRITISH FRONT IN FRANCE, September 27.—(By Frederick Palmer)—Yesterday was another great day for the Anglo-French forces on the Somme. As a spectacle for the observer it was the most splendid of all the attacks made by the Allied forces since the commencement of the great offensive. What either army was trying to do and how they were doing it, the positions they held and sought to conquer in the team-play of the blue French legions and the khaki-clad brigades of Britain, were comprehensible to the eye in the glorious autumn sunlight for a sweep of ten miles. The scene had the intoxication of war's grandeur—if war can be said to have any grandeur. To-day the Allies have Combles, Frequicourt, Morval, Les Boeufs, Rancourt, Thiepval, Gueudecourt, and a number of smaller positions.

The correspondent went forward Monday over the ridge in the Devil's Wood (Delville Wood) and Ginchy region which the British had fought for over two months to gain. He walked for two miles through an area which reverberated to the blasts of the great guns, picking his way between the burst of flame from the crashing batteries and moving around the rows of cannon as one who seeks a ford in a stream. On the other side of the ridge he saw guns where he had never seen them before—on the promised land of the lower levels which the British had won by persistent siege work. The guns were close up to the British infantry who listened to their thunderous chorus as they prepared for the charge in yesterday's attack. "The usual artillery preparation," said an officer.

VERITABLE TEMPEST OF SHELLS.

On his return the correspondent decided that he would not pass through that wilderness of British guns of all sizes and calibre while he had any hearing left. Every one of them was firing at top speed. He chose a gallery which took him past many batteries which for two miles were pouring out their share of the raging tempest of gunfire. From the ruins of some old German trenches, whence the battle panorama stretched before him, the correspondent had a near view of the French gunners who were feeding shells into the gun breeches as grain is fed into a threshing machine and with the mechanical precision of automatons.

Shortly after noon was the time chosen for the infantry to rush forward under the cover of a final intensive chorus of hell from the artillery. The ridges in front and on either hand were flecked with racing sparks of flames. Within an hour at least 50,000 shells must have been fired within sight of the correspondent.

"Far to the south was Mont St. Quentin, two miles from Peronne and commanding that town, which, the Allies commanders say, will fall like a ripe plum when the time comes. The hill lay hazy above the green foliage of the river valley in the midst of vast bursts of black smoke from shells of enormous calibre. Directly in front Combles, another town which has come to mean much to the imagination of the public in England and France, who seem to regard its capture as of vital significance. Combles differed from all the villages in sight in that the walls of many of its buildings were still standing. It was different, too, in the fact that it formed an oasis in the midst of the storm of battle. Neither artillery nor infantry paid any attention to it. The gauge of battle was the high ground around it, the possession of which means the command of the town. Farther north lay the ruins of Ginchy and Guillemont.

INFANTRY WAVES SWEPT OUT.

"At the appointed time the waves of infantry surged forward to the attack. Then the tremendous fire of the German guns swelled to its utmost volume until the whole field was lost in vast clouds of smoke. The attacking infantry vanished in that grim pall, while high overhead scores of sausage balloons and hundreds of aeroplanes, their wings gleaming like silver in the brilliant sunlight, strove vainly to see what was passing beneath them. Then across the dead fields arose a signal from Morval, which told that the British infantry had reached another goal and that another village was taken. A man at a telepone in a nearby signal station called out the capture of the different strong points with the enthusiasm of one who scores a hotly-contested game.

EVEN WOUNDED ARE JOYFUL.

"Presently the British wounded began to straggle back, and their bearing, as they moved along beside their prisoners, was another criterion by which the correspondent knew how the day had gone without making enquiries of the staff. The German machine guns had stopped them for a while at some points, but generally reports told of every position being taken on the minute set in the programme. The British wounded said that of course they got there as they were used to getting there. Their great gratification was that it was becoming an even fight since the Germans had no more prepared lines, but both armies were fighting in the open. According to the British officers, the Germans on the fighting front have no longer any trenches except those which are dug under fire."

CREDIT FOR PAYMENT OF MUNITION EXPENSES

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, September 27.—At a conference which Sir Thomas White has arranged with the Dominion Bankers' Association, and which will be held in the Capital to-day, a further credit will be arranged for the Imperial Government.

The credit will be used to pay for munitions made in Canada, the heavy cost of exchange thereby being avoided. The success of the second war loan has demonstrated the financial ability of the Dominion to add to the previous credits aggregating one hundred and fifty millions.

Although the Minister of Finance has not fixed on any definite sum for the credit, it wil, in all probability, be for fifty millions. The credit is in no way related to the war loan, and all the money set aside will be used in paying for munitions made in Canada.

"The Cold Storage Egg" is not always above suspicion. Popular imagination ascribes great food value to the egg—but it is not a muscle-builder. There is more real body-building nutriment in a Shredded Wheat Biscuit than in the same weight of eggs or beefsteak and it costs much less. THE PRUSSIANS ARE SADLY DEMORALIZED BY DAREDEVILS OF FRANCO- BRITISH SERVICES

Diary of a Prussian Officer Reveals the Fact That Mystery of the Air is of Great Importance—Their Work is Vital on Somme Offensive—Aviators Are Like Heroes—They Upset All Calculations of Their Foe.

SUPERIORITY NOT ACCIDENTAL

LONDON, September 27.—The Zeppelin raid on London, with its loss to the Prussians of at least two super-Zeppelins and the infliction of no military damage whatever, and the dramatic air battles now proceeding on the western front serve again to call attention to the fact that air fighting, scouting and raiding exploits are of the utmost importance in these decisive days of the war.

The statement contained in special cable despatches several weeks ago that the French and British airmen were systematically blinding the scouting eyes of the Prussian army on the Somme now receives official confirmation. In a British official communication summing up the main features of last week's fighting occurs the statement that during that week "in the battle area only fourteen hostile aeroplanes have been reported as crossing our lines, while our machines have made between two and three thousand flights across the enemy's lines."

This condition of affairs, which is recognized by military observers as of the utmost importance to the future of the conflict between the forces of the Allies and of the Central Powers, is now beginning to affect in a serious manner the morale of the troops of the army group of Prince Rupprecht, who are endeavouring to resist the onslaught of the armies of General Foch and General Haig.

An interesting document in this connection is the diary of a Prussian officer captured at the Somme, extracts from which are published and the authenticity of which is vouched for.

AVIATORS ARE LIKE HARES.

The entries regarding aviation are as follows:—

"August 1, 1916—Our aviators are like hares; not one of them dares show himself on the other side of the lines.

"August 3—The French airmen fly over our lines at a height of 600 feet, while not one of ours dares show himself. It is impossible for us to fire, for if we do so we are immediately bombarded with violence. So we have to stand for everything and to lie down in the trenches in a suffocating heat and to suffer thirst and wait to be cut in pieces by shells or buried alive, or, if it please God, to get off safe and sound.

"August 6—Our aviators are inferior to such a degree that they do not stay in the air even at the distance behind the first line at which we now are. Our aviation is mighty inferior to the French and British. Thus, it is impossible to take a step out of the protecting shelter of the wood. All the enemy aviators are almost constantly scouting around our little wood, and sending back signals.

"In aviation we are distinctly inferior, whether we wish to recognize it or not. 'Germany mistress of the air,' that is a statement which is not true at all. This explains the enormous losses which we are making here. There is no one to debarrass us from this scourge of the enemy aviation, which sticks to us without let-up all day long and even into the night.

"This moral defeat has had a very bad effect on us."

SUPERIORITY NOT ACCIDENTAL.

That the superiority thus won is no accidental occurrence, but a part of the wonderful scheme of organization which the French military chiefs undertook to bring about during the respite for preparation which the great victory at the Marne won for them, is now revealed in the publications of the French experts. Mr. Georges Batault has completed a study of the marvellous preparatory organization of the mighty offensive at present under way at the Somme front.

After the hasty and improvised means of resistance which the necessities of the early months forced on the French commanders there have come the scientific method and the new disposition of powerful material handled in a new way, he says in the Paris Journal. The great new war machine was built up behind the immovable barrier of the heroism and spirit of sacrifice of the soldiers and of the genius of the chiefs. He describes the immense workshops covering many square miles of ground behind the Somme front, the new roads, over which endless lines of trucks are constantly moving, the new system of railway lines, the artillery and munitions deposits filled to their utmost capacity, and the guns, from the famous 75s to the giant 400-millimetre cannon and the 400-millimetre howitzers.

"But the newest thing of all," he says, "the most marvellous and the most exxtraordinary in its consequence, is the absolute mastery of the French aviation service, which reigns in uncontested supremacy over all the broad stretch of the Picard sky."

WHY WOMEN WRITE LETTERS

To Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

Women who are well often ask "Are the letters which the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. are continually publishing, genuine?" "Are they truthful?" "Why do women write such letters?"

In answer we say that never have we published a fictitious letter or name. Never, knowingly, have we published an untruthful letter, or one without the full and written consent of the woman who wrote it.

The reason that thousands of women from all parts of the country write such grateful letters to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. is that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought health and happiness into their lives, once burdened with pain and suffering.

It has relieved women from some of the worst forms of female ills, from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, nervousness, weakness, stomach troubles and from the blues.

It is impossible for any woman who is well and who has never suffered to realize how these poor, suffering women feel when restored to health; their keen desire to help other women who are suffering as they did.

Here's Your Hat, We're Very Sorry Greeks To Schenk

Director of German Spies Tells How He Left Athens.

AMSTERDAM, via London, Sept. 26.—The Berlin Lokal Anzieger announces that Baron von Schenk former chief director of German propaganda in Greece, and who was sent out of Greece by the Entente powers, has reached Berlin. In an interview in the Lokal Anzeiger, he is reported as saying:

"Greece now is completely under the thumb of Venizelos, although the people are still our friends. When the gendarmes came to expel me, they wept, saying: 'Excuse us for what we are compelled to do under the stress of circumstances, and for which we are very sorry.'"

REMEMBER THIS.

When ironing fine baby clothes, put powdered orris root between the folds or covering of the ironing blanket.

To remove ink stains on white goods, moisten stain with a little fresh milk, then apply oxalic acid, using the acid sparingly.

When boiling salt meat, if you intend to use the liquor for soup, leave a couple of carrots in the pot and throw in a slice of toasted bread. These will absorb much of the salt.

Any hardware store will sell you rubber dish protectors to put on your kitchen faucets, but you need not go to even that expense. Cut 1 1-2 inches of garden hose and attach a piece to each faucet and avoid chipped dishes.

Machine grease is removed by rubbing a little lard into it. Be sure to have a pad underneath to absorb the carbon, which is instantly set free by the clean fat. After grease is out, wash with warm water and a mild soap.

A good face lotion, softening and whitening, is cocoanut milk. Grate a fresh cocoanut through a thin cloth and add what you get to the milk of cocoanut. A few drops of oil of lavender may be added to make lotion more pleasing.

To make strach for black lawn or other black dye as for colouring, and then bottle it. The starch should not be made quite thin and a little of the dye added to it.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

If you get a fish bone in your throat swallow a raw egg: it will carry it away.

Mignonette, also castor oil plants, are good for keeping the flies out of the house.

Eucalyptus oil will drive away flies. Place a little in a saucer on the window sills.

Carpets infested with moths can be benzolined; or wring out a cloth in hot water, lay over the carpet, and press with a hot iron.

A tablespoonful of turpentine added to a copperful of water in which clothes are boiled will cleanse, whiten and disinfect the garments.

Steel knives, after being used for fish or peeling onions, should have the blades put into the ground for a short time as the earth removes the smell.

After washing oilcloth and linoleum be sure to dry it properly. If left damp it will speedily rot and finally become totally spoiled. It is a great mistake to use too much water for washing it. The cloth should be merely wrung out and passed over the surface.

The raising of drug plants is a distinct specialty and calls for exact knowledge and great skill.

The blood must be filtered, otherwise the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid and poisoned. The home guard

To be in a position to repel attack and to preserve inviolate the home and hearth is the reason for the wide-spread movement of the "Home Guard" throughout Canada.

Certain-teed Roofing

protects homes and other buildings from storms; successfully resists the attacks of rain, hail, sleet and snow; is unaffected by the sharp assaults of frost, and the withering fire of mid-summer sun. It even withstands the ravages of time, for CERTAIN-TEED Roofing is guaranteed for 5, 10 or 15 years, according to ply (1, 2 or 3). Experience proves that it will out-last the period of guarantee.

The long life of CERTAIN-TEED is due to the fact that it does not dry out, as ordinary roofing does. This is because it is made of the best quality roofing felt, thoroughly saturated with a blend of soft asphalts—the formula of the General's Board of Expert Chemists. This soft saturation is then covered with a coating of a harder blend of asphalts, which prevents the drying-out process, and keeps CERTAIN-TEED impervious to the elements for years after the harder, drier kinds of roofing have dried out and gone.

CERTAIN-TEED is made in rolls; also in slate-surfaced shingles. There is a type of CERTAIN-TEED Roofing for every kind of building, with flat or pitched roofs, from the largest sky-scraper to the smallest residence or out-building.

CERTAIN-TEED is sold by responsible dealers all over the world, at reasonable prices. Investigate it before you decide on any type of roof.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Result of a Friendly Game

By EDWARD J. STEWART

One night a number of men in a mining camp sat around a table playing cards for money. A man in a white cravat and other clerical indications entered and said:

"My friends, you're making a great mistake."

"How do you make that out, parson?"

"Drop your game for a few minutes and I will tell you."

The players assented, and the clergyman told the following story:

"Do you see this white necktie? Well, the reason I'm wearing it is because of playing for money with a friend. What occurred turned my attention to using what gifts I possess to fighting evil.

"Young fellows from eighteen to twenty-one are apt to play these little games with each other to pass the time. At that age they have to learn by experience that since no one of them wishes to quit loser the game is endless. When they get older they find it doesn't pay and usually give it up.

"When I was twenty years old I was one of a set of young fellows who played poker in one another's rooms. At first none of us was ever out more than a few dollars at a sitting. But our sittings grew longer and longer. There was always some one of the gang that was loser, and he would invariably oppose breaking up, no matter how late the hour. Not only did our sittings grow longer, but our stakes, our winnings, our losings grew larger.

"On one occasion we came together at 8 o'clock in the evening, and at 6 in the morning we adjourned till 9 o'clock the same evening. One of the party, Dick Collins, was out $30. He seemed quite upset over the loss, for he was a bank clerk on a thousand dollars a year, and his mother needed most of his salary. I was the principal winner and readily assented to giving him a chance to recoup as soon as the day was done. We played all the next night, and, though I gave Dick every chance to get even, my cards ran so strong and he bet so high that instead of winning he lost. At 6 o'clock in the morning he owed me about $600.

"I didn't want his money, and I didn't wish to spend my nights giving him a chance to win it back. I offered to give back all I had won. This made him very angry, and he asked me if I thought him a child to make such a proposition. So I consented that after one night's sleep I would continue the game. I was getting anxious to have him regain what he had lost, for he seemed to be very badly shaken up. So I made up my mind when we came together again to bet high on my low hands and low on my high hands.

"The next time we sat down to play the rest of the party had dropped out. They seemed to think that the game was getting too stiff for them. Dick produced a lot of bills and insisted on playing for cash instead of on tab, as we had been playing thus far. I was surprised, but had enough money to start in with, so I assented. Somehow the cash on the table seemed more tangible than I O U'S, and, though I didn't try to win, I didn't try to lose. The luck continued with me, and Dick was so anxious to win that whenever he had a fair hand he would bet very high, and I was sure to overtop him by one or two points. Once he held three nines to my three tens. Another time I held a pair of queens on three fours, he a pair of kings on three deuces.

"At 3 o'clock in the morning I had won all the cash he had brought with him. He was the worst broken up man I ever saw. His nerves were all on edge.

"'Go home, Dick,' I said, 'and go to sleep. Tomorrow evening we'll dine together, and we'll fix this matter up somehow to your satisfaction. I don't want your money, and I only wish to find out how I can return it to you without trying to lose it to you through the cards.'

"'Oh, that's what you have been doing—trying to lose?' he said angrily. 'If you don't want my money I don't want your generosity.'

"He was so hot that I feared he would strike me. I endeavored to soothe him, but failed.

"'Generosity be hanged!' he kept on bitterly. 'More likely the reason I've lost so heavily to you is that you've been manip'—

"If I hadn't been so young I suppose I might have endured the insult that was coming. I certainly should have done so without resentment, for he and I were intimate friends, and it was the devil speaking through the cards and not Dick. My right arm went out, and Dick went over.

"No sooner had I struck him than I was sorry for what I had done. He rose and was coming for me like a fury when I slipped out through a door behind me and, darting into my bedroom, locked the door. He followed me and after calling me coward and other names went downstairs, and I heard the house door close behind him.

"I went to bed and tried to sleep, but failed. At 6 o'clock I heard the telephone bell ring and on answering the call was informed by Dick's mother that he had shot himself through the heart.

"It turned out that the cash I had won from him he had taken from the bank where he was employed."

The clergyman stepped to the table, took the cards from it and threw them into the fire. Not a hand was raised to prevent him.

HIGH PRICE ERA A BLOW TO ARMY.

Cost of Rations has Increased $6,300,000, Representative Kahn Declares.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Sept. 25.—Condemning the Democratic party as responsible for the recent increases in the cost of living, Representative Julius Kahn, of California, ranking minority member of the House Military Affairs Committee, to-day declared it costs $6,300,000 a year more to feed now than under the rates which prevailed when the Republicans controlled the government.

"In 1913 we were paying twenty-three cents a day per ration for every enlisted man in the United States Army," he said. The ration itself has not been changed for about eight years. The same articles of food that were given the soldiers in 1909 are supplied to them to-day. Acting Quartermaster General H. G. Sharpe who testified before the Committee on Military Affairs, last March, said that for the year 1917 the cost of each ration would be thirty cents.

"Its cost has increased steadily since 1913. Every year saw an increase, until now the ration amounts to thirty cents per day. There are approximately 230,000 men in the regular army and the National Guard at the present time. An increase of seven cents per ration means that the taxpayers of Uncle Sam have to pay $17,500 a day more than they would have had to pay in 1913 to feed Uncle Sam's soldiers.

"At that rate the increased cost to feed the army amounts each month to $525,000, or $6,300,000 per year, more than when the Republicans were in control. But it is not only the food for the army that has increased in cost. The cost of clothing, shoes and equipment generally has gone up in proportion."

When cleaning saucepans in the sink there should be a board in the bottom of the sink to stand the pans on.

YOUNG GERMAN SHOOTS HIMSELF THROUGH HEART

He Quarelled with Parents it is said, Because He Joined C.A.M.C.

WINDSOR, Sept. 26.—Information reached local recruiting headquarters through police channels that Clarence Machtrieb, twenty-one years old, whose home is at Hudson, Michigan, had committed suicide yesterday by shooting himself through the heart.

Machtrieb, who is of German descent, enlisted here with the Army Medical Corps last week. He was given a furlough to go back to his parents' home, and advise them that he had joined the Canadian forces, and was to have returned to his corps.

According to details reaching here, when the young man announced to his parents that he had decided to fight against his Fatherand, because he was an American citizen, and not a German, there was a violent quarrel, the culmination of which was his suicide.

INCOMPARABLE TOMMY.

Parting Jokes of a Badly Wounded Soldier.

"You'll be grieved to hear that cheery, indomitable little Tommy Dodd was rather badly laid out this morning—four or five nasty wounds from shrapnel," writes an officer from the front. "But I think he will pull through all right. He has so much of the will to live, and I am sure a soul so uniformly cheerful as his must make its body easier to heal. I wasn't six paces from him at the time. We were fastening some barbed wire stays on screw standards, which we meant to put out at night. He was as busy as a beaver, as he generally is; a bit nearer to Whizz-bang Corner than was quite wise, when a shell burst low overhead. I got a dozen tiny flicks myself on hands and head, which the M.O. touched up with iodine when he had bandaged Tommy Dodd. But Tommy was badly hit in the thigh, one arm, and the left shoulder. He was parchment colour by the time I got the stretcher-bearers along, and that was only a matter of seconds, and we were close to their little dug-out when it happened. He had lost a lot of blood. But he grinned at me, with a kind of twist in his grin, as I helped lift him into the stretcher. 'Looks almost like Blighty for me, sir, don't it?' Well, even the Boche must hit something sometimes. It's only an outer this time, and look at the thousands rounds when he don't get on the target at all! Sorry I couldn't find them stays, sir. If you send for Dave of number 5 section, you'll find him pretty good at it, sir.' And then turned to the stretcher bearers in front, who had the strap over his shoulder, and was just bracing himself to start off when he had de talking. 'Home, John!' says Tommy, with a little kick of the head which I really can't describe. 'An' be sure you don't exceed the limit, for I can't stand them nasty low perlice courts, an' getting fined.' When we got down to Battalion Headquarters the M. O. told me Tommy Dodd ought by all good rights to have been insensible from the blood he had lost and the shock of those wounds, which were much more than surface wounds. I hope to goodness he pulls through. The battalion would be poorer for it if we lost Tommy."

WANTED A CHANGE.

At a Scottish gathering in the colonies a solitary piper played with a tremendous amount of energy, if not with a great deal of skill. After a particularly strenuous outburst, while the piper was having a short rest, one of the guests approached him. "Thank you very much; that's capital!" he said. "Now, would you mind playing 'The Cock o' the North' for us?" "The Cock o' the North!" exclaimed the piper fiercely. "Man, do ye no ken A've bin playin' it for the last quarter o' an oor?"

Little Boy Nine Months Old HAD DYSENTERY

Dysentery is one of the worst forms of bowel complaint. The pains in the bowels become intense, the discharges occur with great rapidity, and are very often accompanied by blood, and the sufferer becomes very weak and languid.

Unless these discharges are checked, death may ensue in a very short time.

There is only one remedy to use in all cases of dysentery, and that is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It will cure when all other remedies fail.

Mrs. J. Leslie McKee, Redvers, Sask., writes: "I used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my little boy when he was about nine months old. He was awfully bad with dysentery. I had not laid him down for three days and nights, only when his father took him for a few minutes. He had both the diarrhoea and vomiting. I had tried everything until my husband got "Dr. Fowler's, and three doses cured him."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy you want. Don't take any other when you ask for it.

HIGH PRICES ARE WORLDWIDE, SAYS W. C. REDFIELD

WASHINGTON, D.C., Sept. 15.—In the last year the cost of living has increased approximately thirty-five per cent, according to the best figures obtainable by William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce, who gave an interview on the reason for high prices and the prospects for relief. The advance, he explained, is not confined to the United States alone, but is world wide, due, perhaps, to a thousand different things but primarily to the European war. There is slight prospect for a drop until the waste and excessive consumption of foodstuffs, as well as other materials, are stopped.

Almost everybody, except those persons whose salaries are definite, Mr. Redfield believes, is able to adjust himself to the extremely abnormal conditions which prevail. Salaried persons are the hardest pinched in the United States as elsewhere. Farmers, merchants, even mechanics, are able to overcome the increased cost of living, as a general rule, by advancing their own prices.

"It is incorrect to try to assign any single reason to the increase in prices," Mr. Redfield explained.

"Conditions everywhere are abnormal. Half the world is at war, and the whole order of things is upset. It is a very natural consequence that prices should advance as they have advanced. A mere sizing up of the entire situation will convince any one of that.

Denies Power of Combinations.

"There is some talk that the increases are due to combinations which are devised to increase prices. I doubt the truth of that to any great degree. Of course it is possible that some such combinations exist, but no combination in any country ever can be able to jack up the prices of a nation wide commodity. Such a thing is impossible.

"There are two ways to look at the question—from the large point of view or the little point of view. We are too apt to look at it from the little point of view, trying to apply a local cause for a condition that exists throughout the world. We try to apply to local reason for a really complex affair.

"Take the question of wheat for instance. The truth is that there is a shortage in the supply of wheat in the United States. Then, too, the supplies of Roumania and of Hungary are not available. Besides this, the crop of Russia is choked up and we are unable to get relief from it.

"When big crops return to the United States and the supplies of Roumania, Hungary and Russia again are in the open market the price certainly will go down. It is absurd to suppose that any domestic combination could keep up the price, we hear of 'corners in wheat.' 'Corners' at best are only temporary. They can have no effect in the long run.

"Then the question of meat. If our farms were stocked with cattle, and if the same condition prevailed throughout the world, the price would be much more reasonable. But that is not the case. In addition to the shortage in the supply there is an increase in the demand. There are, for example, some twenty odd million soldiers in the field in the war of Europe. Naturally, living the open air, they demand meat, more meat than usual. This is a drain on the supply, responsible to a degree for the present high prices.

"As for clothing, the same is true. The men in the trenches are using more shoes, more suits, more hats, than they do in normal times. The supply of these materials is taxed severely and the prices rise accordingly. There is waste in the war. Every time a shell is fired the materials which went into its making are destroyed. Metals and chemicals are lost. Besides, there is a demand for materials that never were used in such quantities, canvas for tents, gasolene for the great war machines, oil, guns and many other things.

I asked Mr. Redfield if he thought the United States was exporting too much for its own welfare and whether if the exports were reduced prices might get back to normal.

"We are selling at a profit," Mr. Redfield answered. "This increases the wealth of the nation, and we are better able to buy. We should look at it in a large way."

Mr. Redfield, when asked who was getting the large profits from the generally increased prices, replied:

"I am not certain that there are any abnormal profits. Of course, I am not sure there are not. But for the most part I believe the profits are pretty generally distributed among the merchants, the mechanics, the farmers and the others who are able to a large extent to regulate the prices for the commodities they produce or sell. From what I am able to learn about the only person who is tightly pinched is the man who is on a salary which he cannot have increased. It is unfortunate for him.

"What I mean by this is that when the price of one article advances the price of others trail along. It is natural that if the cost of the materials which enter into the manufacture of a certain thing goes up the cost of that article will go up, too. The increase is reflected all along the line."

THE SMOKER OWNED IT.

To a young man who stood smoking a cigar the other day there approached the elderly and impertinent reformer of immemorial legend. "How many cigars a day do you smoke?" asked the licensed peddler in other people's affairs. "Three," replied the youth as patiently as he could. Then the inquisition continued. "How much do you pay for them?" "Threepence," confessed the young man. "Don't you know, sir," continued the sage, "that if you would save that money, by the time that you are as old as I am, you might own that big building at the corner?" "Do you own it?" inquired the smoker. "No," replied the old man. "Well, I do," said the man.

"It's a pleasure to deal with that house by Telephone"

Winning Friends by Telephone

"I HAVE never met that young man face to face," said a business man recently, as he hung up his receiver after a telephone conversation; "but the way he talks over the telephone is typical of the whole organization of that house. They always answer every question in a polite and courteous manner. They never keep you waiting unnecessarily. They all seem to take a personal interest in what you have to say, and you can be sure that your telephone requests will have the most careful attention."

Isn't such an endorsement of your house by those who deal with you by telephone a valuable business asset?

It is well worth while to make sure every employee in your organization appreciates the value to himself and to your house of telephone courtesy.

BRITISH TOILERS

LINCOLN, England — Passing through this beautiful and famous cathedral town, which the American tourists of ante-bellum days found wrapped in an episcopalian calm, the traveler of to-day discovers it literally humming with war activities of many kinds.

Lincoln, with its population of some 30,000 in a manufacturing place whose factories specialise, in peace times in the making of agriculture implements and machinery of every description; now nine out of every ten of them are devoted to turning out war material instead, shells and cartridges, aeroplane and submarine engines, and the monster tractors with their caterpill ar tread for transporting big guns, which are one of the many American inventions that are figuring prominently in the war.

WOMENN BUSY IN WAR WORK.

There is a large militray hospital here, too, and the women of the leisure classes are devoting themselves to nursing, to making hospital necessaries, to looking after the fighting men's dependents, and a dozen other kinds of war work.

Here, as everywhere, one hears tales of the unexampled prosperity of the working classes and of their unbridled extravagance. Men who in normal times were considered highly paid when earning from $10 to $12.50 a week are now making twice and three times that and spending every penny of it.

Boys of 15 and 16 can now make what was paid to a skilled man in times of peace. A leading factory owner here told of one man who, though he was earning $35 a week, quit because he had learned that one other man in the works was getting $2.50 a week more.

WIVES HAVE MERRY TIME

The wives of the Lincolnshire workers, like those of the soldiers and sailors, are having a merry time. This remark of one of the former addressed to another of her class was heard on a street corner.

"My men, between them, bring in 12 pounds a week," she affirmed, 'and really I do have hard work to spend it.'

As to the better halves of the fighting men, like others all over England they are literally having the time of their lives, and a prominent woman assured me are far from wanting to see their men back. The separation allowances that some of them get represent more money than they ever had, especially considering that they have no "man" to feed and clothe.

But in spite of this fact, the day before their money from the state is due generally not only fiuds then penniless but in debt. There was no exaggeration whatever about a recent drawing in a comic paper which represented one of these women as saying to another:

"Let's go to the pictures again tonight. Peace may be upon us at any time."

PEEL OFF YOUR FRECKLES

To remove freckles, blotches or any complexion difficulty, the best thing to do is to remove the skin itself. This is easily and harmlessly done by the application of ordinary mercolized wax. The wax peels off the defective outer skin, a little each day, gradually bringing the second layer of skin to view. The new skin is beautifully soft, clear, white and young looking. Just procure an ounce of mercolized wax at any drug store and use like cold cream.

Do not store ashes in a wooden box, pail or barrel, nor throw them on the cellar floor. They should be kept in metal containers.

Do not allow the rubbish to collect. It is dangerous when allowed to gather near furnace, stoves or placed where it is exposed to a thrown match or a cigar stub

Do not leave matches where children can get them. Have a proper holder out of their reach and do not store your supply in a cupboard unless they are protected in a covered tin box or something similar, and you will eliminate the prospect of mice setting fire to your house.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRTWAIST

By Anabel Worthington

A blouse will often emphasize the smartness of a suit or skirt, and so it is well, when choosing a style, to consider the garment with which the waist will relate.

In the design No. 7,890 the popular frill is prominently featured. Frills are so distinctly feminine that it was easy for them to win first place in the class of waist decorations for the summer season. They offer many possibilities for variety, too, and that is another reason why they will be carried into the fall styles.

In the picture we see that variety is given by having the frill trimmed with bands in contrasting color. The collar is favored in the same way, and the pearl button front closing is more clearly marked with a band running down the centre. The shaped cuffs on full length sleeves also have the bias band to outline them. The shoulder fronts of the waist are gathered at the seams. Long or short sleeves may be used in this design.

With linen, cotton gabardine, soft silks, poplin and similar weaves for a tub waist excellent results may be counted upon.

The pattern of No. 7,890 is cut in sizes 36 to 42 inches bust measure. To make in size 38 will require 2½ yards of 36 inch material, ¾ yard 27 inch goods to trim.

You may obtain the pattern by sending as ... to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Lord Derby On War Situation

LONDON, Sept. 21.—"We are fighting the best organized nation in the world," said Lord Derby, Under Secretary for War, on his return from the front. "Two years ago they had a great chance to win. They still are exceedingly strong in engines of destruction, but we, at least, are even in this respect now, and I cannot help feeling that our men individually are better. So all up to have a distinct margin of superiority.

"We are able to continue to increase the arms, munitions and food of our troops and we will get more men if needed, but no concrete proposal has been made yet to increase the age limit. I cannot say such suggestion finds me unprepared, as before I came to the War Office I announced my policy was in favour of mobilizing every man in the country under the age of 60, so that each could be placed in his proper place, either fighting, making munitions or carrying on the ordinary business of the country.

"Recent raids of the military on stations and places of amusement pretty plainly have proved there are very few slackers left, and that the eligible men under the present compulsion law either are in the army or are properly badged for other work.

"I found every one at the front cheerful. You may rest assured the offensive will be continued. If there seems to be a lull it will be interesting to make a study of the German casualty list. 'Mr. Boche' will not be allowed to go into winter quarters.

Those Terrible Tanks.

"In company with Joffre and Haig I watched the trials of the famous 'tanks,' a sight which provoked unrestrained laughter despite the terrible power they display, crossing trenches, butting their way through wire entanglements and even through groves of trees."

Committee Appointed.

Announcement was made to-day of the appointment of a committee for obtaining more men for the army by the combing out of young men from exempted occupations. This committee, which has been named the man power distribution board, has, as chairman, J. Rusten Chamberlain. Its members include Viscount Midleton, former Secretary for India, and some Labour members of the Commons.

Country Town Sayings

By Ed. Howe of Atchison

When a political convention meets, the delegates always look for a real artist to paint the scenery; they call it writing the platform.

A man who does you a favor never gives as good measure as the man who who is getting even with you.

There never was a husband so fair and generous that his wife's drygoods bills did not annoy him. He may not say anything, but he is a rebel at heart. Every month it is voile, voile. I have bought acres or tons of it, but do not know yet what voile is.

If a man's opinion is not asked within a few minutes, he will give it, anyway.

Did you ever repeat a compliment paid you without exaggerating it a little—compounding the interest, so to say?

It is easier to tell your age to those older than yourself than to those younger.

The HOME CIRCLE COLVMN

A SUBJECT FOR DEBATE.

Has a woman a right to make a fool of herself if a man does? This would make a good subject for debating societies. A man will stay around nights—visit the gambling dens, play poker, and lose money that he ought to spend for the comfort of his family. At the same time the wife is staying home, sitting by a cheerless fire and taking care of a number of children, that she has only a half interest in. The man will visit the saloon, smoke cigars, play the wheels, drink poor whisky, and occasionally go and play with the girls that are not of his own family, while his wife is home trying to save money for the family by patching, darning and going without things for herself and the house. A man at the same time will go out with the boys and spend $25. Is it right? Supposing we turn the tables around and his wife commences to play the fool, for you can call it nothing else, and what will happen? Supposing the wife takes a notion to have a little time of her own? Let her go to the bowling alley, the billiard hall, the saloon, Go off to a convention or some other place with a lot of gay girls and have a good time, spend the money that ought to go toward paying expenses, smoke cigarettes, drink seven different kinds of booze and come home with a bad taste in the mouth, and in a generally stained condition, wouldn't it break every link that binds the Home Circle together? Morally she has just as much right as a man to do these things. She has just as good a right to be a fool as a man, but what would happen if she should? It is easy enough to guess. There would be a divorce and other things too numerous to mention.

OLD FASHIONED MOTHERS

Thank God, some of us have, and others have had, an old fashioned mother. Not a woman of the period—enameled and painted, with her chizon, her curls and bustle; whose white jeweled hands never have felt the clasp of baby fingers; but a dear old-fashioned, sweet-voiced mother, with eyes in which the love light shown, and brown hair threaded with silver, lying smooth upon her faded cheek. Those dear hands worn with toil, gently guided our tottering steps in childhood, and smothered our pillows in sickness; even reaching out to us in yearning tenderness, when her sweet spirit was baptized in the pearly spray of the river. Blessed is the memory of an old fashioned mother. It floats to us now, like the beautiful perfume of some woodland blossoms. The music of other voices may be lost but the entrancing memory of her's will echo in our souls forever. Other places will fade away and be forgotten but her's will shine on until the light from heaven's portals shall glorify our own.

WHAT SHALL I TEACH MY CHILD?

Teach him that it is better to die than to lie; that it is better to starve than to steal; that it is better to be a scavenger or a wood chopper than an idler and a dead beat; that it is just as criminal and reprehensible to waste Monday as to desecrate Sunday; that labor is the price of all honest possessions; that no one is exempt from the obligation to labor with head, hands or heart; that an honest man is the noblest work of God; that knowledge is power; that labor is worship, and idleness sin; that it is better to eat the crust of independent poverty than to luxuriate amid the richest viands as a dependent. Teach him these facts till they are woven into his being and regulate his life, and we will insure his success though the heavens fall.

* * *

Young lady reader, do not smile on the suitor that toasts your fair name. The love which he speaks to you is washed from his lips by the wine. Do not let him pledge his allegiance over the glass of fiery spirits—it is blasphemy; it will be perjury. The wine is dearer to his heart than your sweet face and womanly goodness; he already has a master; he cannot have two. Dream not of conversion after you are his; that pathless route is misery and failure. The man who will not sacrifice his love of drink for the prize of your hand, will not, when it is his in God's name, emancipate himself.

* * *

Who will tell the boy who reads this what he will do? When he becomes a man will he do many things? Will he write, and so be useful and healthful in speech, ready in communication and of strong influence? Say my boy, what are you going to do? What you like to do now, you will likely do by-and-by. Do you swear now? Do you cheat, deceive, lie, steal? Do you do dishonorable things? Are you disrespectful to, or do you disobey, your parents and teachers? Remember, the boy makes the man. If the boy is bad the man will be. Fix it in your mind which you will be.

* * *

Put home first and foremost; for there will come a time when the home circle will be broken, when you long for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still, and when your greatest pleasure will be in remembering that you did all in your power to put a song under every burden, to make each other happy.

"But there's some in the parish that must have had warnin'
An' worshipped elsewhere:
But wherever they were, if their ears wasn't burnin',
Troth, then, it is quare!"
"There are women sez he, 'an' they're here in this parish,
An' plentiful, too,
Wid their noses si high an' their manners so airish,
But virtue so few.
'Tis a wonder they can't see how much they resemble
The proud Pharisee.
Ye would think they'd look into their own souls an' tremble
Such sinners to be,
Not at all! They believe themselves better than others
An' give themselves airs
Till the pride o' them strangles all virtues an' smothers
The good o' their prayers.
"That's the way he wint at them, an' faith, it was splendid—
But wasted, I fear.
Wid the most o' the women for whom 'twas intended,
Not there for to hear.
An' thinks I to myself, walkin' home, what a pity
That Hettie Anna Hayes
An' Cordelia McCann should be out o' the city
This day of all days.
"But, indeed, 'twas a glorious sermon this mornin'," Said Nora O'Hara.

MORE ALLIED GAINS ON SOMME FRONT

CANADIANS ARE AGAIN ENGAGED

Canadians Had A Share In Latest Success On The Somme

Ottawa Believes Forces Which Were Engaged at Courcelette Have Been in the Latest Fighting There and Helped in the Capture of Thiepval---Further Gains For the Allies in the Somme Offensive Are Reported To-day From London.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

OTTAWA, September 27.—There is little doubt that the Canadians were engaged in the most recent fighting on the Somme when the British took Thiepval, and the Allies straightened their line from that point to Combles. The Canadians were attacking Courcelette, and Courcelette is just northeast of Thiepval, on that point of the British line which projected formerly beyond the town and partly around it. The forces at Courcelette must have co-operated with those south of Thiepval to complete the encircling movement which placed the battered town in British hands.

It is altogether likely that the Department of Militia will turn a deaf ear to all demands from small towns to be assigned a number of troops for the winter months.

LONDON, September 27.—British gained new positions on the Somme front to-day. Patrol detachments are in touch with the enemy.

Capture of Thiepval Important Success

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, September 27.—The capture of Thiepval by the British and of Combles by the combined Anglo-French forces, announced in the latest official communications, is regarded here as the most important success on the western front since the opening of the grand offensive.

The fall of the stronghold of Combles was expected. For weeks it had been in progress of encirclement by the British on the north and west and by the French on the south and east. But the capture of Thiepval, which was announced too late for comment in the papers, has proved a genuine surprise, because it has been a stumbling-block in the advance of the British left almost since the beginning of the offensive July 1, when a check at Gommecourt was suffered.

Thiepval's fall gives to the Anglo-French forces the whole line of low hills which slope to the plain upon which the town of Bapaume makes the next fortified centre.

The semi-official accounts of the capture of Combles speak of the large number of the garrison and the great quantities of warlike stores taken. Reuter's official correspondent says:

"This great success was won at very small cost, thanks, in part, to the excellence of the artillery and in part to a real collapse of the German defence."

Reference is also made of the German troops, who are declared in some instances "to have fled from their trenches, throwing away their rifles."

The Times attaches significance to the "breakdown of the German defence, confessed in their account of the Combles battle," and says it means the German general staff is apologizing for the crushing defeat.

The Daily Mail declares that the Anglo-French forces have "accomplished one of the supreme feats of the war in capturing Combles, which the Germans two years ago selected as one of their pivots and fortified it with every art known to man."

DOMINIONS NET DEBT INCREASES 330 MILLIONS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Ont., September 27.—Since the war commenced the net debt of the Dominion has increased by 330 millions. On the other hand in the same period the savings of the people in the chartered banks have considerably increased. It would seem, therefore, that a goodly portion of money which Canada is spending for war is staying in Canada. The Canadian bank statement for August, which has just been issued, shows that the saving deposits in Canada total one and quarter billion dollars.

DETAILS OF GREAT BATTLE ON THE DOBRUDJA FRONT

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BUCHAREST, September 27.—Details of the great battle on the Dobrudja front, which lasted from September 17th to September 19th, and ended, according to General Averesco in the decisive defeat of the German and Bulgarians, are given in an official statement issued by the War Office today. The statement says that the enemy losses were very great, everywhere heaps of corpses were found, and in front of one division alone 5,000 rifles were picked up. The Allies' troops then advanced driving the enemy before them.

Berlin Admits British Gains

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 27. — Without a moment's breathing space, the Allies are pushing their great offensive on the Somme front with renewed vigor, following the capture of Thiepval and Combles. The German War Office this afternoon admitted the loss og Thiepval, and reported that the British have pushed forward on both sides of Courcelette, after suffering heavy losses. The Berlin statement reported no cessation in the furious fighting on the line that once rested on Combles. The Allies continued on the attack last night, but in this sector as well as south of the Somme, all Anglo-French onslaughts were repulsed, the German War Office claims.

LIEUT. ARTHUR ACKERMAN
Who is believed to have been seriously wounded in the recent offensive. A cable from Capt. Munro of Peterborough says Lieut. Ackerman is doing well. He has not been officially reported.

EARLY CLOSING BY-LAW WANTED FOR THE GROCERS

Petition to That Effect Has Been Signed by at Least Three-fourths of the Grocers of the City—Matter Referred to Finance Committee

EIGHTY GROCERS AFFECTED

Unless present plans miscarry, all the grocers throughout the city will be compelled to close their stores not later than seven o'clock each evening and remain closed until five o'clock next morning. A largely signed petition requesting the Council to pass an early closing by-law. If evidence is submitted to show that the by-law is signed by at least three-fourths of the occupiers of grocery stores, the Council will have no alternative but to pass the measure. The law must be passed within one month after the initial steps have been taken.

It was stated that there are in the neighbourhood of eighty grocers in the city, and all but a few of them have signed the petition. The by-law will effect the grocers who have been accustomed to remain open after seven o'clock in the evening.

The matter was referred to the Finance committee, which will meet o Friday evening of this week.

WILL COLLECT PAPER ON OCTOBER 5TH

The Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham are arranging for a collection of old paper to be made on Thursday, October 5th. Some time ago a similar collection was made, and a large sum realised for patriotic purposes. If you have any old papers of any kind, save them and they will be called for. This is a worthy effort and should meet with a substantial response. After the paper is collected it is bundled up for shipment to the paper mills, so that the League is in a position to get the highest price for the commodity. This is one way of helping the boys on the firing line.

No. 73605 Pte. F. G. Waddell, Garden Hill.

Quite a heavy list of Peterborough and district names appears among the casualties announced to-day. Judging from the dates given in the official messages, the casualties were the result of the attack of the Canadians at Courcellette on Sept. 15th.

Lieut. Ackerman.

That Lieut. Ackerman of the 2nd Battalion, has been wounded in the recent offensive is evidenced by cable received by his father, Mr. B. F. Ackerman, from Capt. W. H. Munro, formerly manager of the Peterborough Radial Railway Company, and now with the C. E. F. in France. Capt. Munro's cable was as follows:

"Have seen Arthur. He is serious, but doing well."

Mr. Ackerman has received no official notification from Ottawa as to his son's being wounded. Lieut. Arthur Ackerman enlisted as a private with the 57th's quota to the 1st contingent. He was made a corporal in the 2nd Battalion at Valcartier and received his third stripe after the Canadians had crossed to France. About the first of this year he was given a commission as lieutenant. He was through all the hard fighting at Ypres, Givenchy and Festubert without a scratch. A few months ago he was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry. He is a brother of Major Chas. Ackerman, invalided home, and was a sergeant in the 57th when war broke out.

Lieut. Leonard Frazer.

The name of Lieut. Leonard Fraser appears in to-day's list as wounded. This is thought to be Leonard Fraser, formerly of the C.G.E. staff, who enlisted here with the 21st Battalion as a private, and was made sergeant at Kingston. 21st boys invalided home from France state that he was to receive a commission as lieutenant. Lieut. Frazer was a member of the George street Methodist church choir and boarded at 274 Sherbrooke street. His next of kin resides in Toronto.

Sergt. R. C. Custance.

Word was received this morning that No. 59210 Sergt. Robert Cecil Custance, formerly of 276 Wolfe street, who went overseas with the 21st Eastern Ontario Battalion, is officially reported admitted to No. 10 General Hospital at Rouen on Sept. 16th, suffering from a gun shot wound in the fore arm. Sergt. Custance was one of the well known Peterborough non coms in the 21st, enlisting with the 57th Regiment's 2nd contingent quota in September, 1914, and was a close personal friend of Sergt. Fred Thomas, killed in action some time ago. Sergt. Custance, before enlisting, was an employee of the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Co.

Corp. C. G. Lightheart.

Mrs. Sarah Jane Lightheart, 221 Rink street, received word from Ottawa last night that her son, Pte. George Christopher Lightheart, who went overseas with the 39th Battalion, is officially reported wounded and admitted to No. 32 Stationary Hospital, Wimereux, on Sept. 18th, wounded in the right foot. Corp. Lightheart enlisted here with the 39th Battalion early in 1915 and went to England with the 39th. At Sandling Camp he was made a sergeant, but threw up his stripes to go to the front with a draft to the 26th Battalion. Afterwards he was promoted to corporal in France.

Pte. Alfred George Spiller.

Miss Ethel Phipps, 126 Lansdowne street, received a telegram this morning from Ottaw to the effect that Pte. Alfred George Spiller, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported admitted to No. 26 General Hospital at Etaples, on Sept. 16th, suffering from a gun shot wound in the hand. There is an interesting story about Pte. Spiller's enlistment. He was a great friend of Pte. Arthur Phipps, a Peterborough boy who went overseas with the 2nd Battalion, and who is now home, discharged as the result of injuries sustained at Langemarck. Pte. Spiller boarded at the Phipps' home, and in the early days of the war made the resolve that if Pte. Phipps was wounded or killed he would immediately enlist. Accordingly, when word came from Ottawa in May of last year that Pte. Phipps was wounded, Spiller enlisted the same day and went to Kingston with a draft from the 57th Regiment to the 59th Battalion. He went overseas with a draft from the 59th and was transferred to another battalion at the front. Pte. Spiller is twenty-seven years old and had no previous military experience.

THIEPVAL CAPTURED BY BRITISH FORCES

PTE. HORACE J. HILL
With B Company, 93rd Battalion.

Allies Have Registered a Uniform Gain of More Than a Mile Along a Fourteen Mile Front and Inflicted Great Losses on Enemy

MORE GAINS EXPECTED

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The French and British continued their latest and greatest stroke on the Somme to-day, winning two of the most decisive successes yet attained on this front. Combles and Thiepval, for which they have been fighting for more than two months, to-night are in their hands, together with the whole powerfully organised field system in the Thiepval sector and further strong sections of the German third line to the south and east, including the village of Gueudecourt. The French left the British right wings established contract at Combles, flattening out the German salient there, while further along their line the French captured Fregicourt and the greater part of a strongly-organized wood west of the St. Vaast forest.

The allied army has taken more than 2,700 prisoners in the two days of fighting, has registered a uniform gain of more than a mile along the greater part of a 14-mile front, and has inflicted what are described as colossal losses on the Germans.

THE CAPTURE OF COMBLES

Combles, the pivotal point in the German line guarding the approach to Bapaume, on the north, and Peronne, on the south of the Somme front, fell before the terrible attacks of the French and British, the Germans fighting to the death or surrendering when there was no longer hope. French and British troops swept in from three sides after their capture of Morval and Fregicourt, broke through the German defences, overran the town and carried all before them. This place, with is marvelous subterranean passages and powerful fortifications, had been caught in the grip of the allies, who, coming from the north and the south, had already advanced far beyond it and cut off communication with the rear except a narrow strip, which was covered by the allies' guns. At the end of the fighting the town was filled with the bodies of Germans who had fallen fighting, the French official statement says:

Prior to the loss of Combles the effect of the victories of the French and British armies, in the capture of important strategic points on the previous day, was reflected in the official communication issued by the German War Office, which, after describing briefly the great artillery bombardment of the Entente allies, lasting four days, and the attack between the Ancre and the Somme, admits that "the conquest of the villages on the line of Gueudecourt must be recognized," and adds: "But before all we must think of our heroic troops, who faced the united Anglo-French principal forces and the massed employment of material of the whole world's war industry, prepared during many months."

FALL OF THIEPVAL

Around Thiepval, at the north-western end of the British line, many hard battles have been fought since the inception of the great Entente offensive on July 1. Gen. Sir Douglas Haig's men after capturing Thiepval drove on eastward and took the Zollern redoubt, a strongly fortified position which lies between Thiepval and the bend in the British line at Courcelette.

The French likewise advanced beyond Fregicourt and captured the wood between that village and Morval and the greater part of the German fortified positions lying between this wood eastward across the Bethune road to the western portion of the German line of communication to the south from Bapaume.

The German casualties in the fighting are declared by Paris to have been heavy, and, in addition, during the two days' fighting more than 1,200 Germans were made prisoners by the French, while the British took in excess of 1,500. Large quantities of booty, including machine guns, were taken by the Entente allies.

MAYOR DUFFUS WILL ARRANGE FOR A PUBLIC MEETING

Second Appeal From the British Red Cross Society For Funds—Need Is Much Greater This Year —Method of Raising Money Will Be Discussed at a Public Meeting

PREVIOUS GRANT

Mayor Duffus has been deputed to arrange a time and place for a public meeting to be held in the interests of the British Red Cross Society A second appeal for funds has been made and Peterborough has been invited to share in a Dominion wide effort to raise a substantial amount for this work. Last year the City Council made a direct grant of five thousand dollars, while over three hundred dollars was raised by private subscription. The appeal comes through in the form of a proclamation from the Lieutenant-Governor the people of Ontario. The need much greater this year, and an effort is being made to raise a much larger amount throughout the Dominion October 19th has been set aside as the date on which the campaign will open and close.

Methods of raising money will be discussed at a public meeting.

LADIES INVITED

All ladies interested in the welfare of the neglected children of the city and county, are urged to meet at the Bank of Montreal chambers Friday at 3.30 p.m. Their presence is urgently requested. Joseph Wearing, Secretary Children's Aid Society. 2d-72

No Chances With Public Property

In this case, the unexpected happened. When the Board of Education took over the Cooney property on Sherbrooke street next to the South Central school, the legal selling agent had cancelled the insurance. They told Secretary Harry Thompson he wouldn't need it anyway as the Board was going to sell the house and barn in a few days. Mr. Vincent Eastwood was out of the city, and Mr. Thompson played safe by putting three hundred dollars insurance on the property. Mr. Eastwood returned the next day and while he agreed that the Board would soon be rid of the buildings he concurred with Mr. Thompson's action, and on Saturday last the insurance was retained. On Monday afternoon the barn was destroyed by fire and the insurance covering was real money for the Board. Last night the tenders for the property were opened and the house will be moved in the near future.

The Toledo Housewives' League will organise and go before council in protest against the recent 20 per cent increase in the price of food, which they claim is not justifiable.

THE MESSAGE OF THE MEN

"I asked the men as I left the trenches if they had any message they desired me to convey to those at home," said Mr. Rowell. "They gave me two. There was no thought of self. The messages were: "Take good care of the wounded men who come home,' and 'Send us more and more men.'"

LIGHT BREAKING IN.

Not only are the Entente Allies breaking in on all the fronts of combat upon the Teutonic defensive lines, but the effect of these successes upon the course of the war is intensified by the fact that the light of these facts has begun to break in upon the people of Germany. For more than two years the people have been kept in darkness. The progressive defeat of the German assault on humanity has not only been concealed from the people, but the latter have been systematically and officially deceived—fed with lies. But the truth is at last filtering in, and we are told that there is deep gloom in Berlin. The people have been told that the Zeppelin raids have almost destroyed England, and that her complete extinction was imminent. But the complete destruction of two of the latest and greatest super-Zeppelins, under public and spectacular circumstances, made concealment impossible, and now the people learn that the most, the costly Zeppelins have accomplished, has been the murder of a few women and children. The tremendous smashes the Allies have administered on the Western front have, till of late, been reported to the people as victories. That day is over. Berlin officially admits "an extensive allied advance," and when the whole truth reaches the German people the revulsion of feeling will be tremendous, and the patience with which the German people have submitted to hardships and privation will turn to rancour, and the war lords will be called to stern account. The morale of the German armies has been impaired, their spirit broken, and when this becomes known to the people there will be bloody wigs on the green. Light is not only breaking in on the German people, but on the hills we see the sun of victory rising in glorious splendor.

THE WAR LOAN.

The double success of the war loan—subscribed twice over—is very gratifying. It is commented upon appreciatively by Old Country financiers, and the London Times says it is accepted as evidence of Canadian patriotism. That may be correct, but to be honest with ourselves, was it patriotism to the country and empire and the cause, or was it loyalty to ourselves? The war loan was a most attractive one in its terms and character, with a handsome rate of interest, and the best possible security. But if any large proportion of the funds invested in the loan were withdrawn from the government savings banks where they were earning three per cent., and re-invested to earn 5½ per cent., the Government was made to pay an almost double rate of interest, and was penalized, rather than patriotically helped: for they already had the use of the money at a cheap price.

The most gratifying feature of the loan was the evidence of Canada's confidence in our country, in the Empire, and in the triumph of our arms in the war. It was evidence also of unexampled national prosperity—abundance of employment at high wages. We would add to our creditable record in the matter of the loan, if there were the same general anxiety to help the war manifested by the offer of the services of Canadians in the fighting ranks. We have done well in recruiting soldiers, and our recruits have done splendidly—shown themselves to be amongst the best, the most resourceful fighting troops in the world. We are proud of them, as we are proud of our war loan; for one reason, because we have doubly underwritten it. But we should have greater cause for pride if we had doubly, or even fully, recruited the 500,000 men we engaged to raise for war. We have contributed a big bag of silver bullets; now we must get ourselves together, get more men to make use of them. The silver bullet gets its full effectivness only when there is adequate provision for making it reach the target.

GET AT THEM IN THE RIGHT WAY.

Mr. N. W. Rowell since his return from the front, where he came into contact with Canadian soldiers on active service, has made two public utterances, and the burden of both has been that the message from the men at the front is, "send us more men." This should be as a clarion call to both people and government. Some of the people have done nobly. They have enlisted to the number of 364,928 and we need 145,082 to complete our total of 500,000 Canadian soldiers, which the country, through the government, has promised. How are we going to get them? There is only one way, and that is by men offering; and there are two ways to stimulate this action, directer and more convincing appeal to men, and this involves more sympathetic attitude and effective organization by the government.

There should be enough available young men in Canada to make up the balance between the actual forces enlisted and those promised. Raising an army is no more an automatic process than winning battles. If the government and the people at home had done half as well in doing their duty at home as the soldiers Canada sent have done in winning battles, our 500,000 total would have been completed long ago. The fact is recruiting has been largely left to itself of late and it is time that the government—in the third year of the war—should take the duty of recruiting seriously. Now that the real crop of patriots has been reaped—the men of the real stuff enlisted, the work is the more difficult, but not so difficult that it cannot be helped by systematic effort such as has not yet been authoritatively made. The Toronto News, apparently more anxious to defend the government for its shortcomings in the matter of recruiting, than to promote recruiting, says:

"There ought to be less denunciation of the government over the voluntary system of recruiting or frank and courageous advocacy of conscription by the Liberal newspapers."

If there has been "denunciation of the government," it has not been confined to Liberal newspapers. Conservative papers, and thousands of men at heart interested in recruiting who have done their best in a private capacity to promote its interests, are discouraged over the situation and are disappointed, and more or less disgusted, with the inaction of the government, in the matter of dealing with the recruiting problem in a systematic and thorough way. If it is claimed that the government has done this, we would be obliged to the News to offer some evidence to that effect.

There has been, however, as a matter of fact, no "denunciation of the government over the voluntary system of recruiting," for in practice the government has left the voluntary system severely alone. If any "denunciation of the government" is due, it is on the head of not having given the voluntary system a fair trial—not having given it effective official support. Nobody wants conscription if it can be avoided; and it is not wise to talk of conscription without having given the voluntary system a chance to show its quality. What the voluntary system requires, is official recognition—not academic, but effective. Thorough organization as the basis of systematic method applied to recruiting is demanded; and with those provided and with the cooperation of the patriotic leagues, who, even if they have, virtually off their own bat, apart from the spirit of the men, earned the chief credit for success in recruiting, are still willing and anxious to continue doing their bit, we shall see results. There certainly are left in Canada 145,000 young men who are fit to fight, and would enlist if got at in the right way.

FEARS GERMAN IMPOSITION

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands, Sept. 12.—In the Amsterdamener, Professor von Hamel, the distinguished authority on law, describes the bringing of some thousands of German children to Holland as the latest moral puzzle that confronts the Dutch nation. He says it would indeed be a terrifying prospect if Holland, in order to escape the imputation of unmercifulness, had to provide lodging for some hundreds of thousands of German women and children. He continues:

"To act in such a way as a restaurant for Germany, no is suffering under the starvation war, could not easily be considered as in accord with our striving after unimpeachable neutrality. It would expose us immediately of itself to scarcity of food, and, moreover, pretty certainly put a stop to imports from the Allies. While the Allies render possible imports for our own internal consumption, it would be too much of a good thing to permit all Germany to come here and eat in Holland.

"But still there is a great difference between such a case and the simple fact that a couple of thousand hungry and underfed German children are well treated here for a short time. • • • It must be remembered, however, that there exists a great difference between friendly philanthropy and organized evasion of the starvation policy of the Allies. For the present we see in the entire plan simply and solely the first, (friendly philanthropy,) and we expect, too, that it shall continue such."

HARRY LAUDER'S BAD LUCK.

Housekeeping Expenses Go Up and He's Out of Work.

Mr. Harry Lauder has given the London Evening News his reason for going into revue—"to try to make a few shillin's."

"When we came home from America," he said, "and found how frightfully the prices of food had risen, I added a shillin' a week to my wife's housekeepin' allowance, and when prices continued to rise I added threepence now and threepence again—we can't all be economical—till I'm now giving her two shillin's a week more than before the war.

"It's awful. And here I am doing no work! I don't know what's to be come of us all unless I get into employment.

"We eat a lot of sugar and salt, and that costs more money. Then our canary's a heavy eater, and the price of canary seed has gone up at an appalling rate."

Anglo-French Air Supremacy More Destructive Than Zeppelins

The London correspondent of the Herald cables as follows: The Zeppelin raids of London, with its loss of two super-Zeppelins and the infliction of no military damage whatever, and the dramatic air battles now proceeding on the western front, serve again to call attention to the fact that air fighting, scouting and raiding exploits are of the utmost importance in these decisive days of the war.

The statement contained in cable despatches some weeks ago that the French and British airmen were systematically blinding the scouting eyes of the Prussian army on the Somme, now receives official confirmation. In a British official communication summing up the main features of last week's fighting, occurs the statement that during that week: "In the battle area only fourteen hostile aeroplanes have been reported as crossing our lines, while our machines have made between two and three thousand flights across the enemy's lines." This condition of affairs, which is recognized by military observers as of the utmost importance to the future of the conflict between the forces of the allies and of the central powers, is now beginning to affect in a serious manner the morale of the troops of the army group of Prince Rupprecht, who are endeavoring to resist the onslaught of the armies of General Foch and General Haig.

An interesting document in this connection is the diary of a Prussian officer captured at the Somme, extracts from which are published and the authenticity of which is vouched for.

The entries regarding aviation are as follows: "August 1, 1916: Our aviators are like hares; not one of them dares show himself on the other side of the lines.

"August 2.—The French airmen fly overfour lines at a height of 600 feet, while not one of ours dares show himself. It is impossible for us to fire, for if we do so we are immediately bombarded with violence. So we have to stand for everything and to lie down in the trenches in a suffocating heat and to suffer thirst and wait to be cut in pieces by shells or buried alive, or, if it please God, to get off safe and sound.

"August 6.—Our aviators are inferior to such a degree that they do not stay in the air even at the distance behind the first line at which we now are. Our aviation is mighty inferior to the French and British. Thus, it is impossible to take a step out of the protective shelter of the wood. All the enemy aviators are almost constantly scouting around our little wood and sending back signals.

"In aviation we are distinctly inferior, whether we wish to recognize it or not. "Germany, mistress of the air,' that is a statement which is not true at all. This explains the enormous losses which we are making here. There is no one to debarass us from this scourge of the enemy aviation, which sticks to us without let-up all day long, and even into the night.

"This moral defeat has had a very bad effect on us."

That the superiority thus won is no accidental occurrence, but a part of the wonderful scheme of organization which the French military chiefs undertook to bring about during the respite for preparation which the great victory at the Marne won for them, is now revealed in the publications of the French experts. Georges Battault has completed a study of the marvellous preparatory organization of the mighty offensive at present under way at the Somme front.

"After the hasty and improvised means of resistance, which the necessities of the early months forced on the French commanders there have come the scientific method and the new disposition of powerful material handled in a new way," he says in the Paris Journal. The great new war machine was built up behind the immovable barrier of the heroism and spirit of sacrifice of the soldiers and of the genius of the chiefs. He describes the immense workshops covering many square miles of ground behind the Somme front, the new roads, over which endless lines of trucks are constantly moving, the new system of railway lines, the artillery and munitions deposits filled to their utmost capacity, and the guns, from their famous 75's to the giant 340-millimetre cannon and the 400-millimetre howitzers.

"But the newest thing of all," he says, "the most marvellous and the most extraordinary in its consequences, is the absolute mastery of the French aviation service, which reigns in uncontested supremacy over all the broad stretch of the Picardy sky."

ODD SUPERSTITIONS THAT STILL PREVAIL

Salutes From Warships, Eggs for Hatching, Etc.—Why?

It has been wisely remarked that an ancient and universal belief is not to be ignored; odd numbers have always and everywhere been held in peculiar reverence, and if that is more superstition, then it only proves that, despite our civilization, we are still superstitious. A hen is always given an odd number of eggs to be hatched. Why? There is no reason at all, except superstition.

Salutes from warships, forts, etc., are always given in odd numbers, yet no valid reason can be adduced. It is a remnant of the old "odd numbers are lucky' superstition.

Virgil records all sorts of charms and spells practised round odd numbers—never even ones. Seven is the favourite Biblical number, and old divines taught that it held a mystical perfection. It is an odd number.

Physicians of other days always insisted that "bleedings" should be in odd numbers—one, three, five, etc., and never an even one.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertizing columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

MILLION DOLLARS LOSS BY FIRE IN NEW YORK VILLAGE

Eighty-Two Buildings Are Destroyed; Pumping Station Among the First.

SYRACUSE, Sept. 26.—Fire wiped out the entire business district and more than half the industrial section of the village of Phoenix, causing a loss of more than $1,000,000. One person is known to have perished. Eighty-two buildings were destroyed.

The fire raged without check for fifteen hours, and the volunteer department was rendered practically helpless by the early destruction of the water pumping station, which adjoined a power plant in which the flames originated from a hot journal, village authorities stated.

Not a store of any description remains, and the people to-night were confronted with a serious problem of food supply.

Phoenix is sixteen miles north of Syracuse, and the majority of its population of 1,800 was employed in the mills and factories.

Among the buildings destroyed were the Sweet Bros.' paper mill, the Duffy silk mill, Burrough paper mill, Phoenix National Bank building, several chair factories, large warehouses, the postoffice, four hotels, and a church.

ONLY STANDARD HOTELS MAY SELL SOFT DRINKS

Something For Local Restaurant Proprietors to Ponder Over --License Inspector Stewart May Look Into the Matter --Extract From the Act.

Local restaurant proprietors will most likely find themselves guilty of the offence of illegally selling two and a half per cent. beer, soft drinks, cigars and cigarettes.

According to the wording of section 146, sub-section 6 of the new Ontario Temperance Act, none but Standard hotels are permitted to traffic in the above mentioned articles. License Inspector Stewart has been studying this section of the Act and it is altogether probable that he will investigate.

Sub-section 5 of the Act provides that hotels with Standard licenses shall be entitled to sell all non-intoxicating drinks and beverages, as well as cigars and cigarettes. But sub-section 6 states that "the keeper of any hotel, inn or house of public entertainment not licensed as a Standard hotel, shall not sell or traffic in any of the articles mentioned in the preceding sub-section, and any such keeper who violates this section shall be guilty of an offence under this Act, and shall on conviction be liable to a penalty not exceeding $10 and costs."

New York "Times", Pays Tribute To The Work of Kitchener's Army

A neutral's generous tribute to the gallantry, intrepidity and self sacrifice of Kitchener's army recently appeared in the editorial columns of the New York Times. The writer taunts the malevolent critics of Britain's civilian armies with the sarcasm they had fashioned at Britain's expense. The editorial, in part, follows:

"Where they had been pushing the Germans back by the yard, they are now pushing them back by the mile. It is not due to any langour in the German defence, either, for The Associated Press reports show that the Kaiser's men are doing their best, which all the world now knows to be a doughty best. The Germans are being beaten back because they cannot stand. Some of the scientific German critics reported that the new British Army was not the equal of the old one almost wiped out at the beginning of the war. If this is true, the old army must have been superhuman; or perhaps the scientific German critics were wrong.

The nature of the ground makes no difference; when they occupy advantageous crests the British drive the Germans before them and then descend and fight on the slopes with the same result. Everywhere the Germans give way before them, not because they have weakened their resistance for strategic reasons, but because after fighting their heartiest there is nothing left for them but [illegible] wonderful defence is the new British invention, born of necessity, the armored car that can ride over chasms. But it is not any scientific invention that has driven the Germans back, it is the manhood of the United Kingdom and its colonies, maligned by stay-at-home critics for two years and now giving a terrific answer.

"England will fight to the last Frenchman." "Everybody fights but John Bull." What has become of those comfortable slurs from easy chairs and typewriter desks? It was so easy to make them, while a democratic nation with a little army, caught unprepared because its people had been afraid of "militarism," was seeing its reviled soldiers die in vain. It has taken that democratic nation long to raise an army equal to Germany's under fire, but no longer than it would take another democratic and unmilitary nation—say, for instance, the nation from which so many of those easy slurs have come.

The "contemptible British Army" has become the terrible British Army. In vain the Kaiser stirred his men "to prove once more that Germany is invincible." Before the slow British the Germans are giving miles where they once gave yards. "Your duty is to break the English offensive," but the duty is unfulfilled, and it is the German defensive which is being broken. It will give way faster soon, for the rate of speed of an advance like this does not remain stationary; it bears compound, not simple, interest. That has already been proved by yards which became miles. Where a mile is taken to-day three miles may be taken soon, five miles after that. There is nothing mysterious in this. The inner defenses are not as strong as the outer ones and become less so the further the invaders go; and as the speed of the advance increases it becomes more and more difficult to strengthen the last defenses, because there is not so much time to perfect them. There will soon be no need for the French to destroy their own cities, because they and the British will be going so fast they can be taken without that.

The French have had praise, deserved and plentiful, for their heroism. It is well to spare a little for the creation of the dead Kitchener irresistible in its might, prodigious in its courage, terribly avenging on the Germans the sneers of neutrals.

GRACE McLAUGHLIN WILL FIGHT ENDED

New York, Sept. 26.—Relatives of Mrs. Grace McLaughlin Stevens, who eloped last December with George M. Stevens, a chauffeur, and married him on her deathbed in Havana, yesterday withdrew objections to the probate of her will in the Surrogate's Court. In that document she left approximately $250,000 to her husband. It is understood that a settlement has been effected between Stevens and the seven uncles and aunts of the deceased, who lived in Ireland and who began the contest. The terms could not be learned, however.

Mrs. Stevens was the daughter of William P. McLaughlin, long an inspector of the police department, from whom she inherited the fortune. When she disappeared last December she took with her $50,000 and jewels worth $4,000. Stevens, who at the time was awaiting the signing of a final decree of divorce from his first wife, married Miss McLaughlin, April 10, just before she died. The will was drawn immediately afterwards. In it Mrs Stevens left $1,000 to her aunt, Mrs Katherine Ingles, and the remainder to her husband.

The French have a great preference for plain salads of romaine, endive or chicory, as well as lettuce. Watercress is another good relish. Cold beans, peas, fish or asparagus may each be served on lettuce leaves with a simple dressing.

MANIAC LEAPS TO DEATH FROM HOME OF MR. I. WORMSER

"WANTED TO SEE WHAT IT WAS LIKE TO BE RICH," DYING STATEMENT.

New York, September 26.—A man who had been walking nervously up and down in front of the residences of wealthy families in Fifth Avenue, suddenly turned in at the home of Mr. Isidore Wormser, at No. 836, ran up the few steps and threw a large stone through the glass panel of the main door. Reaching through the opening he turned the catch and the door opened.

Inside were the butler and four maids preparing the house for the return of the Wormser family from their country home in New Jersey. They were startled by the smashing of the glass and the unexpected entrance of the intruder. He paused a moment as he saw the servants in the dining room and then strated running upstairs pursued by Emily Essig, a maid, and Nicholas Hersdorff, the butler.

The breaking of the glass had attracted the attention of James McDevitt, special watchman at Frank J. Gould's home, a few doors away, and of others in the avenue. McDevitt ran to the Wormser home, heard the maids screaming and blew his police whistle.

Opposite the Wormser home and inside Central Park is the Arsenal station and there Policeman Fred Lohmeier and others heard the whistle and went bounding over the Park wall into Fifth avenue. Streams of automobiles were going north and south at the time and they quickly were halted by the blast and soon the avenue was alive with excitement, with the crowds increasing rapidly.

FLEES TO THIRD STORY.

The intruder continued his flight to the third floor of the Wormser home, where he ran into a front bedroom. Apparently he was cornered. The butler, entering, demanded:

"What do you want in this house?"

Emily Essig, who was following the butler, ran to an adjoining room and obtained a glass of water, which she gave to the butler and he handed it to the man, who had then seated himself in a luxurious armchair. He drank it in two or three gulps, and then said in a tone of authority:

"Now, get me a chicken."

WHISTLE STARTLES INTRUDER.

It was just then that the Gould watchman blew his police whistle down in the avenue. The intruder heard it and seemed to be frightened. The butler started down the stairs to admit the police.

The man rose from the deep cushioned chair and ran to the window, throwing up the sash. He looked down and saw the policemen scampering over the park wall and running toward the Wormser home. As he started to climb out the window, the maid overcame her fright sufficiently to run towards him, intending to seize and hold him.

"Don't touch me or I will take you with me!" he cried.

Seventy feet below the police and others were just mounting the steps to enter the house when the man's body came hurling out the window, and dropped to the stone flagging among them.

By that time the avenue was clogged with automobiles and there was much excitement among their occupants, most of them containing men and women in evening clothes on their way to the theatres. The police got an automobile truck and in it the man was hurried to the Presbyterian Hospital where it was found that both legs were broken and that he had suffered internal injuries. He died two hours later.

The man said that he was Thomas Kenny, 34 years old, of No. 115 Willow avenue, the Bronx, and when asked why he entered the Wormser House he said:

"I've been poor so long I just wanted to see how it felt to be rich but this shows that a poor man has no chance even for that."

Peterborough, Sept. 27, 1916.

Re night soil. What would Citizen suggest regarding night soil by-law? The City Council employed a contractor to remove night soil at seven dollars per night, charging citizens 15 cents per month, payable at the Sanitary Inspector's office. Some paid, some did not. Said contractor averaged thirty places per night, for which the city should receive, if citizens all paid their 15 cents, the grand total of $4.50 for the contractor, one team of horses and one man, the man's wages being $2.50 per night, leaving the contractor and his team the magnificent sum of $2.00 per night.

Council, losing money, kicked.

Contractor kicked, wanted more money.

Obliging Council tries another scheme, licenses scavengers for each division, under the supervision of the Sanitary Inspector at 40c. per month, contractor to collect the money himself. New contractor buys outfit, hires two men at two dollars per night with board. Average work being done 26 places. Total ten dollars. Contractor for making two visits to premises, or at least once, to locate work, and in many cases four or five times for his money. Would citizen like a like plum?

One Who Does Know.

Peterborough, Sept. 26, 1916.

To the Editor of the The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I read the letter last night in the Examiner that some gentleman put in about this rotten price, 40 cents a month for this night work. I say every man to be on hand next Monday night and fetch a good big club or stick with him too. I for one will be there, and I can fetch twenty-one on my street that is sour on the Council for making such a by-law. I would not of kicked at Mr. Stratton's price, which was 20c a month. He said that was a big price and so it is.

I saw in a letter where one lady had paid in advance. If she has that much money, hand it over to me, I will look after it for her.

She must remember there are two bad pays—pay beforehand, and not at all.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I remain,

RATEPAYER.

MEERSCHAUM PIPES MADE IN AMERICA

Meerschaum pipe making is one of the most interesting processes of the American mid-west. In normal times, the meerschaum comes from abroad. Just now, that export trade has stopped, the pipe makers of Cincinnati get it from others at home—wherever it may be bought. It is shipped in white blocks, resembling ivory. But the substance is considerably whiter than the usual elephant-tusk is and very much lighter. In fact, the lightness of a given block of meerschaum is astonishing.

Handled for American manufacturers largely through New York commission houses, most of the best meerschaum is brought from Turkey in Europe. It arrives in little chests, or kasten, within which each separate piece of the substance is found securely wrapped in cotton. Such meerschaum is paid for by the number of pieces. Curiously enough, the dealers prefer small pieces to large, since it takes an expert cutter to know how to cut such with minimum amount of waste. Skilled meerschaum cutters out of a job are not easy to find.

Cutting the meerschaum—the first step in pipe manufacture—is done with an ordinary saw. A good workman can cut the forms for perhaps two dozen pipes from the raw material in a single working day. As cut, these rough forms are thrown into cold water to soak. In the water they are left until the supply desired is cut up and the man ready to go on with the pipes.

Rudely resembling the ultimate pipe, each form is taken in hand and a hole drilled into the pipe-head. Into this hole—the future "bowl" of the pipe—a plug, on a nearby lathe, must fit. With the embryo pipe mounted on this "shaping" is begun.

That we of to-day should still find use for the rush of the wayside brook is indeed interesting. For the next step in the process old fashioned rushes are used—cut into slits and employed for polishing the pipes. Usually the rushes are moistened for such use. They impart a polish which, it appears, cannot be otherwise obtained.

Neatly shaped and polished, your meerschaum pipe must be subjected to still another process. The pipe is boiled in common bee's wax, because no piece of meerschaum in the raw state will "color" as smokers require.

After this boiling the pipes are permitted to cool. Then they are given another polishing—that time with cotton flannel sheets and prepared chalk. Even that does not suffice. There must still go to that pipe a final hand-polishing, done with alcohol.

From the time of starting a pipe until its completion, a half day's steady labour of the most skilful workmen is required.—"Popular Science Monthly".

A somewhat defuddled individual, who had evidently been lunching a trifle too freely, climbed on board the car with difficulty.

"What's the matter?" he asked, mildly, as he observed the conductor's impatience. "Ain't this car the one I want?"

"How do I know whether it is or not?" growled the conductor.

"Oh, you must have known it, or you wouldn't have stopped to let me catch it," said the befuddled one.

Adopted Soldier Thinks Great Deal of His Young Benefactress

(By Elisabeth Irwin)

When Private Gene Perrault, the name is fictitious for obvious reasons, of the 77th, wasn't drunk; he was a cynic. His profanity was all-embracing, but he could never finance more than his own thirst. So, when he left to enlist, his niche in the home town immediately straightened out, and the folks affectionately observed that at least he'd stop a bullet, and forgot him.

The next day he drifted into an Ottawa recruiting station. They tried him out, signed him up, and put him into khaki, and the space after "next of kin" was left blank.

In camp the only thing he had in common with the other boys was a desire to get overseas and his uniform. When he went to town he went alone. At first he was a curiosity, but in a few days he became a fixture, and the battalion disregarded him with the same lack of concern his home folks manifested.

MAXIMUM CHARM

When he fell ill and was taken off to the hospital, the report showed an empty cot in the tent, and the physician looking him over remarked, "Poor devil". But that was all.

As a matter of routine his name was sent to a society that has made a business of aiding friendless Tommies when they were ill or wounded, and a young lady of diminutive stature, but maximum charm, was directed to add him to her list of dependents.

Two days in the hospital and he had demoralized the ward. When his gloom didn't push the sun right out the window, the sulphuric fumes from his soliloquies, the nurses declared, would necessitate gas masks for the other patients, unless he was removed. The first time "Miss Encouragement" approached him she brought flowers.

CHEERING HIM UP.

He surveyed her for a moment, and then graciously queried, "What in h— do I want with those?"

"Save them. If you die, you'll need them for your coffin?"

"Well, I'll be d————l. You're cheerful, mademoiselle."

Irish wit had saved the situation. Until the day the battalion left he kept pretty straight, but a final visit to all his old haunts did for him and his discretion, and he turned up at the lady's door shortly before time for the train to leave for the embarking point, with "three sheets in the wind."

Long practice had given him a certain poise, so the seriousness of his condition was not at once apparent. He insisted on showing his gratitude by escorting her to the station, and because she felt sorry for him, or felt it her duty, she went.

His enjoyment of the trip was keen, if hers was not, and he swung onto the end of the departing train reluctantly, begging to be written to occasionally.

If the censors enforced the second commandment with the rigor they exercise in military news, the man's letter in expurgated form, would form the nucleus for a guessing contest, but nothing more.

Gene's idea of being himself, and extending an unreserved friendship is to express himself freely. His habit of speech is picturesque, but never prudish. Of a letter of 150 words, 100 are usually profane, and the young woman is assured each time that she's a "d————d nice girl" at least.

ON FOUR DOLLARS.

Gene is still in England, and his efforts to do justice to his pecuniary difficulties in seeing London on $4.00 in two weeks presage a wonderful library future for him, when once he turns his art on the German death-dealing devices in action.

Anyone who can solve the problem of liquid refreshment on $2 a week is assured the distinction of being at least Gene's second best friend.

THE ROMANCE OF WAR GIFTS

They Come From All Over the World, and They Send All Sorts of Interesting Letters

(James Douglas in the London Chronicle.)

The history of the war would not be complete without a chapter entitled "Voluntary Contributions to War Expenses." The materials for it are in the archives of the treasury. They consist of dated, numbered, and annotated documents. Each of them records a free and spontaneous offering which has been gratefully accepted by his Majesty's government.

Just to name the places from which they come would be a lesson in geography. Where is Sandakan, B.N.B.? There is romance in the sound of Sandakan, and surely it was romance that moved a firm in Sandakan to send 500 pounds to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with this message:—"In this territory we contribute nothing to the imperial finances, while at the same time we enjoy all the benefits of British protection. By disposing of the above sum for us you will be assisting us to discharge a welcome duty." Business is business, but this is the sheer romance of patriotism.

AROUND THE WORLD.

From Sandakan we leap to Matequi, in British Columbia. The municipality of Matequi sends 58 pounds. A civic romance! From Matequi we fly to Fanning Island. The natives of the Gilbert Islands employed there have sent two gifts. They thrill us like the gifts of the Indian princes. From Fanning Island we wing our way to West China, alighting in a mission station, fourteen hundred miles from the coast. There we find an old missionary who sends his gift to the chancellor with these words: "I wish you with the national burden on your shoulders to understand how the rank and the file of us wish to carry with you the nation's sorrow, and fulfil its obligations."

In Summit, New Jersey, an American citizen is found writing a check payable to the British empire. From New Jersey back to China, where we discover a husband and wife taking counsel together and jointly resolving to send a draft in four figures to the motherland. From China we hurry back to Canada, where we surprise a man writing a check for 200 pounds, "to cover moneys received by me while an engineer studying at Keyham" nearly half a century ago. Then to Saskatchewan, where we look over the shoulder of an old man who is writing a check for 20 pounds. He remarks that "it is a small thing to invest in a war loan and draw a dividend when brave men are laying down their lives." He begs the chancellor to print notes or stamps for those who prefer giving to lending.

SENDS ONE SHILLING.

Even the children's mite tinkles in treasury romances. It is property classified: "Gifts from Children towards War Funds." Schools club together to pour their pence into the war chest. But in this Wonderland Alice sometimes scrapes together her own savings and then sends them to the Chancellor of the Exchequer with a letter painfully written in nursery hand. Here is a letter from Alice herself:

"I am sending you one shilling out of my pocket money to help to pay for the war. Daddy says you are collecting for it. I am seven years old and I have two uncles fighting."

My lords did not return it. They initialed it "Thanked" and issued the command "Prepare R.O." This being interpreted means "Prepare Receivable Order." The receivable order was prepared. The gigantic treasury machine was set in motion to absorb Alice's shilling.

There are many gifts from officers on active service. Some send a year's pay. Among the contributions from retired officers is one from a very gallant gentleman in a far country. He writes: "I have twice applied to be taken in the army reserve but have been refused on account of my hearing. As my service has been refused, I hope my money will be accepted, and am therefore sending you what money I have in the bank."

"SENDS "THE" POUND.

There is somewhere in England a poor old woman with a Dickensian name. She anxiously asks the Chancellor whether he will take her pound. The Chancellor thanks her, and promises to add it to the revenue. "Dear Sir," she replies, "I have much plesh'r in send you the pound." Do not smile at the naive ardor which moves her to say not a pound but the pound—her own particular, and probably her only, pound.

Great is the patriotism of the poor. There is a golden letter from a Golden Donkeyman, which utters the very soul of the merchant seaman, to whose valor in tramp and trawler the navy owes much and the nation owes more. "Sir," he writes, "I have just comes back from Hell—from among the submarines. Do not mind the submarines. Do not mind the grammar. Grammar does not count as a rule with gentlemen."

Besides the portrait of the donkeyman we may hang the portrait of the miner who sang at seventeen inns and workmen's clubs "for the benefit of the war," and slowly gathered in small sums, no fewer than 20 pounds. Then there is the poor man who sent a National Health Insurance Commission—money order for ninepence, the cashing of which set an almost insoluble problem to the assistat paymaster-general, the accounting officer of the treasury, the postmaster-general, and the Bank of England. As a proof of the vigilant stewardship of the treasury we may cite an order pencilled upon one of the minutes dealing with this enigma: "Mr. Blank. Pl. secure the 9d."

Shareholders in armament firms send the excess of their war dividend over the peace dividend. Clergymen send the increase in their tithes due to the war. Other gifts come from citizens who do not pay income tax. One comes from a curate who cannot fight and does not drink.

HE OFFERS HIMSELF.

The most touching gift of all comes from a poor old Irishman. His letter is a moving picture of unconscious pathos and humor:

"As I was not able to answer your request owing to chronic catarrh in my head and rheumatism in my blood which has caused me much trouble.

"I have two boys at home. The one has jaunce in his stomach and the other's head is not right.

"I am willing to help in any way I can.

"I now send you a subscription of 1 pound, trusting you will get it all right, but I have no money for exchecer bonds, and I would offer myself if I would be of any use."

The old Irishman is the last of the shadowy forms in these treasury romances. He hobbles off to his bog without hearing our plaudits. What a gallery of portraits!

AMERICAN SARDINES ARE IN GREAT DEMAND

EASTPORT, Me., Sept. 26.— The busiest place in Eastern Maine is Eastport. Twelve sardine factories there are running on full time. Herrings are so plentiful in Canadian waters, a few miles down the bay, that the Dominion weirmen were obliged this week to drop their prices of $10 and $12 a hogshead to $5 a hogshead, which may continue to the end of the coming season—Dec. 1.

There is a shortage of general labourers, so that many of the sardine canners have sent a call for men for factory work at good wages. There are no labour unions to join, and inexperienced general labourers are taken at once. The sardine canners have had an advance on sardines from $2.85 a case of 100 cans to $3, show that there is no foundation for cents before another week, as the foreign pack is light and Maine coast pack will be smaller than usual.

It is stated that no more than 8,000,000 cases of sardines will be put up this season, from April 15 to Dec. 1, which will be nearly 500,000 cases short, and there are more demands for American sardines at present than can be filled at present prices.

The boatmen who bring the fish from the Canadian weirs to the Eastern Maine factories receive $2 a hogshead for all they can carry, making two and three trips a week with from twenty to thirty-five hogsheads every load.

The average weekly payroll in the Eastport factories is about $25,000, which does not include the many thousands of dollars paid out to the Canadian weir owners and boatmen engaged in the industry.

FAVORED CANADIAN ABSENTEE.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—When a Canadian soldier was charged here with being an absentee the magistrate said: "Canada has done so splendidly that I feel I cannot take the usual course with you." And though an escort was present, the soldier was discharged and returned to the depot.

A Wheat Embargo Scheme of Schemers To Raise the Price

A remarkable petition has been presented to President Wilson asking him to call a special meeting of Congress to consider the advisability of an embargo on the exportation of wheat, A wheat famine in the United States is predicted within six months by the petitioners, unless the embargo is declared. The petition sets forth that the quantity of wheat from the last crop, including the surplus of last year, is "barely sufficient" for the needs of the country, with its growing population.

All of which we steadfastly do not believe.

The American production of wheat in 1913 was 148,630,600 quarters; in 1914, 157,728,000 quarters; in 1915, 196,670,000 quarters; a quarter is eight bushels. The exports of breadstuffs fell from $211,098,339 in 1913 to $165,302,385 in 1914, but rose in 1915 to $573,823,076. Meanwhile the exportation of wheat from Russia to the United Kingdom fell from 10,153,000 pouds in 1914 to 1,799,000 pouds in 1915; and to Germany from 11,745,000 in 1912 to nothing in 1915. Russia's entire exportation of wheat fell from 203,000,000 pouds in 1913 to 147,000,000 pouds in 1914 to 11,000,000 pouds in 1915. (A poud is 36.07 pounds.) This means that there must be an enormous accumulation of wheat in Russia awaiting the opening of the Dardanelles. The release of that wheat will make a sufficient embargo on the exportation of American wheat. It looks as though an enemy had done this thing—an enemy to the Entente and an enemy to President Wilson and the American wheat grower. Of course, the whole thing may be a bluff to put up the price of wheat in the United States. The trap is not well set, and we do not believe President Wilson will walk into it. He may think that it would be good taste to leave a little bungling for the incoming President to do, whether himself or another.

In the Chicago wheat market they are watching the Balkans as a cat does a mouse. There came a rumour on Wednesday that the Roumanian army was in a dangerous position, and down came the price of wheat; only to be put up again by a rumour of a Roumanian victory near the Black Sea. The speculators were doubtful whether the Dardanelles would be opened in time for any wheat shipments to be made this season, but there did not seem to be any doubt about the effect of the opening of the Dardanelles or the price of wheat. Then there was a lot of gossip about the foreign governments perferring to buy American wheat just now in anticipation of a possible embargo later on, the idea being strengthened by the fall in shipping rates from the Argenine. To paraphrase Junious, a wheat gambler "may speak that which is true but it must be received with caution as coming from the devil." In the meantime, Liverpool does not seem to be feverishly anxious. It is fairly safe betting that there will be no embargo on American wheat exports until after the elections, and probably not then.—Montreal Herald.

OTTAWA, Ont., Sept. 26. — That Canadian aviators have largely been engaged is the word received of the allies as the word received at the Naval Service Department. An Ottawa boy, Flight Lieut. Several of the Canadian aviators have been awaiting in Saloniki.

NORTH MONAGHAN RATEPAYERS MEET THE CITY COUNCIL

Residents Claim that the Present Proposed Site of the Sewage Disposal Plant is a Matter of Serious Concern to at Least Ninety-six People Who Reside in the Immediate Vicinity—Matter Will Be Threshed Out at a Meeting to Be Held This Evening.

COMMITTEE APPOINTED

Two committees representing the City Council and the ratepayers of North Monaghan will meet to-night in the City Hall and attempt to arrive at some amiable solution concerning the location of a site for the city's proposed sewage disposal plant. This represents the net result of a conference that was held last evening between the City Council and a large representation of ratepayers from North Monaghan. Speaking for Samuel Newhall, a resident of the locality in which it is proposed to erect the plant, Mr. O'Connell said that he did not thing that the Council had given the matter the consideration that the importance of it deserved. The city had no right to do anything that would in any way injure the property of the ratepayers in North Monaghan without considering among other things the matter of compensation. Mr. O'Connell contended that the city had failed to give the ratepayers proper notice of its intention to locate the plant at the foot of Park street on the east side of the road.

A Growing City.

"I am informed," said Mr. O'Connell, "that this is by no means the best site. You have selected the most picturesques site on the Otonabee river. There are very few places in Ontario that present more ideal advantages as a residential property than the one selected by the city for a sewage disposal plant. It is right at the door of a growing city, where you have all the advantages of suburban life such as fresh air, etc."

Mr. O'Connell read an extract from the Municipal Act which provides due compensation for the owners of expropriated lands. He cited a case in Toronto, similar in principle but not in fact, in which the owner of a departmental store was awarded the sum of ten thousand dollars as compensation for the erection of something that was conceded to constitute an objection in the mind of the public. The site that was first selected by the city effected fourteen residents, whereas the present site effected ninety-six."

"It behooves you when you are authorized to exercise these extraordinary powers to do so with circumspection," said Mr. O'Connell in conclusion.

Reeve McIntosh.

"Did the Council mention the Scott and Rutherford property to the Provincial Board of Health?" enquired Reeve McIntosh.

Mayor Duffus—"Yes."

Reeve McIntosh—"Then I claim that it was unfair that we were not notified. The ratepayers were kept in the dark as to the exact location of the plant. The formal notice to the township did not identify the property. We knew nothing until we arrived in Toronto."

Mr. N. C. Mills said that he had see and heard of a number of sewage disposal plants, but he had never heard of one that was entirely free from odour.

Mr. Holmes charged the Council with taking the Provincial engineer down the back streets to the site so that he would not be in a position to realize what a valuable residential property the city was securing for the site.. Mayor Duffus denied this allegation. Mr. Holmes claimed that the city was locating the plant on the present proposed site to save the expense of digging. He claimed to have in his possession a letter from Milwaukee which would prove that the plant constituted a nuisance and some of the residents in the vicinity were contemplating damage actions against the city. Mr. Holmes was of the opinion that the city should go farther down.

Mr. J. T. O'Connell spoke of a property a little farther west that the city could get for half the money they would have to pay for the present proposed site. The difference in price would pay for the extra cost of digging.

End of the Oratory.

At nine-fifteen o'clock, Reeve McIntosh announced that his force of speakers was exhausted. Mayor Duffus in reply assured Reeve McIntosh that nothing but the friendliest feelings existed between the City Council and the officials of North Monaghan. He explained at length the engineering difficulties connected with the construction of the plant across the river. He assured the delegation that the Provincial Engineer was never taken down the back way and that be had been given every opportunity of seeing all that was to be seen.

Mayor Duffus felt that the question was one for the Provincial Board of Health to deal with, as they had already authorized the construction of the plant on the site at the foot of Park street. The city had no objection to the ratepayers going to the Provincial Board of Health in regard to the matter. Alderman Langford questioned the right of the city to enter into negotiations with the township when the Provincial Board of Health had approved of the present proposed site.

A committee comprising Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., Mayor Duffus, Aldermen McIntyre, chairman of the Board of Works, also Weir Saunders, Duncan and Stratton, was appointed to confer to-night with a committee selected by Reeve McIntosh of North Monaghan, comprising Messrs. Rye, Bell, Holmes, Mills, J. T. O'Connell and D. O'Connell. Reeve McIntosh is included on this committee.

MILLBROOK SCHOOL FAIR WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

Excellent Programme Was Provided by the District Representative —Special Services in the Methodist Church—Sunday School Rally—Millbrook Boy Wounded—Personals.

MILLBROOK, Sept. 27. — The School Fair, held at the Agricultural Grounds on Tuesday, proved a big success. About a thousand people were in attendance, and the programme was well looked after by Mr. R. S. Duncan, B.S.A.

Excellent Discourse.

Rev. Mr. Wilks preached an excellent sermon to a large congregation in the Methodist Church on Sunday morning last. The pastor, Rev. Wm. Higgs, took the service in the evening, and delivered a splendid discourse from the words, "The spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take the water of life freely," and following verses, as appear in Rev., chap. 22. It was a strong appeal to the people to become Christians and walk in the straight and narrow path that leadeth to life everlasting. Mr. Higgs, before closing, stated that he would be pleased to have those desirous of living better lives call on him, or he would call on them if they would ask him. He is sincerely anxious to help all he can for the spiritual welfare of the members and adherents of his congregation.

Sunday School Rally.

The Methodist Sunday School held a very successful rally day service in the auditorium of the church on Sunday, Sept. 24th, Revs. W. Wilks and Wm. Higgs gave instructive addresses, which were beneficial to all in attendance. Excellent reports were given by the various departments and suitable music was provided. Much credit is due Miss Hampton for the floral decorations.

"EVERYWOMAN"

Henry W. Savage is sending here the tremendous dramatic spectacle "Everywoman", which created such a furore in New York, Boston, Chicago and the other large American cities. It will be disclosed at the Grand Opera House Peterborough, Saturday September 30th; matinee and night. There have been, since the first production of this modern morality play, changes in the cast from time to time, but this city is fortunate in having, according to Mr. Savage, an opportunity to witness the best all-round organization he has ever sponsored. It is the only Company playing "Everywoman" in America. There has never been a No. 2 Company. Reserve seat sale opens at Box Office, Thursday morning at 9 a.m.

To Prevent Single Men From Escaping Poll Tax This Year

OTTAWA, Sept. 27.—In order to prevent any single men in Ottawa from escaping the poll tax being levied by the city this year, the city assessors are making a second visit to certain sections of the city this week. The Board of Control's order for the levy of a poll tax was issued in May, after the city assessors had been at work for some time. Thus a number of those liable for the tax were missed. The assessors are now recording these persons.

This is the first year in which the city has collected poll taxes. At the city hall it is pointed out that the levy will work unfairly. The city is following out the provisions of the assessment act, which authorizes that male persons over 21 years of age having an income of $600 or less may be taxed $5. In the general income assessment all males earning $700 are assessed on income and taxed $2. Thus the man earning $600 may have to pay $5 in taxes, while the one earning $700 will pay only $2.

The Board of Control decided this year a levy to poll tax at the suggestion of City Auditor Cluff.

The poll tax work, the completion of the assessment rolls, and the preparation of matter for the Court of Revision is making the civic assessparation of matter the civic assessment department one of the busiest departments at the city hall these days. So far, none of the members of the staff have been allowed holidays.

Member Shot In Phone Exchange After Quarrel

CORONATION, Alta., Sept. 27. — Frank Whitesides was shot tiwce in the telephone exchange here on Sunday night by Thomas E. Holmbolt. Whitesides is seriously, but not fatally wounded. He is a local member for the riding of Coronation in the Albert Legislature, editor of the Coronation Review and sergeant in the 178th Battalion, now in training in Calgary. Holmbolt is a farmer in the district near Coronation and a private in the 187th. His wife is the operator in the telephone exchange in Coronation.

Very little is known of the affair and neither has made any statement of what occurred. It is known that there was a quarrel between the two men in the telephone exchange on Sunday night, and that it ended in Holmbolt shooting Whitesides. What the quarrel was about is not known and there were no witnesses.

Holmbolt was placed under arrest and remanded for one week.

Another Section of the County Where Morals Are Low Among Certain Class of the Community

The intellectual and moral conditions of several sections of this county have on different occasions been exposed in the calcium light that beats upon the judge's bench. At the present time the south east and the north west corners of the county are dividing a conspicuous notoriety that dividing a conspicuous notoriety that conditions in those communities. It is understood of course that there is no reflection upon all the members of these communities, but it is felt that the situations should not be ignored for the benefit of the respectable families.

Turning to the northwest corner of the county where it converges with Haliburton and Victoria counties, one finds the village of Kinmount as the centre of a countryside remote from the frontier, and where among a certain class of people there is reported to exist a coseness of living that is regarded as a source of danger to the community, and at least a devitalising influence counteracting the work of those who seek to maintain a high sense of public and private ideals.

Here are several cases directly reported from Kinmount that should be sufficient indication of the alleged conditions:

No. 1. Father committed incest some time ago. No action ever taken beyond the child being taken over by the Children's Aid Society. Eight children, from 16 years to baby. Only two at school, in the First Book. Parents can neither read nor write. One boy an epileptic, another mentally deficient, another has goitre. Only one bed among the whole family.

No. 2. House full of children; father drinks heavily; earns $4 or $5 a day; mother delicate; children filthy and in rags.

No. 3. Man and five children; oldest eleven years; no mother; children have never been to school.

No. 4. Family comprises six children; father hard working man; mother incapable; live in a hovel; although the school is close by the children do not attend.

The following is a synopsis of a semi-official report on the general conditions of the village and its neighbourhood:

"This district is absolutely without law or order; in fact it is becoming a refuge for persons who want to do what they like. Though it is a local option district there has been more drunkenness than in Minden, which, until recently, had two hotels. Adultery, incest and bigamy are common occurrences and go unchecked. Children are out of control of their parents. It is not an uncommon sight to see boys of 12 and 13 smoking pipes. They go to school or remain away as they feel inclined. There is no truant officer. Village has a fine school with about 140 on the roll. Population of Kinmount between 300 and 350. There are three churches—Anglican, Roman Catholic and Presbyterian."

It was further stated that this summary is not an exaggeration; that complaints have been made through newspapers, by which it was hoped the provincial authorities might be stirred to action, but to no avail. Men who have gone in there with a high purpose and an interest in the welfare of others have stated that they were powerless to effect any material change, and that they themselves had developed an attitude of sufferance of things they felt they could not improve.

The report is certainly not a pleasing one, and mentioned with conditions from other sections of this county possesses an element of seriousness that, it is believed, should awaken opinion that has been either unaware and uninformed or cognizant and unconcerned.

WANTED SEPARATE SET OF TAX PAPERS

Mr. J. J. Turner Asserts That Assessor Henry is "Getting Too Big For His Boots"

At last night's meeting of the Council a letter was received from Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., respecting the action of Assessor W. H. Henry, in refusing to supply Mr. Turner with separate tax papers covering the Opera House property and two adjoining stores. Mr. Turner in his letter stated that he had informed Mr. Henry that he was "getting too big for his boots." Mr. Turner appealed to the City Council for assistance in the matter.

Ald. Edgar did not think that Mr. Turner had anything to complain of, as he was of the opinion that Mr. Henry had complied with the Act. The matter was referred to a meeting of the Whole Council, when Mr. Henry and Mr. Turner will be asked to be present.

The matter of closing Mill street and the east end of Murray street formed the subject of a brief discussion last evening between Mr. W. H. Denham, representing the Quaker Oats Company and members of the City Council. Several counter proposals were reviewed in passing, and the matter finally left in the hands of Mr. Denham, with instructions to secure additional information bearing on the subject.

Financial Report.

Ald. Langford suggested that the chairmen of the various committees comprising the City Council be asked to prepare and submit to the Council at a subsequent meeting a report covering their financial standing up to the end of the present month and their prospective requirement for the remainder of the year.

Mr. W. J. Green, Tax Collector, will be granted two weeks holidays at his own request. This is the first holiday that Mr. Green has had in sixteen years. A sewer is wanted on Crescent street. The matter will be looked into by the Board of Works Committee.

Mr. D. W. Dumble addressed a letter to the Council respecting a dangerous point in the vicinity of St. Vincent's Orphanage, and disclaiming responsibility for any accidents that might happen at that point should he remove a private fence which he erected as a matter of protection.

The officers of the 74th Battery are seeking practical recognition of the fact that the Battery includes about twenty-five Peterborough men. A small grant was made to the members of the 32nd Battery. The letter was received.

FIRST PRACTICE OF THE GEISHA

The preliminary practice of the Operatic Society got away to a good start last night, a good number of fine voices taking advantage of another opportunity to study light opera. The work practiced was the "Geisha," by Sydney Jones, so successfully presented in Peterborough six years ago in connection with the Earl Grey competition held in Toronto. The "Geisha" was staged in Loew's Theatre last May by Mr. R. J. Devey, and for two nights played to capacity houses, showing that the play has lost none of its popularity.

To-night at 8.30 there will be a practice for men at 225 Park Street, and on Friday night at 8 for ladies at the same address.

THIEPVAL CAPTURED BY THE BRITISH

blows of the allies not only in the west, but on all fronts, according to despatches reaching here.

The midnight report from Sir Douglas Haig reads:

"On our right French and British troops jointly occupied Combles as a result of the capture of Frecicourt and Morval. We have beaten off heavy counter-attacks in the region of Morval and Les Boeufs with severe loss to the enemy.

"In our centre we stormed the fortified village of Gueudecourt, and have driven the Germans back in disorder.

"On our left we captured Thiepval and the high ridge east of it, including the Zollern redoubt. This ridge was very strongly fortified with an elaborate system of heavily-wired trenches, and was defended with desperation.

"The successes gained during the last two days may be regarded as of An earlier report reads:

"Yesterday's operations were entirely successful. The preparation and execution of the attack by the artillery and infantry and the co-operation between them were in all respects admirable. More than 1,500 prisoners already have passed through the collecting stations, and more are arriving. Much war material has been captured, but the amount cannot yet be estimated.

"Further progress has been made during the night and this morning. A strong redoubt which had held out between Les Boeufs and Gueudecourt now has been captured and the garrison made prisoners.

"Our troops entered Combles from the west and are overcoming the enemy's resistance. There the enemy's losses were very severe.

FRENCH TAKE 1,900 PRISONERS

The Paris midnight official read:

"The battle continued successfully to-day. North of the Somme the allied troops increased their gains of yesterday considerably, having attained within a few hours the objectives assigned for the second day of the struggle.

"This morning the French troops resumed the offensive and captured the entire section of Combles situated to the east and south of the railway. Our patrol entered in conjunction with the troops of the right wing of the British army, who were cleaning up the north-western part of Combles. Shortly afterwards the whole village fell into our power.

"The booty captured in Combles was large. The Germans had accumulated in the subterranean regions of this place enormous quantities of munitions and supplies of every kind.

"We collected one hundred wounded Germans who had been abandoned by the enemy. Combles is filled with German corpses.

"This afternoon our troops, developing their advantage, captured a small wood situated north of Frecicourt, half way to Morval, and also the greater part of the strongly-fortified ground between this wood and the western portion of St. Vaast wood to the east of the Bethune road.

"The number of unwounded prisoners captured by the French since yesterday now reaches 1,200. We have counted up to the present thirty machine guns."

The afternoon report read:

"A French reconnoitring party reached the southern border of Combles. Eight hundred unwounded prisoners were taken in the fighting of yesterday on the Somme front.

"Violent counter attacks were made by the Germans last night on the Verdun front, between Thiaumont work and Fleury. These assaults were checked by the French artillery and rifle fire.

"TWIN BEDS"

Here Next Tuesday, Oct. 3

"Twin Beds," Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo's gold medal fun maker, which kept New Yorkers in convulsions of laughter for one solid year and made them laugh as they never laughed before, comes to the Grand, Tuesday, Oct. 3. "Twin Beds" is said to be the most laughable comedy produced in the past twenty years, and in attempting to describe it every adjective in the dictionary that conveys the idea of laughter in any real form is dragged out of its hiding place. Some say it is "hilarious," others will admit that it is "rollicking," while there are those who express their opinions of the comedy by saying it is "cyclonic," but all will agree that it is quite the funniest play within memory. The demand for "Twin Beds" comes from all parts of the world, and productions are shortly to be made in Paris, Petrograd, Berlin, Rome, Madrid, Tokio and South Africa.

PRAIRIE PROVINCES GROWING DESPITE DRAIN OF THE WAR.

OTTAWA, Sept. 26.—The results of the quinquennial census of the Prairie Provinces, taken last June, will be announced within a few days.

The population figures are now practically complete and will be issued in instalments, giving first the urban populations and after that the populations of the rural districts.

While no definite figures are yet available for publication, it is understood that the general results show that there has been some increase in the total population in the three Provinces, despite the drain of the war and the effect of the commercial depression of two years ago.

The increase, however, is small compared with the big increase of the preceding five years when settlers were pouring into the West, and everything was booming. Among the cities Winnipeg shows the largest increase in population.

Most men put in a lot of time trying to do things that would be detrimental to their own interests.

"A man should be content to let well enough alone." "Very true," replied Miss Cayenne. "But think how wonderfully wise a man must be to recognise well enough when he sees it."—Washington Star.

Answers--Queries

What Material shall it be?

What Color will best suit?

What Style will be most becoming?

And Where Can I Purchase the most up-to-date Garment?

¶ These are questions, all of which, are passing through the minds of Ladies about to make their FALL PURCHASES, and they apply equally as much whether the garment in question be a SUIT, a COAT, a DRESS, a WAIST, or even a SKIRT—for the natural desire is always to look ones best.

¶ Now the three first of these queries can safely be left to the individual lady to solve for herself.

¶ But the question WHERE to purchase cannot correctly be decided upon without having first visited the BARRIE STORE, which, if results count for anything at all, is rapidly becoming the principal daily rendezvous for the fashional world in Peterborough.

THE ALLIES ARE MASTERS

The Zeppelin raid on London, with its loss to the Prussians of two super-Zeppelins and the infliction of no military damage whatever, and the dramatic air battles now preceding on the western front serve again to call attention to the fact that air fighting, scouting and raiding exploits are of the utmost importance in these decisive days of the war.

In a British official communication summing up the main features of last week's fighting occurs the statement that during that week "in the battle area only fourteen hostile aircraft have been reported as crossing our lines, while our machines have made between two and three thousand flights across the enemy's lines."

An interesting document in this connection is the diary of a Prussian officer captured at the Somme, extracts from which are published and the authenticity of which is vouched for.

The entries regarding aviation are as follows:

"August 1, 1916—Our aviators are like hares, not one of them dares show himself on the other side of the lines.

"August 2—The French airmen fly over our lines at a height of 600 feet, while not one of ours dares show himself. It is impossible for us to fire, for if we do so we are immediately bombarded with violence. So we have to stand for everything and to lie down in the trenches in a suffocating heat and to suffer thirst and wait to be cut in pieces by shells or buried alive, or, if it please God, to get off safe and sound.

"August 6—Our aviators are inferior to such a degree that they do not stay in the air even at the distance behind the first line at which we now are. Our aviation is mighty inferior to the French and British. Thus it is impossible to take a step out of the protecting shelter of the wood.

"In aviation we are distinctly inferior, whether we wish to recognize it or not; 'German mistress of the air,' that is a statement which is not true at all. This explains the enormous losses which we are making here. There is no one to debarrass us from this encourge of the enemy aviation, which sticks to us without let up all day long and even into the night.

"This moral defeat has had a very bad effect on us."

Briggs—"So you intend to encourage your wife's literary ambitions, do you?" Griggs—"I do. It's better to have her making up stories about imaginary people than about the neighbors."—Boston Transcript.

WHOLE STORY OF WAR FOUND ON PARIS WALLS

Paris, Sept. 25.—A new "affiche" has appeared on some of the blank walls in the more obscure streets of Paris. It is unobtrusive. It seems to shrink from the public eye, with its few lines of black type on white paper. But it is most suggestive. It means that France is completing her preparations for the third winter of the war.

"Bring your rat dogs to the Central-Halles," it reads. "They are needed to protect our soldiers from the plague of rats in the trenches."

If Macaulay's New Zealander ever leaves London Bridge to study the conditions that prevailed in France during the great war he can do no better than to devote himself to a scrutiny of the posters that have appeared on the walls of Paris during the past two years. From them he could reconstruct the social state, as the traditional scientist is said to have built up the traditional animal from the traditional bone. He would discover from these posters a people generous, courageous, and determined. They offer a cross section of French activities in which the progress of the war can be read. Each has something of significance.

The best known of all these posters is of course that ordering the mobilisation of the French army which blossomed upon every blank wall in the first days of August, 1914. At first sight it is a common place bit of printing. But when one discovers on sense of them a line left blank, on which the place and the date of mobilisation was written in one realises that they had been prepared in advance to be used as required. It is a proof of the fear of war in which France has lived for the past twenty years. The sword trembled over her head.

Of greater value to the collector is the Galliemi poster in which he declared his intention of defending Paris after the government had fled to Bordeaux. It is the clue to a bit of history as yet unwritten. The administration thought it wiser not to defend Paris. If the invaders succeeded in reaching the city its gates were to have been opened. It was the only hope in the minds of the bureaucrats to save it from ravage.

Three Socialist deputies of Paris thought otherwise.

PEOPLE WOULD FIGHT.

"We know our people," they declared, "they will fight through every street and be massacred in thousands. No matter what the government does the Parisians will not yield tamely. Remember the riots of 1870, when the men and women who had been starving on the flesh of horses and rats tried to force the government to refuse surrender."

It was that protest that saved Paris, for it enabled Galliemi to make his stand. It was from that time that the smaller affiches date which even today one finds on the shutters of closed shops, "This store will not reopen until after the war." "Closed because the proprietor and staff have joined the colours."

A little later came the realisation that Germany had a perfect system of espionage in France. Then the store windows began to bear the announcement: "Maison Francais, Chef and Personnel exclusively French." Obviously rioting was feared, in which unfriendly guests would suffer. The tide of resentment against the Germans who had "peacefully penetrated" has been rising as a fuller knowledge has come. To-day one continually finds small typewritten 'stickers' under the eye in which this commercial establishment or that is designated as a "Boche house." The police disfigure them when they find them but they are industriously restored.

The first of the wonderful posters which would make Paris a delight to the eye if they were not so heavily freighted with sorrow began to appear when the story of the invasion of Belgium and Northern France was more fully known. They were appeals to the generous to aid in "reconstructing the hearths" of those who had been deprived of homes. Others asked aid for the widowed and the fatherless. The drawings were from the pen of the great artists who were not in the trenches. One that will ever haunt the memory is of a mother sitting tearless in a desolate room. Across her knees is the body of her babe.

ONE MEMORABLE POSTER.

The next stage of the war is shown by the famous "Turn in your gold" poster. France had resisted the first rush, had dug her first trenches, had settled to wearing down the enemy. It was to be a fight of patience and money was needed. The poster showed a German soldier beaten to his knees by the French rooster, striking at him from his post of vantage in the centre of a piece of French gold. Since then other appeals have followed. The latest gives the reasons why France must have every gold piece.

"Because," read the inspired words of the appeal, "the nation must accumulate gold to prove its wealth and to better its credit. Because the nation must be rich if it is to be strong."

That is convincing reasoning to a nation of saving people who believe to the last man that to be strong one must be well to do. The wounded men began to hobble about the streets and France realised that they must be cared for. Side by side with the demands of the minister of the interior that the widows and orphans of the war make their demands for pensions now instead of waiting until the end of the war, appeared posters appealing to the public to aid the men who so greatly needed aid. In one half a dozen sturdy children stand at attention, their chubby hands at their rimless caps, as two crippled soldiers march by. From another two sad and emaciated men watch timidly the passer-by.

"Help the sick and wounded men who have been invalided out of the service without pension!" is the cry. "They have done their best."

An increasing efficiency in the work of war is silently proven by these posters. One of the latest calls attention to the danger to be feared from the house fly and demands of the housewife as a patriotic duty that the "mouche" be suppressed. Another tells of the danger of alcoholism "in that which concerns the safety and health of the workers," and prescribes certain regulations to be observed by cafe keepers and cafe frequenters alike. The increasing burden of war upon the non-combatant is illustrated by the placards in which the maximum price of foods of various sorts is established.

A PERSONAL INTEREST.

One feels a certain personal interest in the posters which tell how the aeroplanes of the allied nations are to be distinguished from those of the enemy, when one considers that the battle line is not many miles away. The placards display the cocardes in tricolor which are shown on the wings of the allies, and the black cross of the German plane. Instructions are given as to the manner in which the enemy plane is to be hamstrung if it falls on this side of the line.

"A wheel should be broken," is the order, "that it may not rise. If no soldier is present the mayor of the commune is made responsible for the safety of the personnel."

In not one of these posters does one discover a note of bitterness or a cry for revenge. Instead there is only a great sadness expressed in eloquent simplicity. The Association National for the Orphans of the War outlines its plans. "The first care is to give to the little ones an occupation and a trade. The professional education is, of preference, confined to mutilated soldiers, who, being unable henceforth to resume their trade shall at least have the satisfaction and the comfort of educating the children of those who, struck, as they themselves have been, were unable to rise."

That same accent of simplicity is found in the appeal of La Cocarde du Souvenir, the purpose of which is to record and mark the graves of the men fallen in battle.

"French women and French men," it runs, "wish you that after the war the wives and fathers and mothers and children of the soldiers dead for their country shall be able to find that corner of the earth where repose these heroes?" An even more moving note is sounded in the call for 20,000 men of the class of 1868—men who are now more than 45 years old.

"The fathers of living children need not respond to this call. Those sons who have been killed by the enemy shall be considered as living."

So one goes on through 25 months of war until one reaches the demands of the present. "Women are needed to sew in the manufacture of dirigible balloons."

The boys of the classes of 1918 and 1919 are asked to report themselves for physical training and instruction that will fit them to secure the brevet of military aptitude. Just as the need of rat dogs in the trenches might give Macaulay's New Zealander an insight into the conditions under which these soldiers live, so the promise of "instruction in the throwing of hand grenades" made to these youngsters would reveal to him something of the methods of modern war. A poster under the tricolor instructing those who have claims for damages against the British army that these claims will be dealt with just as though the damages had been occasioned by the French army, hints at the interrelation of the allied forces. Last of all is a black and yellow call for a greater unity and greater energy in effort:

"The task is great. It is necessary that every one work. In the shops, in the fields, in the city and country.

"Each must have in his hand a tool, as our valiant soldiers at the front each has in his hand a rifle."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Some Catching Records

It was thirty-two years ago yesterday, on September 26, 1884, that Charley Bennett set up a catching record of twenty-three chances accepted in a nine inning game—a record that has stood through all the years. Bennett was then the backstop of the Detroit Nationals. His record stands without an equal in professional baseball, although Fred Tenny, a Brown University catcher, had twenty-three putouts to his credit in a game played in 1891.

Charley Bennett, the holder of the putout record for backstops in a single game, broke into the National League with Milwaukee in 1878, which was the first and last year the Foam City was represented in the old major circuit. Later he backstopped for Worcester, and in 1881 joined Detroit. He remained with the Michigan metropolis until the close of the 1888 season, when Detroit was dismissed from the National League. Bennett then went to Boston along with Charley Ganzel, another great backstop of the Detroit aggregation, Dan Brouthers and Hardie Richardson. Bennett was one of the four players who remained loyal to the National League during the Brotherhood uprising of 1890, and he remained on the Hub payroll until 1894.

The record for chances accepted by a catch in a full season was set up in the majors in 1909 by Charles S. Street of the Washington Americans. Gabby's figure was 924 chances in 137 games. The Minor league record was established in 1907 by Catcher Kearns of the Dallas club of the Texas League, who, in 123 games, was credited with 845 putouts and 139 assists, a total of 984 chances. Noyce, of the Hutchinson, Kan., club of the Western Association, set up ten years ago a record of 243 assists in 116 games.

In the matter of catching consecutive games, George Gibson of the Pirates hung up a string of 146 in 1909, which stands as the record in the majors. Gibson beat the previous record hung up by Jim McGuire of the Washingtons, which was 138. The minor circuits have produced more durable backstops even than Gibson, and the high figure of 155 consecutive games caught was established by Henry Cote, of the Grand Rapids Interstate League club, back in 1888.

If Sam Langford had to wait for the white heavyweights to raise a fund to pay his way home, poor Tham might as well be paying instalments on a cemetery lot in Buenos Ayres.

"TED" LEWIS READY AGAIN AND HE STOPS AT NOBODY.

New York, September 25.—Jimmie Johnston announces that Ted (Kid) Lewis, the English fighter, fresh from the South American trip, will start his annual campaign beginning October 9. Lewis is anxious and eager to meet any man in the world and concede him ten pounds, lightweight, welterweight or middleweight. He will make 138 pounds ringside.

AFTER THIRTY-THREE YEARS HURDLE RECORD IS BROKEN

New York, Sept. 25. — Fred Murray, unattached, of San Francisco, made a world's record in the 120-yard hurdle event with ten 2-foot hurdles at the annual games of the New York A. C. here on Saturday. His time, 14 2-5 seconds, was 3 4-6 seconds better than the record of George Taylor, made in 1888.

"The Bohemian Girl"

One of the distinct theatrical novelties of recent years has been the mammoth spectacular revival of "The Bohemian Girl" by the Aborn Opera Company. This is the reverse of the usual case as revivals as a rule are lacking in novelty. In this instance the rule does not apply, because of the many innovations introduced by Milton and Sargent Aborn under whose direction in its new form it is still attracting large audiences in its sixth season. Grand Opera House Peterborough, to-morrow night, Thursday 28th. Seats now on sale at Box Office.

GERMAN TRENCHES ALMOST PALATIAL IN CONSTRUCTION

Parts Appear to Have Come From a Factory and to be Standardized.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—British Tommies and French poilus in the advance on the Somme have had much the same sensation in occupying German trenches that an east side hovel dweller would have in entering a Riverside Drive mansion.

The conditions are as far separate as the Poles. On the allied side are miserable dugouts, mere holes delved or burrowed in the ground. The floors and walls are the bare earth; the beds are heaps of straw; candles give a meagre light; boxes for seats, of the occupants are lucky; everything dark, damp, miserable. There is even less comfort than the cave men of old had.

On the German side are luxurious and, to the minds of the allied soldiers, sybaritic underground dwellings. Roofs, walls, floors and staircases of neat timber, sanitary wall paper, shower baths, electric lighting, real beds, and, in the officers' rooms, arm chairs with nice soft cushions, book-cases, books, dressing tables, pictures on the wall—in fact all the comforts of garrison life in peace time. It is no wonder that in entering these underground mansions there was a chorus of "Rhine ne's" and "Mon Dieus" from the astonished Tommies and poilus.

To the officers' mind it was an indication of German confidence in holding the western front indefinitely.

Air of Permanency.

The dominating note of the captured German trenches is permanency. They looked like the work of men who builded not for a day but for years, and who had no thought or expectation of moving.

The allied trenches, on the contrary, gave the impression of being made by men who hoped and meant to move on before long.

Standing in what had been "No Man's Land" until the forward push of the Allies, with German front trenches on one hand and British or French front trenches on the other, the outward face of things shows the different spirits of both sides—one to move on and the other to stay. The allies support their barbed wire defenses with wooden stakes; the Germans with iron ones. The allies' parapets are mostly visible sandbags, the Germans occasionally build with sandbags, but not often; their parapets make more show of rough clay or chalk, beneath which are two or more feet of reinforced concrete.

Inside the trenches, and also the support and communication trenches behind each, the difference becomes more pronounced. The allied trench housing is at best a makeshift—the roughest of camping out, with the barest of shelter and the minimum of comfort, only just enough to serve.

Roughly delved holes in the earth they encourage the occupants in the belief that they are the most transitory of dwellings. The doors, if they have any, are a few odd pieces of plank with a couple of other pieces nailed across. As for comfort, there isn't any, and if any one dared own an armchair or a two-foot mirror he would become the jest of his entire platoon.

Like a Straggling Village.

The whole idea of German trench life is different. The German front in the west is like one huge straggling village built underground and strung along a road 300 miles long. These troglodical houses — and they are real houses, of one or two floors—are built to certain official designs and drawn out in section and plan.

The main entrance from the trench level is frequently through a steel door of a pattern apparently standardized, so that hundreds may come from the factory on one order and missing parts be easily replaced. The profusely timbered doorway is made to their measure. There is a typical touch of German orderliness and cleanliness in the perforated sheets of iron outside these doors so that the men may scrape their feet of the the men may scrape their feet of the Inside, a flight of from 12 to 36 steps leads down at an easy angle. The threads of the stair and the descending roof of the staircase are formed of mining frames of stout timber with double top sills. The walls are of thick planks, notched at the top and bottom to fit the frames, and strengthened with iron tie-rods running from top to bottom of the stairs, and with thick wooden struts at right angles to these. At the foot of the stairs a tunnelled corridor runs straight forward for anything up to 50 yards, and out of it opens roofs and minor passages on each side. In many dugouts a second staircase, or two staircases, lead to a lower floor sometimes 30 or 40 feet below the trench level. All of these staircases, passages and rooms are, in the best specimens, completely lined with wood and as fully strengthened as the entrance staircase already described.

In one typical dugout each section of a platoon had its allotted places for messing and sleeping, its own place for parade in a passage, and its own emergency exit to the trench. In another, used as a hospital for dealing immediately with the wounded, the first floor underground has a large reception hall, dressing room, bath and large operating room, with adequate heating apparatus. An easy stair case leads down to seventeen other rooms, accommodating 32 patients.

A most elaborate dugout was captured near Mametz designed to house a whole company of 200 men. It contained kitchens, provision and munition storerooms, a well, a forge, engine room and dynamo room lighting the whole place with electricity. Everything possible for the comfort of the men and officers as well as the expediences of war was provided for. In the officers' quarters of the various captured dugouts have been found full-length mirrors, comfortable bedsteads, cushioned armchairs, bookcases and pictures. In one room glazed sanitary paper lined the wall, and the present English occupant is convinced by circumstantial evidence that his predecessor lived there with his wife and child. Clearly there was no expectation of an early move.

Lavish Use of Labour.

Other German trench works show the same lavish use of labour as the dugouts. In the old German front trench south of La Boisselle an entrance like that of a dugout leads to a flight of twenty-four stairs, all well finished. At their foot a landing three feet square opens on its further side upon a nearly vertical shaft. Descending this by a ladder of thirty-two rungs, you find a second landing like the first, opening on a continuation of the shaft. Down this a ladder of sixty rungs brings you to the starting point of an almost straight level tunnel three feet wide and about five feet high, cut through pure, hard chalk. It ends in a blank wall. This a right underneath a huge crater which had evidently been held, and probably made, by British troops. So that at the moment of the advance in July, nothing remained, presumably, for the Germans to do but to bring the necessary tons of high explosives to the end of their tunnel and blow the mine under the base of the old crater. Like an incomplete dugout near Fricourt, this mine still contains part of the machinery used for winding up the excavated chalk to the surface.

But Are They as Healthy.

It is admitted that without doubt the overhead strength of German dugouts keep down casualties during bombardment, and sometimes enables the Germans to bring up unsuspected forces to harass the allied troops in the rear with machine gun and rifle fire when a charge has carried the men past an uncleared enemy dugout. On the other hand, it is contended that the close underground villages of the Germans yield higher figures of general sickness than the simpler, shallower, more airy trench shelters of the allies.

Nevertheless, the Tommie, poilus, and officers are not at all averse to exchanging the airy straw beds of their own for the creature comforts of the German dugouts.

English ones. On the other hand, there is nothing to show that the half-buried German army gains more by relative immunity from rheumatism and bronchitis than it loses in the way of general health and vitality through trogoditical life. In England troops have better health in tents than in huts, and better health in huts than in billets, and it is contended that the close underground villages of the Germans yield higher figures of general sickness than the simpler, shallower, more airy trench shelters of the allies.

BROOKLYN STILL HOLDS HER MARGIN

NEW YORK, Sept. 11.—The slender margin of one game still keeps Brooklyn in the van in the greulling chase of the National League pennant. The leaders had to win to-day to retain their place in front, for if beaten in the face of Philadelphia's victory, the latter, by virtue of the lesser number of games it has played, would have taken the lead. Boston, winning twice, gained half a game and now stands 3 1-2 games behind Brooklyn.

Philadelphia still has 9 games to play—3 with Brooklyn and 6 with Boston; Brooklyn has remaining 8 games—1 with Chicago, 3 with Philadelphia and 4 with New York; Boston has 11 left—5 with New York and 6 with Philadelphia.

The situation is such that New York, in fourth place, still has a physical chance if it can keep up its great winning streak. McGraw's men are 6 1-2 games behind Brooklyn, with 10 games to play. Should they take all 10 their record would be 91 won and 62 lost. Then if Brooklyn should win only one of its eight its record would be 90 won and 64 lost. The standing:

	Won.	Lost.	P.C.
Brooklyn	89	57	.60959
Philadelphia	87	57	.60417
Boston	82	58	.58865

MAY BE NO HOCKEY IN TORONTO ARENA

TORONTO, Sept. 27.—There is more than a probability that there will be no skating or hockey at the Arena here during the coming winter. The military authorities are now negotiating with the owners of the plant, most of whom are Montreal men, for its use for troops throughout the winter months.

At the recent meeting of the Arena Garden Company at Montreal the Toronto directors were taken to task for allowing the use of the big building, free of charge, by various organizations engaged in patriotic work. The local men resented the attitude taken by the Montrealers, and when their representative reported what had transpired at the Montreal meeting they declined to take any further active part in the management of the enterprise.

The outlook for hockey is not bright. The O.H.A. will probably confine its efforts almost exclusively to the junior series, most of the intermediate and senior players having enlisted. The professional teams were poorly supported last season and not one of them made any money as a result of their N.H.A. games. The Toronto lost heavily. It is almost certain that there will be no N.H.A. games in Toronto and Ottawa. The story to the effect that a military team, presumably the 228th Battalion, will enter a team in the professional league is not credited here. It is extremely unlikely that the army authorities would allow then to be away from their headquarters for days at a time, as is sometimes necessary when making the trip to Montreal and Quebec.

THE ENTRY LIST FOR THE CITY CHAMPIONSHIPS

The entry lists for the City Championships on Saturday are filling rapidly, especially in the junior boys events. The games will be held at the Oval this year owing to the fact that Riverside Park has not been opened this summer. The winners of last year are again competing, and the competition will be keen. The annual schoolboys' relay race will be a feature, and it is expected that all the schools of the city will be represented. Central School won the event last year and the year previous. Athletes intending to compete in these events should send in their names at once to the Y.M.C.A. There is no entry fee.

CITY COUNCIL REFER TO THE DEATH OF LATE J. C. ANDERSON

At last night's meeting of the City Council the appended resolution was unanimously endorsed by the members:

That this Council views with sincere regret and sorrow the death of a late fellow member of the Council of former years of service. During his term as representative for the East Ward he was zealous and painstaking in his attention to the interests of the Ward and of the City at large. His valuable service included that of the responsible position of Chairman of the Finance committee for the larger part of his membership in the Council, resigning his duties as chairman and position in the Council to take up a responsible position with the Utilities Commission, which he discharged most satisfactorily until stricken by a serious and ultimately fatal illness. His term of office was from January, 1911, to the autumn of 1914.

This Council desires to express to his wife and to members of the family now surviving deep sympathy in the sorrowful even that has removed a loving husband and father, and to signify, both personally and as a Council that a deep sorrow and regret is shared by the community at large.

Major Duffus referred to the many sterling qualities of the deceased and the valuable assistance associated with his term of office as a member of the City Council.

A SIMPLE WAY TO REMOVE DANDRUFF

There is one sure way that has never failed to remove dandruff at once, and that is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, common liquid arvon from any drug store (this is all you will need), apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve it and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

PREDICTS HOGS WILL BE $15

WABASH, Sept. 28. — Stockdealer Waite of Thamesville, in conversing with a Wabash farmer this week, expressed the opinion that the price of hogs would soar to $15 per cwt. before many months. A contract has been made with Swift's packing house of Toronto, to supply them with $800,000 worth of hogs, to be shipped to England by January 1.

There is such a scarcity of hogs in the country owing to being cleared out for lack of food that Mr. Waite thinks the contract can never be filled.

THE BRITISH HAVE TAKEN 10,000 PRISONERS

The Surrender Of Bapaume To The British Is Imminent

Casualties Surprisingly Light In The Recent Offensive

The Weakening German Resistance Which Seems Obvious to Any Spectator, is Variously Interpreted by the Allied Officers—It Is Thought That the Germans Are Making Only a Rearguard Defence of the Present Line.

COMBLES TRENCHES FOUND EMPTY

(By Frederick Palmer.)

AT THE BRITISH FRONT IN FRANCE, September 28.—The allied commanders made the most of Tuesday's summery weather by following up Monday's successful attacks with more attacks. The capture of Combles was one of the most picturesque incidents in the whole course of the great Somme offensive. It marked the opening of a big forward surge of the British and French forces, which reached its climax in the capture of Gueudecourt and Thiepval.

All night long bitter fighting bad been in progress at various points on the front, and with dawn the battle broadened to include the whole British left. Combles fell as the sun rose on a perfect summer day. Sitting in the midst of a heap of hills, the town was isolated by the seizing of the high ground on either side by the French and British.

CHARGED EMPTY TRENCHES.

In the early hours of the morning the British took an orchard in the northern outskirts and then, after a heavy preliminary shelling, they charged the trenches on the edge of the village. The trenches were empty when they reached them. At the same time the French, dashing forward on the other side of the village, pushed victoriously forward into the heart of the village. In the main street the soldiers of the two nations met and joyously shook hands, calling out to each other, "Parlez vous," and "How d'ye do."

Combles had a labyrinth of dugouts and well fortified cellars, but at the last practically no defence was made. Those Germans who had not managed to escape when the town was hopelessly surrounded were taken prisoner. One lot of Germans who were endeavouring to find a way out through the encircling allied infantry walked into the British skirmishing line. The cellars and dugouts of the village were full of wounded, who found security there from the furious fighting on the slopes and ridges.

SLIGHT RESISTANCE.

Having cleared Combles of any stray Germans, the British and French moved on side by side to further attacks. One of the most striking features of the fighting was the surprisingly slight resistance offered at Morval and Combles by the Germans, according to all reports made by the British officers. The Germans made the usual counter-attacks against the British new position but the reports of the allied officers to headquarters agree that they lacked spirit. Some German trenches taken were lightly occupied or not at all. In other instances the allied commanders stated that considerable bodies of Germans threw down their rifles promptly as soon as the attackers approached their trenches, although it was known that they had orders to stand to the last. Batches of prisoners have been coming in from all parts of the front throughout the day.

SAFEGUARDING GUNS.

The British on Monday, found the strongest defence made in front of Gueudecourt. There the Germans used their machine guns with the tenacity and unyielding courage which has hitherto characterized them. The British resumed the attack, and all the village is in their possession. The Germans showed an inclination to withdraw their guns immediately they were in any danger, evidently desiring to take no risk of losing any of their artillery. This sometimes leaves their troops in the front line unprotected by cannon fire and may account for the number of surrenders.

POUNDING THE WHOLE LINE.

In the meantime, the British continue to pound the whole line with their seemingly inexhaustible supply of shells, leaving the Germans in doubt as to what sector will be the next to be attacked by the infantry. The first warning that the Germans have that the British seek to gain a certain frontage is a sudden increase of gunfire in that sector to a tornado under which it does not seem possible that a mouse could escape alive. Usually this tornado is brief compared to the old-fashion of artillery preparation, while it lasts long enough to enable the British infantry to rush from their lines to the German trenches while all the German machine guns and rifle fire are stilled. It is amazing how the co-operation of infantry and artillery has improved by the battle practice of the offensive.

THE FIGHT AT THIEPVAL.

About midday yesterday the British left had its turn in the region of Thiepval, at the other extreme of the battle front from Combles. Here the fighting line joins the old German front trench line, and the Germans, in their dugouts and galleries, have fought with the skill and stubbornness which characterizes them in this kind of warfare. "They stick like glue to these dugouts," said one British soldier, "because they know that once they are pushed back we do not give them time to dig any more."

A blackish heap of dirt on the crest of a ridge is all that remains of Thiepval. On the top of that heap there still rise a few black sticks, tree trunks slivered and hewn by shellfire which have escaped being downed by a direct hit. On July 1, the first day of the great offensive, the British tried to take Thiepval and failed. On this height to the north the whole Anglo-French movement pivots to the bank of the Somme.

COSTLIEST VILLAGE.

The British, in fierce little attacks now and then, have whittled and sapped their way toward that precious high ground, the capture of which extends the German front of defence and endangers other German positions. Hand to hand, bomb to bomb, with every trick of the modern trade of war, Germans and British have fought over these seamed slopes as if the war itself was to be decided here. Last night, after another effort, practically all of the village, the whole defence and siege of which cost more thousands of lives than any in France, is in British possession. This success is a source of greater satisfaction to the average British soldier than the taking of Combles or any other village or strong point in the nearly three months of continuous fighting.

NINETEEN VILLAGES SINCE JULY 1.

Since the offensive began the British have taken nineteen villages, and at some points their gains are now six miles in depth. Elation over the recent move is greatest at the casualty clearing stations, where the real cost of victory is best measured.

All surgeons report that the casualties have been surprisingly light. The weakening German resistance, which seems obvious to any spectator, is variously interpreted by the allied officers.

MERELY REARGUARD DEFENCE?

Some believe that the Germans are merly making a rearguard defence of the lower ground while their main forces fall back to another prepared line of trenches stretching from Bapaume; others insist that the unceasing hammer blows of the British and French are resulting in a decided softening in the morale and fighting power of their opponents. The soldiers in the ranks do not seem to be bothered with such speculations. "Give us more weather like this and let us push on," is the prayer alike of the English Tommy and the French poilu.

British Troops Have Progressed

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, Sept. 28.—The allies' new positions are being consolidated. German attacks were beaten off with heavy losses. Cavalry is now fighting in the open on the western front. British troops have progressed over a mile north-east of Thiepval.

French Have Re-captured 70 Square Miles of Country

PARIS, September 28.—A semi-official account of the battle of the Somme from its beginning (July 1) appearing in the Bulletin Des Armes says that the French have conquered 180 square kilometres (about 70 square miles) of territory captured 30,000 unwounded prisoners, removed 4,808 wounded and taken 144 cannon, most of them of heavy calibre, 500 machine guns and other material.

It is pointed out that the Allies have broken the spirit of the Germans at Verdun, definitely deprived the enemy of an initiative and turned it in their own favour. Since the opening of the battle, the account says, the Germans have thrown into the battle sixty-seven new divisions and seventeen battalions, of which thirty-four divisions were on the English front and thirty-three divisions, with the seventeen battalions, were on the French front.

The Greek Army Will Be Mobilized Immediately To Join The Allies

King Constantine Expected to Sign the Mobilization Decree Within Forty-eight Hours—Army Comprises About 300,000 Men—Greek Foreign Minister Resigns Following Stormy Session of the Cabinet

ON THE WESTERN FRONT

LONDON, September 28.—The Greek army of 300,000 men will be mobilized immediately to join the armies of the Allies, said an unconfirmed despatch to-day. King Constantine was expected to sign the mobilization decree within forty-eight hours, Athens reported. The Government will then issue a proclamation to the people, denouncing Bulgaria's occupation of Kavala and other Greek ports, following this with a declaration of war.

Alexander Carapanos, the Greek Foreign Minister and anti-Ally in his sentiments, resigned, following a stormy session of the Cabinet with King Constantine. Presumably his resignation following the King's reported decision to range his armies alongside those of the Allies.

BRITISH CAPTURE OVER TEN THOUSAND PRISONERS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, September 28.—(By Frederick Palmer)—The British have taken over ten thousand German prisoners during the past two weeks. The surrender of Bapaume to the British imminent.

Through the night there was heavy fighting while the British were pressing forward with their guns in the paths of the day's gains. The sun rose with the promise of another splendid autumn dawn, only to become overcast later, interfering with all important artillery observation.

ONE THOUSAND TAKEN AT THIEPVAL.

Over 1,000 prisoners were taken in Thiepval and the Hohenzollern work. In a military sense this work, lying between Thiepval and Courcelette, was regarded as more important than the crushed ruins of the village.

Here, at the hinge of the battle front, with its old first line fortifications, all the power the guns could command has fought against the enemy's art of modern defence. The German dug-outs, which are so deep that a twelve-inch explosive shell could not penetrate to them, had their doors closed in by the debris from explosions.

"TANKS" USED AGAIN.

Indeed, with shell fire of all sorts the British had literally locked the Germans in their refuges, and under cover of its curtained appeared at the remaining open doorways and dug-outs, which all connected with underground galleries, and marched the occupants out as prisoners. The "tanks" assisted in the attacks, overwhelming the machine gun positions.

The taking of Thiepval and Hohenzollern work means that German gun positions around Grandcourt and the Ancre Valley are revealed, and already the Germans are reported to have begun a withdrawal of their batteries in that neighbourhood.

SERBS REPULSE VIOLENT ATTACKS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, Sept. 28.— A big battle is progressing between reinforced Bulgars and Serbs in west Greek Macedonia. Serbs have repulsed three violent attacks to-day. The German forces in the Dobrudja region were thrown back within twelve miles of the Rustchuk-Varna railway, with the Russo-Roumanians in pursuit.

"That man you were talking to is under suspicion of being an anarchist." "I don't care," replied Miss Cayenne. "With organized governments having nitro-glycerine around the earth by the ton, a little thing like a crank with a hand grenade does not seem worth noticing."—Washington Star.

To Surprise the lord of the household—

SERVE him a dish of the newest food creation, NEW POST TOASTIES, for breakfast tomorrow.

It may be he hasn't cared for corn flakes; and you, too, may share in that belief from experience with the old-style paper-thin kind.

But these new flakes are different. They don't depend on sugar and cream for their flavor. And they don't mush down when cream or milk is added.

NEW POST TOASTIES are made by a wonderful new process which brings out the true corn flavor. They bring you a new taste and a new breakfast delight.

Got DIARRHOEA FROM DRINKING BAD WATER

Had To Give Up Work

Mr. H. M. Ryckman, Port Rowan, Ont., writes: "Last year I was out in Saskatchewan. The water was very bad and I was taken with diarrhoea. In a few days I was in such bad shape I had to stop work. I got a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and had only taken a few doses when it was stopped, and I was soon able to go back to work again."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past seventy years, and has had such great success in curing all bowel complaints that many firms have undertaken to provide a substitute for it, even going so far as to use a similar name.

Do not be led into taking a substitute for "Dr. Fowler's" but insist on getting what you ask for.

"Dr. Fowler's" is safe and sure, but by taking some of these rank substitutes you may endanger your life.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

How They Saved the Gunner

By F. A. MITCHEL

The ships had met in deadly contest. For hours they had pounded each other, rammed each other, torpedoed each other. Some had gone down with crews ranging from 500 to 1,000 men. Some had limped away from the shot and shell, but the bulk were afloat and still firing. At last one side gave in under the longer range of the other and steamed away.

When the fight was over the captain of the Terror was going about among the wounded, speaking a word of praise to one, encouragement to another and sympathy to the dying. While speaking hopefully to a tar who had lost an arm he heard a voice behind him:

"Cheer up, Tom; we're going to sail for home. Think how proud father will be of you when I tell him how you served that gun, how when every other man of the gun squad had been disabled you hung on and fired the final shot that sank that submarine and saved the ship from being blown sky high. I think I see mother and the girls and little Jim coming down the walk to meet us, mother putting her arm about you, weeping for joy at getting you home and a pride at your bravery.

"Steady, old man! You're going to pull through. The blood has stopped flowing. All you want is something of the grit you showed in sticking to your gun and saving us all by the cool pointing you did at that submarine. Brace up, my boy, and all will be well.

"Keep your mind fixed on Sallie. Think how she is waiting and watching for you to come back to her. You bet we'll have a rattlin' wedding. I think I see myself as best man propp'in' you up, and I see Sallie tryin' to keep back some o' the smiles that crowd on to those pretty red lips of hers, her eyes dancin' with happiness and pride in the gunner that sank an enemy ship and saved his own from a sub."

The captain while listening to these words turned and saw two men, the one lying on the deck, pale and languid, the other kneeling beside him holding his hand. He had known that one of his guns had finished an enemy ship and that a gun had saved the Terror from an enemy submarine. Who fired the shot he had not known. Now he knew that one man had fired both shots and that he had stood by his gun when every other man at the piece had been stretched on the deck or blown to pieces.

"Tom," he said.

The hero's eyes were closed, and he did not open them. The man kneeling beside him was about to rise, salute and stand at attention when the officer placed his hand on his shoulder and prevented him.

"Brothers?" asked the captain.

"Yes, sir."

"Is there anything that you think will help to brace him?"

"He might be tided over, sir, if he heard a gun or a volley or if the marines would rattle a drum. He kept up till the fight ended, but when the firing ceased he fell away."

At this point an order was signaled from the admiral to give chase to one of the enemy's ships that was lagging behind the rest of the retreating fleet. The captain of the Terror transmitted the order to the proper officer and to man the forward guns. As soon as the Terror came within range of the vessel she pursued there was a loud boom.

Tom opened his eyes.

"We're at it again, Tom," said his brother. "Wouldn't you like to be at that gun? You can't do that, my boy—not just now, though you will in time. No doubt you'll fire many a shot after you've got your strength back."

There came from the forecastle the roll of a drum. The captain had ordered it. He had ordered the firing, too, not that he expected to damage the retreating vessel, but that he hoped the brave man who had saved his ship might be tided over the shoals of death and saved for his reward.

Another gun.

Tom made an effort to sit up. His brother gently held him down.

"Not yet, old man, not yet. You'll be in it again soon enough."

"So we did. We knocked the smithereens out of 'em. One of 'em is trying to get away, and our men are trying to sink her."

"Are they doing it?"

"You bet! A few more shots will do the business. You're lookin' better, old fellow. There's the light of life in your eye. You're going to get well, and"—

"You're going to be an admiral some day," supplied the captain, who had returned from directing the operations against the enemy's ship to direct the saving of the hero of the fight. "You're to be mentioned in orders and promoted and sent home on leave, and at the next fight you'll probably command a fleet."

With this the captain went off to attend to other matters.

"Billy," said Tom, "get me some grog. I reckon I'm going to pull through."

Tom did pull through, and everything his brother had pictured came to pass. Some of the things the captain had promised were fulfilled too. Tom has not yet become an admiral, but he is an officer and in line of promotion.

A Frightful Death Suffocated In Asthma Attack

Every sufferer from asthma knows the terror, the abject fear that overcomes them when struggling for breath. The old fashioned remedies may relieve, but never cure. Best results come from Catarrhozone, which cures asthma after hope is abandoned. It's because Catarrhozone kills the asthma germ that it cures. Choking spells and laboured breathing are relieved, suffocating sensations and loss of breath are cured. Every trace of asthma is driven from the system, and even old chronics experience immediate relief and lasting cure. Equally good for bronchitis, throat trouble and catarrh. The large one dollar outfit includes the inhaler and lasts two months. Sold by all dealers or from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Canada.

Pretty Wedding Is Solemnized

Mr. John McCarthy of Hastings Enters the Ranks of the Benedicts

HASTINGS, Sept. 26.—A wedding of local interest was solemnized on Tuesday morning in the R. C. church here, when Miss Maggie Walsh, of Asphodel, became the bride of Mr. James McCarthy, one of our esteemed and prosperous business men. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. Bretherton in the presence of the immediate friends of the young couple. The bride was tastefully attired in a lovely travelling suit of seal brown, with hat to match. After the ceremony the guests repaired to the home of the bride, where a sumptuous wedding dejeuner was served, after which the happy couple were motored to Norwood, where the 3.10 train was boarded for a short honeymoon trip, and on their return will reside in Hastings. Mr. and Mrs. McCarthy are well and favourably known and the best wishes of a host of friends will follow them through life.

We regret to record the death of Willis, the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. George Dickey, of Percy, who passed away on Monday after a very short illness. The funeral will be held on Wednesday to the Trent Valley cemetery, where interment will be made. Mr. and Mrs. Dickey have the sympathy of the entire community in their sore bereavement.

News is just to hand of the wounding while in action of Pte. Wharrie, late of Hastings. His many friends are hoping that nothing serious may result.

We regret to learn of the demise of Mr. J. McMillen, which took place this morning in the Peterborough hospital. No further particulars are to hand.

Sunday was observed in the Presbyterian church as Flower Sunday, when the church was profusely decorated and a good sermon delivered by the pastor, Rev. D. A. Thomas.

A number of our citizens motored to Lakefield on Wednesday last to attend the fair.

We regret that we cannot report any improvement in the condition of Mr. Alfred Parsons, who is lying in a very critical condition.

Those who attended the rural school fair at Westwood on Wednesday last, report a good attendance and a choice exhibit.

Dr. and Mrs. Wade, of Roseneath, were in town on Saturday calling on friends.

Mrs. V. German spent a couple of days this week with friends in Peterborough.

Mr. Burnham of Peterborough, gave us a call during the week.

Miss Flo Carter spent the week end in Peterborough.

Mrs. Jack Collins, of Otonabee, is on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Beamish.

SOLDIERS THREE ARE COMPARED BY BIG EDITOR

Lord Northcliffe, writing from "Somewhere in Italy," says:

To speak of our British Tommy — with whom, of course, I include his Australasian and Canadian cousins—the French Jacques, and the Italian Beppo as the three chief allied fighters on the western front is not to overlook that other heroic figure, the Belgian Jean. In numerical comparison the brave little Belgians are so few that they cannot be classified with the mighty armies of France and Great Britain and the great army of Italy.

I am writing only of the soldiers whom I have seen in action. It has not been my pleasure to accompany the Russians.

In point of pure chivalry I set Tommy and the brave young men who have swarmed from the Dominions on the top of a very high pedestal. Tommy is not fighting for the immediate defence of his own country. His mother, wife and children are on his own soil. But were Tommy fighting for the defence of Surrey or Yorkshire, of Scotland, Wales or Ireland, he could not fight with greater spirit, with more steadiness than he is doing on the Somme and in the Flanders trenches to-day.

Tommy has proved an altogether unexpected character, even to those who thought they knew him. He is not in the least like Kipling's soldiers who represented a past generation. One essential in which he differs from all the soldiers of the world is his neatness and smartness. Neatness and smartness are akin to physical well being, that is to say, to health, and with armies as with cities health comes first.

Tommy's amazing cheerfulness under all conditions, his love of singing and music, often indeed of curiously sentimental melodies, has come as a surprise. As a wounded man he is notoriously one of the most remarkably light-hearted and merry-faced hospital inmates yet known. As an infantry soldier he maintains to the utmost the high credit given him by Napoleon and the Duke of Wellington in the wars of a hundred years ago. For sheer coolness and bulldog tenacity there is nothing to approach him.

In the horrible days of the early part of the war, when we were practically unprovided with shells or guns, he stood the appalling German artillery bombardment in the trenches around Ypres for days in a manner that made the Huns think him almost superhuman. To-day, now that he is provided with guns of all kinds, and especially with bombs, in throwing which he is a master, he has come into his own.

He is a particular man is Tommy both as to his appearance and his food, and the infinite variety of his diet is a credit to his taste as a gourmet and some small tribute on the part of a nation which knows it is impossible to repay our men for their daily sacrifices in France, in Mesopotamia, in Africa, and in the many other odd places in which they are holding up the flag and crushing the Hun.

FRENCH TOUGHNESS.

Jacques, the French poilu, is also a revelation of the war. Somehow or other we had got it into our heads that Jacques was chiefly good in spirited attacks. But what a lesson this war has been in the astounding obstinacy and toughness of the French Jacques! At the word "Verdun" every lover of the allied cause should raise his hat. For six months the mightiest artillery in the world has thundered at its gates. For six months Jacques in his pale-blue coat and his pale-blue steel helmet, has defied gunnery that has been 40 years in preparation. I claim that Verdun is the greatest victory in the war, and that Germany's failure to take it has had more effect in neutral countries than any land operation that has happened since August, 1914.

Jacques' habits are altogether different from those of our men, and in many ways his character does not resemble ours. In such homely, simple matters as a chanson or a fragment of harmonized verse the differences in national characteristics may often be revealed. The songs of the French soldier are quite different from ours. As often as not they sing old French war chansons. Ours is a grimmer army than the French. Our men are merry enough, bivouacking and in billets, but marching along the poplar lined roads in France, as I have so often seem them of late, they have the serious mein of Englishmen which has been noted by foreign commentators for centuries past.

The French march with a quicker step and very good marchers they are and throw out their jokes right and left to every passer-by, and especially when a pretty girl is in sight. I once drove behind a very fat chauffeur through the French lines, and the poor man was almost chaffed off his seat by the poilus. All this strength, energy and jocularity is largely produced by soup and bread, with a comparatively small modicum of wine.

The French and Italian soldiers like soup just as much as our men hate it. In winter time I think we might take a leaf out of the book of our French and Italian friends and try some of their excellent and strengthening soups, in which rice, macaroni, and Parmesan cheese play a large part, as also of course plenty of meat, onions and other vegetables.

ITALIAN ENDURANCE.

Beppo, the typical Italian soldier, wears a steel helmet similar to that of the French, very smart grey clothes, and is immensely strong. He has done most of the heavy work in the United States and many parts of Canada for the last quarter of a century. Come of a nation that has given the world some of its best masons and quarrymen, we are not surprised to find him a wonderful trench builder and road maker. He is able to withstand heat that neither the Englishman nor the Frenchman could endure for long. And he can and does endure for seven months in the year a degree of heat rarely felt in the United Kingdom. He has been patient for years. He comes of patient stock, and he is fortunate in the possession of one of the greatest generals of the war. He means to get rid of the Austrian menace once and for all.

His aid to cheerfulness is often the guitar. At the beginning of the war the Austrians referred to the Italians scornfully as "these mandolinists." By this time they know that the man with the mandolin is also the man with the big gun, the bomb and the bayonet.

Beppo is a fine fighter, a quick digger, a master of Alpine warfare, and an expert flyer. He has only been in the war for 15 months and he is daily learning all sorts of tricks and devices of his own. He was as badly prepared as we were at the outset. To-day he is giving the Austrians, Hungarians, and the rest of them a very bad time, indeed.

COUNTRY CHEESE BOARDS.

Brockville, Ont., Sept. — The usual factories and all the combinations registered at Thursday's meeting of the cheese board, making a total offering of 3,344 boxes. The bidding fell below the marks established at other boards, and as a consequence the salesmen refused to part with their goods. Most of the buyers participated in the bidding at prices ranging from 19c to 19 1-4c, the last mentioned figure being the offer of Smith and Webster, who trailed each other after 19 1-2c was passed. On the street the market advanced one-quarter of a cent and it was paid freely. This was five-eighths below the best bid of a week ago and the salesmen were disappointed at the drop. The regulars will bring the total transactions to about 5,000 boxes.

Kingston, Ont., September 18.—At the cheese board 215 boxes of white and 535 colored were boarded; 19 7-8c bid, but no sales.

A BLOOD-FOOD DISCOVERED THAT ENTIRELY OVERCOMES ANAEMIC WEAKNESS

CAREFULLY INVESTIGATED REPORTS ESTABLISH TRULY WONDERFUL RESULTS.

Heretofore it has often been a hopeless task for a thin-blooded person to gain either strength or weight. Neither food or medicine in many instances had beneficial effect.

What is practically a perfect blood-food, containing such elements as Iron, has at last been produced, and when taken after meals will put new life and vigor into people that have despaired of ever being strong again.

This wonderful blood-food supplies nourishment, vim, energy — sends a stream of vigorous, strength-making blood to every nook and corner of the body, makes every muscle and fibre sing with new-found life and health.

That gnawing tiredness leaves you —Ferrozone drives it away. Sleepless nights are turned into periods of rest, and you pick up fast. Day by day your appetite improves,—this means more food is transformed in nutriment that will build and energize weak organs. The inclination to worry passes away because Ferrozone imparts nerve — tone and bodily strength that prevents depression.

Think it over—Ferrozone is a wonderful tonic, in fact, it is more than a tonic, because it establishes health that lasts. Thousands use it and thereby cleanse and restore the entire system to a perfect condition. You'll feel the uplifting power of Ferrozone in a week,—it's bound to help you if you only give it the chance. Sold by all dealers, 50c. a box or six boxes for $2.50; be sure of the name Ferrozone. Forwarded by mail to any address if price is remitted to The Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Waiting For Time.—A musketry instructor was putting a company of recruits through the first practice of firing on the range, but before the fire order was given he reminded all of them to take the regulation aim, which was that they must keep their sights perfectly upright, and the top of the foresight to be in the centre and in line with the shoulders of the "V" of the back sight, and to aim at the bull at six o'clock. The fire order was given and the instructor noticed that one young man had not moved. He went to him and said: "How is it that you have no commenced firing?" Quick came the unexpected reply:—"Why, it is only half-past four yet, sergeant, and you told me to fire at six o'clock."

Yet there must be some pleasure in being a model citizen.

Money is useful as a servant, but tyrannical as a master.

Lazy men are dead to the world, but they remain unburied.

Card playing can't be very wicked as not one heart in the deck is black.

The man who weds an old flame often finds she has a red hot temper.

Luck may be a good servant, but as a master his pay days are uncertain.

GLASS OF SALTS CLEANS KIDNEYS

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys will act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer is a source of irritation, thus ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this, also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Butter and Eggs Hold An Impregnable Position Now

Butter and eggs seldom hold the market position that they occupy today. From a local consideration alone prices are exceptionally firm, stocks are decidedly light and the outlook, from the consumer's standpoint, is very discouraging, and the outside supply offers no hope of early supply. In fact the general feeling points to record high prices before a new season opens. Such is the prospect and there is little doubt of its fulfillment.

Locally some grocers were paying to-day 39c for dairy butter and selling it at 40c. A margin of one cent means that their selling price is likely to be moved up.

Of all the markets affected by present conditions, milk is in a particularly delicate position. There is no manipulation behind it. A summer's drought has burned up the pasturage to an extent that the milk supply is seriously curtailed. Such is the primary cause. Furthermore the cattle are likely to go into winter quarters in a decidedly poor condition, thereby diminishing the winter's milk supply.

On the other hand, heavy exportations of cheese and butter have been steadily leaving the country and milk and its products have been advancing to a strong position.

CHEESE HOLD UP.

Cheese touched 21c on the Napanee board last Friday and has held close to that figure in the meantime. On Tuesday of this week Sterling sold at 20 9-16c, and in all likelihood the big price offers will be maintained until the factories close.

Regarding butter, local grocers are combing the country for supplies. The farmers upon whom they depended in the past are, in many cases unable to offer any quantities now, hence the butter difficulty.

EGGS, TOO.

The same applies to eggs. Nobody is attempting to estimate what top price this commodity will record between now and mid-winter. Mid-week local quotations are from 38c to 40c.

ENGLAND SHORT OF BUTTER.

New York, Sept. 27.—It is estimated by butter experts that foreign shipments of butter from New York will reach 100,000 packages or fully 6,000,000 pounds, before Dec. 1. In addition to this about 8,000 packages have already cleared from Boston, and upwards of 50,000 packages have been purchased in the West for shipment via Montreal, considerable of which has gone forward. To take approximately 10,000,000 pounds out of the stock in this country and send it to England is an item of much importance when the whole butter situation is under consideration.

The export business has assumed larger proportions than anyone calculated on. Up to Saturday night, the shipments from this port to Great Britain, chiefly since August 1, were about 59,500 packages, mostly 60 lb. tubs but including a few thousand 56-lb. boxes. And it is understood that 15,000 to 20,000 packages have been purchased or contracted for to go out as freight room can be secured.

England is undoubtedly very short of butter. None of the Serbian stock is available and it will be well into November before the Australasian product arrives in London in any quantity.

BUTTER AND EGGS.

Dairy butter, 38c.
Creamery butter, 40c.
Eggs, per doz., 38 to 40c.

OTHER PRICES.

Granulated sugar, per cwt., $7.80.

Royal Household and Five Roses, $4.75.

The available world wheat stocks are reported to be 89,000,000 bushels more than a year ago. Recent exchange selling is not reflected in what appears to be a technical market in flour. The man on the street demands to be shown why every commodity should follow the general trend, especially seeking an explanation for one or two glaring cases.

HOGS DOWN TO $11.60.

Hogs dropped 15c this week and are quoted locally at $11.60. Lamb sold on Saturday at 21c and 23c a lb.

GRAIN PRICES.

THE BRITISH DRIVE CLOSER TO BAPAUME

MORE GAINS ANNOUNCED BY GENERAL HAIG

THE BRITISH ADVANCE THEIR LINES STILL CLOSER TO THEIR OBJECTIVE

Push Forward Between Martinpuich and Gaudecourt and the Capture of the Village of Eancourt L'Abbaye From Which Point the Outskirts of Bapaume Are Visible---Fierce Bombardment of German Lines is Carried On By the French.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, September 28.—The British drove on last night in the great Somme battle which has raged unceasingly since Monday morning and advanced their lines between Martinpuich and Gueudecourt, General Haig reported this evening

The new British thrust drew General Haig's lines close to the village of Eaudburt-Abbaye, east of which 2,000 yards of enemy trenches were captured in yesterday's fighting. The capture of this position within sight of the outskirts of Bapaume is considered imminent.

Result In Doubt Is Berlin Statement

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, September 28.—The Anglo-French armies renewed their attacks between the Ancre and the Somme last night. Northwest of Rancourt and east of Bouchavesnes the French retained German trenches. Near Thiepval and east of Eaucourt L'Abbaye the fighting is still going on with the result in doubt.

Near Korytnica the Austro-Germans recaptured positions lost to the Russians last Friday, capturing 2,843 men, several cannon and seventeen machine guns. In the Carpathians the enemy attack was repulsed.

Greece To Make Demand On Bulgaria

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, September 28.—The Greek King will make formal demand on Bulgaria that Kavala and other Greek cities be evacuated immediately under penalty of war. Athens despatches said mobilization probably will be ordered, pending the receipt of a reply from Bulgaria.

It is believed here that Bulgaria will parry with the statement that she has no intention of permanently occupying Greek territory. Greece is then expected to declare war. The Greek Cabinet met again to-day to consider a draft of the ultimatum.

German Losses This Week 50,000 at Least

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, September 28.—French correspondents estimate the German losses in the Somme offensive this week at fifty thousand.

German Defensive Has Crumbled

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, September 27.—French jubilation over the continuous successes of the Allied armies is reflected in the following symposium of views expressed by foremost military critics ond observers:

By General Berthaut—The fall of Combles and Thiepval on the same day destroys the validity of the German claim of invincibility. The German defensive is crumbling, and the Allies are methodically hammering away. Still more decisive successes are ahead.

By General Cherfils—Prince Rupprecht is not yet at the end of his troubles. The Germans so far have felt only a part of the weight of pressure we are preparing to bring to bear to force their retreat.

By Lieut.-Col. Roussett—Yesterday's gains have a very appreciable tactical value, which has changed the situation considerably in our favour. I do not believe I shall be mistaken in predicting that the consequences will soon appear.

By Gustave Herve—The German armies will be completely wasted before they reach the Meuse. The moment will arrive when the wall will be breached and our victorious armies will bury the Germans under an avalanche. Let the God of armies give us six weeks of fine weather and we shall see what the Germans will get.

PARIS (French Official), September 28. — French artillery vigorously shelled the German organizations on the Somme front last night, but there were no infantry attacks, the War Office announced to-day.

Bulgarians Suffer Very Heavy Losses

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, September 28.—Bulgarians took a few elements of Serbian trenches in attacks on Kamakchalan Ridge, but suffered such heavy losses that they did not renew the attacks, the War Office announced to-day.

All other Bulgarian attacks in Macedonia were repulsed.

DESERTER FOUGHT LIKE A FIEND.

St. Catharines, Ont., Sept. 28. — William Fix of this city, a soldier of the Welland Canal protective force, who escaped from the Welland jail two months ago, and for whom the authorities of the whole district have been looking for weeks, was arrested at Vineland, six miles from here, after putting up a fight. Some of the soldiers recognized him and told the constable. Fix drew a knife and then fought like a fiend, but was overpowered. He is now in jail. Fix deserted from the force and when arrested was given six months. He escaped from jail when the guard turned his back

"THE FIGHT MUST BE TO A FINISH—TO A KNOCKOUT"

Germany Elected to Make It a Finish Fight and Now Britain Intends to See That the Huns Get What They're Asking For.

LLOYD GEORGE'S NEWS

Examiner Special:

LONDON, Eng., Sept. 28. — Right Hon. David Lloyd George, Britain's man of the hour, has given his first statement since becoming Secretary of State for War, to representatives of the United States and Canadian newspapers, in an interview with Roy W. Howard, President of the United Press. Lloyd George in this interview candidly states that in his opinion the end of the war is not in sight. Any steps made at this time by the United States, the Vatican or any other neutral in the direction of peace, would be construed by British as an unneutral, pro-German move.

Asked for his opinion in "simple" language toward the recent peace talk, Lloyd George dropped into sporting colloquialisms, which he said would be understood in America. The British soldiers enlisted in this war in a sporting spirit in best sense of the term. They went in to see fair play to the small nations, who were being trampled by a bully. For two years they had a bad time, being sadly inferior in numbers, equipment and in training to their opponent. But they never squealed, said Lloyd George and fought and died like good sportsmen. At this time Germans were not worrying about the terrible slaughter, but were annexing Poland and Belgium, and remaking the map of Europe generally without regard to the wishes of the people.

"Now that the Germans are squealing," said Lloyd George, "Britain is not disposed to stop, nor be influenced by well meaning but misguided sympathizers and humanitarians.

"Germany elected to make it a finish fight with England," said Lloyd George. "And now we intend to see that Germany has her way. The fight must be to a finish—to a knock-out."

"At the same time," said Lloyd George, "there was something more than demand for vengeance in Britain's determination. It would be absolute cruelty to stop the war while there remains the possibility of civilization being menaced from the same quarter. It took England twenty years to defeat Napoleon, he recalled, and although it would not take twenty years to win this war, whatever time is required, it will be done, and Britain's allies were of the same firm determination."

"In the meantime," said Lloyd George, "there are neither clocks nor calendars in the British army. Time is the least vital factor. Only the result counts, not the time consumed in achieving it." "There will be no quitters among the allies," he said. "Never again" has become our battle cry. At home sorrow and suffering is great and growing. In the war zones, the suffering is terrible, but this ghastliness must never be re-enacted on this earth.

THE CALL FOR MEN

Do Peterborough people realize that just now the number of casualties reported among local soldiers at the front is far greater than the number of recruits who are joining the colours here at the present moment?? Do they realize the seriousness of the situation and appreciate the fact that soon there will not be enough Peterborough reserves to replace the men from this city who have been killed or injured at the front? Peterborough has sent 2,500 of her citizens to the colours. Of these by far the greater part are now overseas either at the front or in England. Here in Canada Peterborough is represented only by about twenty-five in the 247th, a similar number in the 235th, about thirty in the 74th Battery at Petawawa, and by fifty or sixty others scattered through the different units of the expeditionary force who have not yet gone overseas. The Peterborough casualties up to last night totalled approximately 300. Of these one hundred have been killed or died of wounds or illness, and another fifty missing or prisoners of war. The gaps left by these casualties have been filled by other Peterborough men, but soon the time will come when there will not be enough Peterborough soldiers in reserve to fill the gaps. That condition will surely arrive if there is not a greater response to the call for men. Just now the young men of Peterborough County have a splendid chance to join the colours under the most favourable conditions. The 247th Battalion offers them the opportunity of doing most of their preliminary training at home, as did the men of the 93rd, thus avoiding the breaking of the home ties for as long a period as possible. Not only that, but they will drill with their friends and acquaintances and go overseas with men they know instead of with men from all parts of the map. In addition the chances for promotion with most of the trained men already overseas, was never so great. Lt.-Col. Johnston will be pleased to talk matters over with any young man who believes that his place is on the firing line.

TWO MORE LOCAL SOLDIERS REPORTED ON WOUNDED LIST

Pte. F. B. Eggleton and Pte. Fred Anderson the Latest Additions to the Honour Roll---235th Battalion at Campbellford---Local Prisoner of War Writes From Germany ---To-day's General Military News.

WOUNDED.

No. 412456—Pte. Fred Eggleton, 539 Gilchrist street, 39th Battalion.

Two more Peterborough boys are officially reported wounded to-day, making seven reported in the last two days.

Mrs. Annie Eggleton, 539 Gilchrist street, has received an official message from Ottawa to the effect that her son, Pte. Fred Eggleton, Canadian Infantry, is reported admitted to No. 5 British Red Cross Hospital, Wimereux, on September 19th, suffering from gun shot wounds in the legs. Pte. Eggleton enlisted here with the 39th Battalion on January 15, 1915, and went overseas with that unit, afterwards being drafted to another Canadian battalion at the front. He was just nineteen when he joined the colours. His father, Gunner Eggleton, enlisted in the 33rd Battery here in the summer of 1915, and was wounded some time ago.

Word was received last night that Pte. Fred Anderson, who enlisted here in June of last year with the 57th Regiment's draft for the 59th Battalion, is officially reported admitted to No. 8 Stationary Hospital, Wimereux, wounded in the right forearm. Pte. Anderson, who was born in Canada, resided at 613 Union street, and his mother, Mrs. Mary Anderson, is his next-of-kin. He is unmarried and was twenty-eight years of age when he enlisted. He had no previous military experience. Pte. Anderson's family have moved from 613 Union street since he went overseas.

Lieut. Arthur Ackerman is now officially reported wounded. A message from Ottawa last night to his parents stated that he had been wounded and admitted to No. 5 Red Cross Hospital, Boulogne, on September 24th. No further particulars have been received.

Mr. John Pritchard of this city has received the following interesting letter from his brother, Private A. Pritchard, 4th Battalion, Canadian Mounted Rifles, who is now a prisoner of war in Germany. Is address is as follows:—Pte. A. Pritchard, 4th Battalion, C.M.R., Number 54183, Friedrichsfeld (bei Wesel, Rheinland.)

The letter was originally addressed to his mother in England and subsequently forwarded to his brother in Peterborough. The letter reads as follows:

I now find it a great pleasure when I am writing you a few lines for you see I don't get a chance to write as often as I used to. But never mind, mother, we must make the best of things at a time like this. You will see by my above address that I have now left the hospital and am now in camp, which is quite a change, for there is plenty of life in the camp and sports of all kinds. So you see we have something to pass the time away. If one could manage to get a few parcels each week we could manage this life for

Grocers' Early Closing By-law

Over Eighty Grocers Will Benefit —Grocers Advance Several Good Reasons Why Stores Should Close Earlier

A REMEDY

Below are several good reasons why the grocers united to ask the Council to pass an early closing by-law, seven-eights of whom signed the petition, and at least one who did not sign it, closes at seven o'clock.

The poor grocers will only have to work thirteen hours, or from six o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock in the evening when they can go to tea, which is impossible under existing conditions.

One of the main reasons for asking for a by-law is that a man living at a store is compelled to sell at all hours or run the risk of giving offence. If it is against the law to sell goods after a certain hour the grocer will then be able to take a rest and enjoy a little fresh air on his verandah without having to open up his store or run the risk of giving offence.

Another reason and a vital one, as shown by last week's issue to the Canadian Grocer, is that the influx of foreigners and the invasion of the grocery business has seriously affected the trade. The grocers must get together if the standard of the grocery business is to be maintained.

The by-law provides that the stores remain open Saturday evening, nights before a public holiday and four evenings before Christmas. It will be a boon to outside grocers and should be appreciated by those on the inside who often close their shops as early as six-fifteen o'clock in the evening.

The grocers in the past have invited late shopping by keeping their stores open. They now appeal to the buying public for support and co-operation in an effort to shorten the hours of labour. They feel sure that the buying public will gladly fall in line and help remedy conditions that at present are intolerable.

Greeks To Enter On Side of The Allies

PTE. FRED EGGLETON, who went overseas with the 39th Battalion, and who is officially reported wounded. His father, Gunner Eggleton, of the 33rd Battery, was wounded some time ago.

Reports That King Constantine Has Surrendered Utterly to the Demands of Pro-entente Leaders —Only Way to Save the Nation

A HISTORIC CONFERENCE

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Council of Greek Ministers has decided, in agreement with King Constantine, upon military co-operation with the Entente Powers says a Reuter despatch from Athens, dated Wednesday.

King Constantine has surrendered utterly to the demands of the pro-Entente leaders. The King is said to have made his last stand for continued neutrality at the Cabinet Council which began yesterday evening and lasted for the greater part of the night. His wife, the sister of Emperor William of Germany, was by his side at the historic conference.

The King's decision came only, it is reported, after it had been clearly demonstrated to him that entrance into the war was the only way to save the nation, as both army and navy are shattered by the partisanship arising from the continued uncertain course of Greece.

As a first move toward the bringing of Greece into the theatre of hostilities it is reported that the Kalogeropoulos Cabinet will resign. A Royal proclamation is expected momentarily in Athens.

OFFICERS JOIN REBELS.

The chaotic political situation in Greece is indicated by despatches which state that the majority of the high officers of the army have gone over to Venizelos, the pro-Allie reputed leader, who landed at Canea Crete, to-day to head the army of rebels which has landed on the island. According to an unverified report three Greek battleships with all their officers and crews have gone over to the allies, joining the Franco-British Mediterranean fleet. These vessels are said to be the Psara, Spetsai, and Hydra. These Greek battleships are each of 4,808 tons displacement, and their main armament consists of three 10.6-inch and four 5.9 inch guns. Four torpedo boat destroyers also are said to have joined the allied armada.

GREAT BACKING FOR VENIZELOS.

A despatch to The Daily Telegraph from G. J. Stevens, its correspondent at Athens, who succeeded in securing passage on the liner Hesperia, which carried Venizelos and his aides to Suda Bay,, on the north coast of Crete and forwarded from the latter point, says:

"Two score or more Generals, Colonels and other officers, and one Admiral, besides Admiral Condouriotis, the naval chief, together with three naval commanders and numerous politicians took passage on the Hesperia for Crete. They are going with M. Venizelos to find a new Greek Government. In groups of three and fours they reached the quay at Piraeus in the dead of night, making their way to the liner in small boats."

On the heels of this message came news agency reports stating that Gen. Moschopoulos, Chief of Staff of the Greek army, solemnly told King Constantine that the only way to save the country was to enter the war. He presented a detailed report to the Monarch showing the havoc wrought in the military ranks by the disaffection of hundreds of officers and men, who have gone over to join the allies and revolutionaries.

In Canea alone it is reported 4,000 troops joined the rebels, leaving only a handful who remained loyal.

The arrival of Venizelos at Canea was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm, according to a Central News despatch. The former Premier and "strong man" of the allies is expected to give out an early manifesto, setting forth his reasons for accepting leadership of the "national movement." This, no doubt, will cover much the same ground as that made public after his departure from Athens, in which he indicated that his object was to force the hand of King Constantine in bringing Greece under the flag of the allies.

From Saloniki comes the announcement that a second contingent of Greek troops has left for the front, where they will co-operate with the Entente forces against the Central Empires and Bulgarians.

MILLION DOLLARS ONTARIO GRANT TO PATRIOTIC FUND

Provincial Cabinet Unanimous in Passing Grant From the Province —Large Sum Will Be Voted For the Promotion of Military Aviation

CANADA'S PROSPECTS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Ont., Sept. 28.—As predicted yesterday the Ontario government announced to-day its vote of one million dollars to the Canadian Patriotic Fund. Provincial Treasurer McGarry said the cabinet was unanimous in voting this money. It is probable that the government will also vote a large sum for the promotion of military aviation in the province.

Canada's Prosperity.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Canada's prosperity is being reflected these days in the large number of companies being incorporated by Dominion Letter Patent throughout Canada. For the first eight months of the present year fees totalling $92,600 have been collected from companies incorporated. Seven of the companies which secured incorporation were capitalized at half a million and over.

ANOTHER DRAFT OF 93rd LEFT FOR THE FRONT RECENTLY

Mr. F. W. Miller has received a letter from his son Sergt.-Major Miller of the 93rd Battalion, dated Sept. 14th, in which he wrote that he had just returned from France, whither he had gone with the first draft from the 93rd. He spent four days there and comments that is it "some country." Another draft was expected to leave in that week and the Sergt.-Major expected to go over with them. "There will soon be no one left here but Col. Johnston, Paymaster Burnham and myself. The old battalion has been all broken up." Sergt.-Major Miller sent home to his wife pieces of the Zeppelin that was brought down near Enfield.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, SEPT. 28, 1916

PRESENT PRUDENCE, FUTURE PROFIT.

The Journal of Commerce and the Manitoba Free Press bring up the question of the wisdom of rebuilding the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa now or after the war. It is, indeed a question, and a very pertinent one, whether it is wise to reconstruct such expensive buildings at a time when our expenditures are at the highest point in our history, and when the need is not urgent. It seems to be as inappropriate a time to do such work as it is to tap the public purse for money to build homes for hospital nurses. The temporary quarters for parliamentary purposes used last year will do in the emergency. They are, of course, not as convenient as properly built and equipped buildings, but at this time convenience is not to be consulted at the expense of greater interests. We must all make sacrifices and meet the demands of the time. The soldiers in the trenches, facing shot and shell, have, by no means, the conveniences which they would have at home. If they do their duty and face inconvenience, as well as danger and death in the discharge of that duty, our easy-going and not overworked legislators cannot proportionally suffer by using temporary buildings. Then the matter of expense enters into the question, too. At this time the rate of wages and the cost of material are at their highest. Workmen are scarce, and what limited workemn we have are now, and will for some time be, demanded for work incident to our contribution of material for war. For these reasons private building operations, except of the most urgent kind, are suspended. It is a fact that in this period of prosperity, of money and employment plenty, the people, as a whole, are not strictly fulfilling the government's injunction to individual and national economy and thrift, the absolutely necessary preparation for the convulsion or revulsion in economic conditions that will come at the close of the war. And what good will government injunctions to this end be if the government sets the example of immense national expenditure at a time when the prudent expenditure of every dollar should be limited to absolute necessities? The whole nation and empire are on the bed of Procustes, and we must adapt ourselves to it.

WHAT IT MEANS.

The news from the front has become monotonous in its progressive sameness. The continuously successive smashes of the German positions can only be explained by two causes, increasing efficiency of allied forces and corresponding decrease of German power of resistance. Irresistibility on one side and decreased fighting force, broken spirit and impaired morale on the other, tell their own tale. Germany has posed as invincible; and many of us came to believe that she was so; that the Allies would never reach the German boundary. Now the way is open and the irresistible pressure of strengthened, fit, well fed, and abundantly armed allied armies, against depleted, insufficiently equipped and virtually raw levies is overwhelming. The Allies, stronger than ever, have driven Germany at her highest point of fighting efficiency from Germany's strongest entrenchments, prepared by two years of hard, thorugh and skilful work. From this time on the fighting will be less desperate—strengthened attack on weakened resistance, upon hastily prepared and defective defences, held by disheartened and beaten troops, will have easier and quicker results. The "day" Germany looked for has never dawned, but the "day" of Britain and her allies has already dawned, and is brightening to full splendour. Not only on the western front, but on every front the Teuton allies see nothing but reverse, and Germany, the arch criminal will before long be at bay facing the quadruple entente with the dupes she had schemed to bring to her aid—Austria, Bulgaria, and Turkey—wiped out of the field and off the map. Then the Allies will have Germany where they want her. Then, good-bye Kaiser and Kaiserism. Then will take effect Premier Asquith's noble ultimatum:

We shall never sheathe the sword until Belgium recovers in full measure all, and more than all, that she has sacrificed, until France is adequately secured against the menace of aggression, until the rights of the smaller nationalities of Europe are placed upon an unassailable foundation, and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed.—Premier Asquith.

SEWAGE DISPOSAL.

The question of finally deciding the location of a sewage disposal plant is one that demands dispassionate, broad-minded and mature consideration. The matter resolves itself into consideration of the relative claims of covenience and inconvenience, of advantage and detriment of mutual neighbours. It is true that the site selected and approved by the Provincial Board of Health, is convenient and relatively economical far as city finances are concerned. In this view it is a site that from a purely material and money point of view, has its advantages. But to residents of the township in the vicinity it is an inconvenience and a detriment, making, it is reasonably claimed, the locality less desirable for residence, and of course, depreciating the value of property.

The question is to reconcile these conflicting interests. Those affected detrimentally are, it is true, at present residents of another municipality, and have no legitimate, or, rather, legal, claim upon the consideration of the city authorities, only in the light of regard of the Scriptural injunction of loving one's neighbour as oneself. But that relation is only temporary and is soon bound to cease. It will not be long before the whole occupied district north of the proposed sludge park and the city boundry will be annexed to the city. In view of that event the city authorities are now dealing prospectively with the interests of their constituents—our own fellow citizens. The district affected is thickly occupied, and will become more so.

The aldermen must recognise that we are a growing city, and new suburban population areas are rapidly growing. If, in relation to surrounding population, it is a proper and defensible thing to place the sewage disposal site where proposed, it would have been as proper and defensible and as feasible a thing only a few short years ago, to have placed a sewage disposal plant on the "Priest's Lot" and the Elias Burnham property, now both completely covered with a splendid class of residence buildings and one of the most desirable residential sections of the city.

In another way the authorities should look ahead. The beauty spots of the river front and pleasant access to the river will neither be promoted by the adornment of a sewer farm or winding walks among sludge beds. We have been cursed—if that is not too strong a word—with lack of foresight. Nearly our whole river front has been commercialized, and we have lost the enjoyment of its beauty and pleasure giving. We have sacrificed numerous beauty spots and if we plant a sewage plant upon one of the most beautiful stretches of our river front and easily accessible from the city we shall add anther similar sacrifice.

Of course the Provincial Board of Health have no objection to the site. All they are concerned with is the suitability of the site from a technical, mechanical and Board of Health point of view. The Board doesn't care a fig for the depreciation of adjacent property nor the destruction of beauty of surroundings of a district that is potentially and prospectively, if not destroyed, one of the most beautiful residential sections of the city. That seems to be a matter for the city authorities to take into account.

We can all sympathise with the aldermen in the difficulties the sewage disposal site matter has plunged them in, through the action of the Provincial Board of Health, but it is evident, in a larger view of present and future conditions, that it is the duty of the aldermen to consider the situation in the new light that has been thrown upon it of late.

It is said that there are good sites further west and further away from the river, whose selection would involve more cost. But would the increased expense be greater than the depreciation in property value of a district that in a few years will be a part of the city, if it is not depopulated by planting in its midst a sewage disposal plant.

The situation is admittedly a difficult one; but with a little give and take on the part of both the inevitably conflicting interests; with a little moderate and dispassionate discussion, it seems possible that a solution can be arrived at that will be fairly satisfactory to all the parties concerned. One feature of the matter should not be lost sight of, and that is the necessity of considering the future as well as the present—a regard for the future interests, material and aesthetic, of Peterborough as an expanding city.

SHALL WE REBUILD PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS NOW OR AFTER WAR?

A very sensible suggestion has come from the "Winnipeg Free Press" respecting contemplated arrangements for the reconstruction of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. If it is thought necessary for the country to engage in controversy over rival methods of construction, all operations should be suspended, and the work of rebuilding should be postponed until after the war. The more this suggestion is considered, the more likely it is to find favour in the eyes of the people.

In this time of war it is necessary to observe carefully the distinction between the things that are urgent and those that may conveniently be laid aside for future consideration. In various parts of the country public expenditures have been suspended or curtailed, because the works to which they refer, while they may be important enough at another time, are not at present regarded as matters of urgency, and the reconstruction of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa clearly comes within this class. There is really no urgency for the reconstruction of the buildings; nobody is suffering because the buildings have not been reconstructed, and the government fortunately had in the Victoria Memorial Museum a building which without much trouble or expense was converted into a temporary Parliament House that served its purpose very well. Both Senate and House of Commons were very comfortably housed indeed. On the important points of light and ventilation, the temporary parliament building is better than the building that was destroyed by fire. There is no reason why the affairs of parliament cannot be carried on in the Museum building until after the war. There is, of course, some inconvenience in having the Parliament House a considerable distance away from the Departmental Offices, but who experts public affairs, or for that matter, any affairs to be carried on these days without inconvenience. While in the hurry of the last season the work of parliament was quick, the public business was well carried on in the Museum building, and no doubt additional conveniences could be furnished and for a year or two the building would serve all urgent purposes.

The foregoing seem to be strong reasons in favour of suspending all operations upon the reconstruction on the building on Parliament Hill, but there are other reasons which should also have much weight. The rebuilding of such magnificent buildings at the time would be enormously expensive. Materials are expensive, labour is high and hard to obtain at any price. The class of man who is needed for the work of rebuilding, is the very class of man who is very much needed in the trenches of France and Belgium. The work of recruiting is not making all the progress that can be desired. The undertaking of the reconstruction of the parliament buildings will unquestionably increase the difficulty which is already expressed by those who have in hand the recruiting movement in the Ottawa district.

Still another reason may be forcibly urged in the favour of delay. The problem of unemployment after the war is likely to be one of the most serious that will engage the attention of the authorities. The reconstruction of the parliament buildings after the war would give employment to a very large number of men at a time when there will be much need for such work. There is no need of it now. Every man in Canada to-day who wants work can get it. Clearly then at such a time any public undertaking that is not of an urgent character should be diverted in order that it may be made valuable at a later day when it would be useful to help to solve the problem of unemployment.

For all these reasons we further concur in the proposal of the Winnipeg writer who advocates the suspension of the present building at Ottawa, and the postponment of the work of reconstruction until after the war.—Journal of Commerce.

ONTARIO HAS HAD GREATEST FOREST FIRES OF HISTORY

The Northern Ontario forest fire of July 29th last takes rank as the third most serious fire catastrophe in the history of this continent. The Hinckley fire in Minnesota, 1894, was responsible for 418 lives and the burning over of 160,000 acres. The famous Peshtigo fire in Wisconsin, 1871, killed 1,500 and devastated 1,200,000 acres of timber. In 1825 occurred the Mirimichi fire of New Brunswick and Maine, with a loss of 160 lives, six towns, 1,000 head of cattle, and damage of 3,000,000 acres of forest. The Clay Belt fire in Ontario, with 262 lives lost and 800,000 acres fire swept takes its place with the great disasters of history. The Porcupine fire in 1911 killed 84 persons.

It is noteworthy that Wisconsin, Minnesota, Maine and New Brunswick have taken comprehensive measures to prevent further disasters by organizing their forest patrol systems on modern lines, building trails, lookout towers, telephones, etc., as well as carefully supervising settlers' clearing fires, one of the worst sources of danger. Ontario, which has given the continent its two most recent fire catastrophes, has made no such move to modernize her forest guarding system.—Canadian Forestry Association.

Need Not Fear Specs.

Spectacled youths who aspire to niches in the hall of baseball fame need not count themselves unfit to don diamond spangles. By blending natural ability with perseverance and dogged determination any boy may overcome this handicap and qualify to pitch in the major leagues.

Lee Meadows is a shining example of what this combination may accomplish. Without this pitcher there's no telling just where the St. Louis Cardinals would be at present.

Meadows first donned the 'cheaters' when five years of age. Today, at 22, he is the star right hander of the Cardinals' slab corps, and has worked this season in one-third of the contests played by Huggins' crew.

Overcomes Several Handicaps.

"Every one attempts to discourage the youth who is handicapped, as I am, by nearsightedness," said Meadows, "but if a youngster has talent, love of the game, and wil stick and work, he'll make good, for his handicap is not an insurmountable one.

"When five years of age I was told that I would have to wear glasses for the remainder of my life. A few years later they caused my greatest handicap, for I loved baseball above all other games. As a boy I possessed some natural talent for the game, but those who played with me were always fearfully afraid that in some manner my glasse might be broken and I would be injured.

"Every attempt was made to discourage me, but I continued to play. My home was in Oxford, N. C., and I attended the military academy there. I made the baseball team, became their pitcher, and still attempts were made to discourage me, my friends claiming that it was a waste of time, as I would never be able to play professional baseball.

Drafted from Durham Team.

"At 18 years of age I went to the Durham (N.C.) team, pitched for two years, and was claimed by St. Louis. That's my story. My spectacles are not a handicap either in the field or at bat. I honestly do not believe that I could pitch any better could I throw them aside."

Meadows holds out little encouragement, however, for the youth who would strive for an infield, outfield, or catching berth if he wears specs.

Owing to the difficulty one would experience in judging fly balls or grounders the infielder or outfielder would be heavily handicapped.

PHILADELPHIA HAS MURDER MYSTERY

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 28. — The woman who shot and killed J. C. Graveur, of New York, seriously wounded his female companion, and then committed suicide in a prominent hotel here early yesterday, has been identified as Mrs. Harry Belzer, of New York, by a sister of the dead man. This sister, whose name is Mrs. Frances Apman, came here to-day and made the identification at the morgue.

Mrs. Apman told the police Mrs. Belzer's maiden name was Margaret McAndrews and that the woman had not been living with her husband recently. Graveur, she also told the police, was a widower and had been very friendly with Mrs. Belzer.

From cards found in Mrs. Belzer's handbag, the police at first believed she was Mrs. J. F. Ledur. The wounded woman in the hospital, at first reported to be Graveur's wife, has not made any statement.

SEIZE MISS CAVELL'S FRIEND

Germans Hold Polak, an American Diamond Merchant, in Brussels.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—Mrs. Isador Polak, who was awaiting the return here of here husband from Holland, visited the American Consulate Monday and requested aid of the officials there to obtain his relase. Polak was removed from the Dutch mail steamship Prins Rendrik when that vessel was taken by German naval forces into Zeebrugge last week. The State Department at Washington has been informed of the American's plight, and a message has also been sent to James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador at Berlin.

Polak is a wealthy diamond cutter who had homes in New York and Brussels. His family spent several months in the Belgian capital after the outbreak of the war and became friends and supporters of Miss Edith Cavell, the British nurse, who was executed by the Germans in Belgium, in her Red Cross work. Besides his diamond business Polak is part owner of a large automobile factory in Antwerp.

It is believed here that there will be no difficulty in securing Polak's release, as there is no question as to his American citizenship. According to the story told by some of the passengers of the Prins Mendrik, Polak engaged in a lively verbal duel with the German examining officer before he was removed from the ship.

Amazing—"Confound it all!" cried a business man. "I've forgotten my new telephone number. I didn't write it down because that's an indication of mental weakness." "What about forgetting the number?" said the other man. "Isn't that mental weakness, too? Is it the number of your home 'phone?" "Yes". "Then why not call up your wife and ask her what it is?" And without the slightest hesitation the forgetful man called up the forgotten number and asked his amazed wife what it was.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. ROLL OF HONOR

Several thousand officers and employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company enlisted for active military duty with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces, and the majority of them are now in Europe, bravely battling for Canada and the Empire.

As particulars of Army Reservists are not available, these lists of those who have given up their lives for their country or been wounded in action are necessarily incomplete, and do not therefore indicate fully the extent to which the Company's officers and employees have participated in the great struggle.

Are Disgusted With Zeppelins

Even Hungarians Are Sick of Useless Murder

LONDON, Sept. 27.—According to the correspondent of the Morning Post at Budapest aerial attacks against non-military objectives, such as the Zeppelin raids in London, are deeply resented by the Hungarians. The correspondent quotes a writer in the Hungarian paper Az Ujsag, commenting on the raid on England Saturday night as follows:

"It is a deplorable thing to send men in a fragile airship for the purpose of bombarding places that they cannot distinguish, to murder innocent civilians with the excuse that they did not mean to murder them.

"It is impossible for a Zeppelin commander to distinguish objects upon the ground from such heights as the Zeppelins fly."

The Amsterdam correspondent of The Times says that the Zeppelin raids on England always have been regarded with aversion in Holland. There is universal satisfaction among the people, though it is not expressed in the press, at the fate of two of the latest raiders. The newspapers speculate whether these losses will cause the Germans to ask themselves whether the results are commensurate with the cost, though it is not supposed that any considerations of humanity could make the Germans discontinue the attacks.

The Dutch newspaper Handelsblad Tyd emphasizes the bitterness that the raids occasion, and anticipates an increase in the force of the attacks with an increased number of victims on both sides. The Nieuws Van Den Dag thinks the Germans must begin to weigh in their minds the utility of the raids from a purely military standpoint.

KAISER HAS PUT ALL HIS FAITH IN VON HINDENBURG

If Field Marshal Fails, Weight of Blame is Less Likely to Fall on the Head of William II. — But Germany Dare Not Yet Admit the Issue

By J. L. Garvin, Editor of the London Observer.

London. — The battle of the Titans has been joined. The final drama is opened, and it will hold the world spellbound through act on act before the denouement comes near.

As I write, at one of the most exciting moments of the whole war, known events are big and strange enough to satisfy any appetite for sensation, if such a thing remains anywhere at this solemn time. But in addition to the facts the air is wild with reports. Once again we are told reality in the Balkans will beggar the invention of the playwrights and novelists who seek themes in imaginary kings, courts and political conspiracies.

The fact above all others is that Germany has awakened to realities at last. Rumania's blow shattered a fool's paradise. It is the fight for life on the part of two empires, and chiefly on the part of this formidable people which has, no doubt, made every error into which pride and vanity would lead a nation, but still cannot give up the desperate idea that its vast military system must somehow prove invincible no matter what forces it has challenged.

ALLIES NOT DECEIVED.

We allies, who have believed in taking a cool measure of the enemy, are under no deception. If we were we should be unworthy to win. We would rather magnify our task than underestimate it. Germany's fight for life must necessarily be a large business. More than eighteen months ago, when seeking to arouse my own country to the size of the undertaking, I ventured to say, and to repeat often afterward, that Germany was no more deceived about the issue of the war than was Britain about the cost, and that there would be a fight to stagger humanity before Germany went down.

Since the spring of last year that estimate has proved to be an accurate forecast. Britain knows the cost now—knows it better and faces it more grimly than the outer world even yet supposes.

GERMANY FEARS TO ADMIT ISSUE.

Germany does not yet admit the issue. She cannot afford to admit it. She is absolutely bound to deny that she is going to be beaten until she is beaten. But by her efforts and those of her opponents humanity has already been considerably staggered, and is quite certain to be staggered more and still more by the end of this year's campaign and the crises of the next.

One extraordinary moral admission however, has been already wrung from the enemy. Hindenburg's appointment meant several things, but was in the first case an open proclamation that the war of conquest has become the fight for life. All the elaborate calculations on which Germany of the Hohenzollerns was seduced into this struggle have broken down, and the men who made them are disappearing.

ROYAL HOUSE FIRST.

The Hohenzollerns think of their house first. That has always been their tradition. Whatever the Kaiser's belated step may do for his country it is a shrewd stroke in the interests of the dynasty. The Emperor who got rid of Bismarck would never until now permit any subject to overshadow himself. Why does he seem at the eleventh hour to acquire more humility? The subject now placed at the head of affairs as the military dictator and real national leader of Germany is summoned to a thankless task. If he succeeds lustre will be reflected on the dynasty itself as in the old way, when Bismarck and Moltke were the great managing agents of the crown.

But if Hindenburg fails the whole weight of the blame is less likely to fall on William II. No one who is at all acquainted with the importance of dynastic politics in Berlin and Vienna will think this suggestion far-fetched. Apart from all this, the Kaiser has every reason for self-distrust, and whatever else may be said about Hindenburg he knows his mind.

It must be remembered that the appointment of the rough darling of the Junkers is not unconnected with domestic politics. Last year and up to four months ago, discontent with "the conduct of the war" was the standing motto of agitation in England and the cause of much sport in the German press. Now the positions are almost reversed. In Germany, especially among the more powerful aristocratic and industrial classes there has been an immense discontent with the "conduct of the war" this year, and with the men at the head of affairs.

SOME GHASTLY BLUNDERS.

There has been, indeed, a series of ghastly blunders showing what I have previously described as the blind side of German efficiency. Bismarck thought that the Kaiser's temperament would be his doom and his country's—that it would be an imbecile and fatal policy to challenge Britain and Russia together, as well as France.

Italy's chief reason for adhesion to the Triple Alliance would cease to apply if Britain were driven to change her old benevolent attitude toward that combination. The moral seeds of failure were sown before the war began. It was madness to violate the neutrality of Belgium unless the taking of Paris and the swift crushing of France was absolutely certain. But that was only the beginning of a series of gigantic errors of direction for which no excellence in the details of a long-prepared organization, and no energy or endurance on the part of the German people, could compensate.

Moltke the Second was removed from the general staff. That may have been another false step. Von Falkenhayn, who succeeded, was brilliant, but was not a success. To what extent he was influenced by the Kaiser's restless, vivid, superficial fantasy, is unknown, but it is certain that in main matters Germany continued doing the wrong thing, taking up several huge purposes in turn, never concentrating fully on any of them, nor driving any one of them to a conclusion.

ATTACKED ON WRONG FRONT.

Last year the Germans made their main attack on Russia, when they ought to have attacked in the west, while the British shortage of munitions was at its worst. Had the enemy thrown his full strength against us in the spring and the early summer of 1915 he might have got through and won the war. This year the same perverse fatality seemed still to dog the footsteps of the German plans. The enemy ought to have attacked in the East again as Hindenburg and Ludendorff wished. Instead of that, the allies were attacked in the West, a year too late, after they had been given time to build us a stupendous strength in men and munitions.

Germany threw away the last of her big chances by the catastrophic adventure against Verdun, while Russia was given time to raise her new power to a maximum in the way that brought in Rumania. There is not a soul in the Central Empires who does not now realise that the attempted invasion of Italy through the Trentino was a mistake as egregious as any, and the worse because prompted by the infatuated underestimate of Russia which Falkenhayn seems to have shared with the Austrian Conrad von Hoetzendorf.

With with feelings Hindenburg saw these successive exhibitions of spectacular folly while his own counsels were rejected and while reinforcements were denied him may be imagined but can never be described. There were sullen mutterings in the Junker press. Tirpitz must be recalled; submarines and zeppelins must be used mercilessly against Britain though that old country is increasingly able to take care of itself against every manner of frightfulness.

FAITH IN HINDENBURG.

But above all, there was the military question: Hindenburg was the only man. "Er wird es machen," said that chief organ of the fighting and agrarian classes, the Kreuz Zeitung," a few days before Falkenhayn was replaced by the Iron Marshal. All Germany echoes the cry of the Junkers: "He will do it now." So now we shall see. That the appointment makes for the unity and vigor of Germany in the fight for life there is no question. But in reality little is changed.

The German mind is so framed that it must make itself think that in its emergency a man will appear. Barbarossa will awaken from his legendary sleep within the Kyffhauser or the Untersberg; or his spirit in some reincarnation will help the Fatherland in its hour of peril. Such feelings assist rhetoric and stimulate energy for a moment, but they are incapable of affecting the sort of war which Germany has herself introduced. Righteousness and romance are on the other side, and that Germany's cause is unblessed in this war of violation and invasion is the root of her misfortune.

The best military circles in Germany have not hitherto shared popular faith in Hindenburg. The battle of Tannenburg was a splendid tactical achievement, but amidst the East Prussian railways the Russians had put their heads in the noose, and it required no genius to pull the string.

VICTORIES IN GALICIA.

Immediately afterwards Brussiloff's and Ruesky's victories in Galicia were far greater demonstrations of the military art on a large scale. Some day I will try and tell the reader why we think that Joffre in France, Robertson in Britain, Alexieff in Russia, and others of the allied military chiefs are very well able to deal with Germany's idol. But if Hindenburg—like Blucher—is no genius, he is of the real tough Prussian stuff who will hit hard and straight somewhere before we have done with him.

He may hit at Brussiloff or even throw troops into the Balkans in the hope of saving Bulgaria and keeping open at any cost if he can the German connections with Turkey and the East. But in the meantime the allies in the West will not be idle when the finer weather returns. Rumania has thrown three-quarters of a million of men into the scales on the allies' side. As no man by taking thought can add a cubit to his stature, so no Hindenburg can create more reserves than the central league possessed before. It is the supreme struggle. I see no reason to change my views about its stubbornness and duration unless, indeed, the allies achieve swift and surprising successes in the Balkans before the end of September.

GERMAN EDITORS ASSAIL CENSORS

SUPPRESSION OF FREE DISCUSSION HELD TO BE INIMICAL TO THE INTERESTS OF THE EMPIRE.

Berlin, September 25.—One of the clearest and most interesting signs of the new spirit of the times which is gradually but unmistakably levening the whole social and political structure of Germany in this crucial stadium of war—a spirit so liberal as almost to approximate democratic ideals—is the continued restlessness of the German press under the political censorship, the never ceasing, though always thoroughly patriotic struggle against this organ of the Government, which like the human appendix, has long out lived its usefulness and is now only a menace to the health of the nation.

This conscious striving for real freedom of the press, for the right to express opinions freely and publicly on controversial subjects of vital interest to warring Germany, was again and more strongly than ever before reflected in yesterday's annual meeting of the National Association of the German Press, whose discussions largely centred on the gradual "dismantling of the political censorship" promised many weeks ago in the name of the Imperial Government by Vice-Chancellor Helfferich.

Since then some slight improvement has been noted; a somewhat more liberal spirit has animated the inter-political censorship, and particularly in the past week was the German press able to touch with greater frankness on formerly forbidden topics. But the censorship reform has not gone far enough, and still too stringent internal censorship is rightly blamed for the present political tension among parties and factions and for such inevitable evils as the clandestine circulation of the anonymous pamphlets, the widespread political gossip and scandalmongering, and the countless baseless, disquieting rumors about men and matters that ought to be but cannot be frankly discussed in the press.

The government's argument that the political censorship is necessary to serve the so-called Burgfrieden, (party truce), and thus maintain a united front against foes round about has to thinking Germans been amply disproved by the English press, whose freedom has, it is thoroughly realized here, not impaired either England's will to continue the war nor the effectiveness of her warfare.

The Germans, who as a whole are astonishingly objective, are at all times keen to learn even from their enemies, and the fact that the English press can and does frequently criticize, even bitterly attack the government, and freely discuss all matters of interest to the nation has undeniably served as an incentive and argument to the German press to work for similar privileges, or rights. As a symptom of the great change which is taking place here, and which to an American observer, seems likely to beat the most promising fruit, this propaganda for the freedom of speech and of the press deserves the serious attention of Americans as of greater importance than many indecisive battles.

SAVE THE CROP OF WESTERN CANADA

(1) Threshing Wheat, Carman, Man.
(2) Loading Wheat in Manitoba.
(3) Reaping at Carberry, Man.

STATISTICS from the Government authorities show that the wheat crop this year promises to be greater than ever but the problem that is troubling the minds of the farmers in Western Canada is how can the crop be harvested? That is the predominent problem of to-day in Canada apart from recruiting for overseas. The railways are providing special excursions to carry the men to their destinations but the effort will almost be fruitless if the labor does not come forward for the work in view. There is no disguising the seriousness of the situation this year so many men having gone to the front or are on their way. Despite this fact, however, there should be no lack of men to gather in Canada's greatest asset if the country is to still continue the good work of the past two years in helping the Mother Country in the greatest war the world has even known. While Canada has sent some hundred thousand men to the war there are still hundreds of thousands more left who have not enlisted and who are not assisting in the making of munitions. These have now an excellent opportunity of doing a little bit at home to help the war abroad. Canada's crop is of vital necessity to Great Britain and her Allies so that everyone who helps in gathering in the harvest will in some measure be assisting in carrying on the war to a successful issue. The effort will not only be a health giver but give excellent remuneration.

You who are not helping your country directly are invited to take the trip West for a couple of months and not only earn three dollars a day and board but also feel that you are helping the powers to end the war successfully for our side. Any railway agent will furnish you with all the information to enable you to go to Western Canada and do your little "bit" by helping the farmers to harvest the great crop on which so much depends.

15-Year-Old Boy Is Fatally Shot

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Harry Claxton, the 15-year-old son of Mrs. Foubert, 83 Slater street, was accidently shot and killed at one o'clock yesterday by a companion with whom he was hunting birds near Britannia.

In company with two other boys, young Claxton went to Britannia to shoot birds. According to information which reached the city he was shot was one of his companions at Graham's Bay, about two miles above Britannia. County Police Hamilton was notified shortly after one o'clock and he immediately telephoned Coroner Craig, who has gone to the scene of the shooting.

There seems to be no doubt that the killing was accidental. The name of the boy who fired the fatal shot has not yet been ascertained. According to a story told by a resident of Britannia village, Claxton got separated from his companions. The first they knew of his death was when the rounded the corner of a vacant house and saw him lying dead on the grass.

A telephone message was received at the Civil Service Club shortly after one o'clock from a resident of Graham's Bay, who desired someone from the club, which is situated near the boy's home on Slater street, to convey the news to his mother.

His mother was not at home when the news reached Ottawa and up to 2.30 o'clock yesterday was not aware of the death of her son. Mrs. Foubert rooms at 83 Slater street. The dead boy was a son by her first marriage.

FRENCH BAN MUSIC BY LIVE HUN COMPOSERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—On the steamer Rochambeau, which arrived from Bordeaux, came Cleonfonte Campani, conductor of the Chicago Grand Opera Company; Rita Fornia, of the Metropolitan Opera company, and Vierre Monteaux, the French conductor, who was permitted to leave the front to conduct the music for the Russian ballet at the Metropolitan.

M. Monteaux said Wagner's music would be permitted in Paris after the war. He hinted that the military success of the French would be so great that the Government and people would not mind such a concession to the German composer.

However, Mr. Monteaux went on to say that while music of a dead German is all right, the compositions of a living Teuton can never be recognized by a loyal Frenchman.

Hence the Metropolitan Opera Company, with the season for a conductor for a Strauss opera. Monteaux said he refused to conduct Richard Strauss' 'Till Eulenspiegel," because Strauss is living. He will conduct operas by Liszt and Schumann because they are dead.

There are many forms of moral honour, and every woman has her own individual code of ethics to govern various situations. The code of Marcia Gray, the basis of Oliver Morosco photoplay of that name, will win ready sympathy. Suddenly deprived of her life of refinement and luxury by the cowardice of her husband at a crucial moment, she finds but one solace— Orlando Castle — her former sweetheart, and friend of her husband. Marcia's code met a great and unexpected test—not from the usual triangle of two men and a woman — but in what makes one of the strong, human moments in a charming production.

The wonderful personality of Constance Collier as Marcia Gray makes her part one of universal appeal. Every woman will find in the great crisis in Marcia Gray's life a marvelously exact duplication of what she would have to do, and experience, should she meet the same problem.

TO CONSIDER CRAWFORD'S GROVE FOR SITE OF NEW SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT AND NEW FAIR GROUNDS

City's Representatives Manifest Disposition to Meet the Objections of Monaghan Residents if a Practical Plan Thereto Can be Presented—A Desire to Co-operate.

MEET AT GROVE FRIDAY.

North Monaghan's objections to the sewage disposal site on the Scott-Rutherford properties as recommended to the city by the Provincial Board of Health were further discussed at a conference of representatives of the city and township at the City Hall last night attended by the following gentlemen: Mayor Duffus, Reeve McIntosh, Aldermen Saunders, McIntyre, Duncan, Stratton and Weir, Councillors Harold B. Rye, and Jos. Bell, Mr. E. A. Peck, solicitor for the township, Mr. Daniel O'Connell representing property owners in Monaghan, John Holmes, Detective Newhall, Nat Mills, City Solicitor Gordon, City Engineer Parsons, Harry Evans, City Clerk Armstrong and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.

Mayor Duffus was appointed chairman. The conference bore a gleam of hope for the Monaghan people in two suggestions that were gradually evolved. On Friday September 29 representatives of the two municipal councils and the Peterborough Exhibition Directorate will meet on the Crawford's Grove property to discuss the practicability and feasibility of securing it forty acres for the combined location of the sewage disposal plant and future fair grounds. This committee will report back next Tuesday night.

Another suggestion is based on the possibility of the city purchasing properties adjacent to the Scott-Rutherford lots if the owners, who are the most active opponents to this site, offer to sell at prices acceptible to the city. Something definite in this respect may be presented at next week's meeting especially if the alternate proposal falls through.

DISPOSAL SYSTEMS CHANGE

Mayor Duffus stated that the treatment of sewage to-day had advanced to a great extent beyond the methods of a year ago. It was cheaper and more easily handled. He was not in favour now of locating the plant across the Otonabee river.

The Provincial Engineer had examined a number of sites, and, of his own accord and decision, recommended the Scott and Rutherford property for the city's selection. The city now had an order from the Provincial Board of Health permitting them to locate on this property.

MR. O'CONNELL'S BEGINNING

Mr. O'Connell opened the discussion by a reference to the fact that the difficulty arising out of the choice of location grew out of the township's former demand that the city change its ancient and easy method of sewage disposal. The Monaghan residents did not wish to dictate to the city what it should do, but they did ask that the city listen to their request, favourably if possible, and make an earnest endeavour to meet their wishes. They did not wish to put the city to an extraordinary or unreasonable expenditure, but they had spent time and money in erecting homes nearby and they strongly objected to being deprived of these or of having their comforts largely impaired. If the Council would enter into the feelings of those residents they would appreciate the sentiment and reasons that actuated them in their present objections.

The possibility that the city might have to pay for the potential value, instead of the present actual value of adjacent land, the value of which might be depreciated by the disposal plant, was emphasized by Mr. O'Connell who referred to some recent awards in similar cases.

CRAWFORD'S GROVE.

At this stage Mr. O'Connell unfolded his suggestion that the city consider the selection of Crawford's Grove as a site. Its forty acres could be purchased for about $18,000, assuring the city of a public park on the Otonabee.

Mr. Parsons stated that the cost of the sewer would be increased $100,000.

Mr. J. T. O'Connell proposed that a site be purchased at the corner of Erskine and McKellar streets, some distance west of the Scott-Rutherford property. Ten acres could be bought for $6,000 and twenty acres for $10,000. At one corner the C.P.R touched it, and the G.T.R. was close to another side.

Mayor Duffus replied to this proposal by stating that if a site was chosen further west it would have to be more southerly located.

Mr. O'Connell—Then you think the Grove property would cost too much?

Mayor Duffus—Yes.

Mr. O'Connell—Is it economical to spend a small amount for the needs of the day? Would it not be better to make the plant a permanent one instead of having to move in ten or fifteen years when the city grows afound it.

Mayor Duffus—This type of disposal plant is so operated that it is preferable to establish a number of disposal units.

Mr. O'Connell—Where on this continent is there a city with sewage disposal plants within it.

Mr. Parsons stated that Milwaukee's plant was practically inside that city.

Mr. O'Connell doubted if one year's test was sufficient to establish the efficiency of the city's proposed plant. Even if it were a success if all that was claimed for it were true there would remain the sentimental objection to the location of the plant in a residential neighborhood.

Mr. Holmes apologized to the Mayor and Council for a statement at Tuesday night's meeting in which he asserted that the Council had not visited the recommended site. He had made it in good faith, but had since learned that it was not a fact.

MAKING NO HEADWAY.

Mr. O'Connell recognized the Council's obvious intention to stand pat, to sit tight and listen. But this meeting he said, was arranged as a conference at which the problem of overcoming the Scott-Rutherford difficulties might be freely discussed. He had expected a confidential gathering, instead of the usual hearing of a deputation and speeding the parting guest, treating the Monaghan representation as humble petitioners.

Mr. O'Connel appealed for a mutual consideration of the whole question.

"Evidently our suggestion" he said, "of Crawford's Grove is of no assistance to you."

Mayor Duffus—We've been told where to go, we don't wish to go back to the Board of Health.

Mr. O'Connell—That's not an insurmountable difficulty. If another site was agreed upon you could readily present it to the Board of Health.

Mr. Peck pointed out that the Board's engineer had approved of the Kennedy and Wilson properties.

Mayor Duffus replied that the former type of outfall plant required an elevated location, this was not essential to the new idea.

Mr. O'Connell intimated that the city might not be able to obtain a title to the Scott-Rutherford land by reason of possible restrictions against a sewage plant.

Ald Weir—Tha'll settle the site question for you.

Mr. O'Connell—You would have to take it through the courts.

MR. GORDON'S COUNSEL.

When Mr. O'Connell requested the Coundil's representatives to discuss their side of the site question, Mr. Gordon advised against laying all the cards on the table. Information regarding the operation of the plant could be obtained from the Provincial Board of Health.

Mr. Peck remarked that if Engineer Parsons could show that the plant would not be objectionable that statement might be satisfactory to some of the anxious residents.

Mr. Parsons replied that a mere assertion would not content them, they would have to see a demonstration of the plant.

Reeve McIntosh admitted to the Mayor that the operation had been lucidly explained to him in Toronto, but repeating the explanation to the people would not satisfy them.

MAKING PROGRESS.

Mr. O'Connell persisted that the Council was merely "sitting tight."

Mr. Gordon—The Council, I believe is anxious to hear your views and then be in a position to decide what site is most acceptible. It should not be asked to reach a decision to-night.

Mr. O'Connell—We don't ask for a decision to-night.

Mayor Duffus—As far as the present is concerned the site has been selected. The Board of Health has recommended it. We might consider how it can be made unobjectionable to nearby residents. Are they willing to help us? Say to obtain more ground?

Mr. O'Connell—You mean all the property that might find the plant objectionable?

Mr. Gordon—The surrounding and adjacent lots.

Mr. O'Connell—That's helpful. It meets our favour as a suggestion. How would you work it out?

Mr. Peck—If the plant is odorless you could resell the property.

Mr. Gordon—The Government prohibits our entering the real estate game.

Ald. Stratton breathed the spirit of co-operation. The Board of Health's engineer had probably considered only the question of sites without the effect upon nearby property. If a site were selected further out would the city be assured it would be unopposed. Would Monaghan residents pay for their use of the sewer? "Let's try to get further out if we can do it."

Ald. Weir—If there will be many objectors to Crawford's Grove we might as well fight them where we are.

Councillor Bell stated that these would be stronger objections to a choice of the Crawford property on the east side of the foot of the Monaghan road.

Councillor Rye manifested an independence and a faint sarcasm that probably arose from trailing the Council through its division wandering for a site during the past two years or more.

The city suggested that Monaghan residents should guarantee their use of the sewer, but the township already stood to loose the taxes from whatever property was decided upon.

Ald Stratton—You could open up the Exhibition grounds. That would more than cover any loss.

Mr. Rye—We don't have to consider that (Accent on we)

Mayor Duffus turned on the co-operation tap arousing Mr. Rye to comment that the city had manifested no signs of co-operation at all.

Mr. O'Connell—It would be better to let bygones be bygones.

Messrs. Rye and Bell kicked at the traces when Reeve McIntosh suggested that they represent the township with him.

Mr. Holmes made a concluding reiteration of his determination not to live near the plant and Mr. J. T. O'Connell told a tale of woe regarding the depreciative effect on real estate far and wide on either side of the Scott-Rutherford lots.

Kitchener Ladies May Bring Action Against a Citizen

KITCHENER, Sept. 28.— Action is threatened against a prominent citizen of the city by a number of ladies who attended a meeting publicly called for the purpose of organizing a ladies' auxiliary of the Berlin Citizens' League.

These ladies attended the meeting, and had hardly got seated, when some half dozen others and a man who were at the meeting got up and left the hall. It is stated that when the man got outside the hall he turned out the lights, leaving the women in darkness. The hall in question is on the second floor of the Glick block, and there was no light leading to the exit.

The ladies have consulted a solicitor, who has advised them to proceed, as they have a good case.

LATEST NEWS IN GALT-ROGERS CASE

Judge Reads Telegrams Between Minister and Himself.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 28.—Mr. Justice Galt, of the Agricultural Building Commission yesterday read telegrams between himself and the Hon. Robert Rogers at Ottawa. Mr. Rogers wired him yesterday as follows:

"Press reports you want to summon me for contempt. If so you can have service made here and I agree it will be just as effective as if made in Manitoba."

Commissioner Galt read his reply, as follows:

"(Sent last evening): "My authority to punish for contempt has been challenged and the question is now before Mr. Justice Haggart for decision."

"It is idle," said the commissioner, "to deal with the question on contempt if the parties sent down for contempt are immediately liberated." The commission then continued its inquiry into small contracts held by Carter, Halls and Aldinger.

Zepp Fatalities Far Fewer Than U. S. Auto Deaths

New York, Sept. 27.—More persons have been killed and injured by automobiles on the streets of American cities during this year than in all the Zeppelin raids on England. Chicago and New York lead in the number of deaths with more than 200 each between January 1 and September 1. The number of fatalities in other large cities is proportionately high, however, varying with the population.

These figures compiled to-day on reports from a score of cities, are based upon the police records, which show a constantly growing death list as a result of automobile accidents, despite improved traffic laws that have been enacted. In New York and other states even more drastic legislation is being urged.

In the cities from which reports were available to-day figures up to September 1 show that a total of 1,040 persons have been killed and more than 8,000 injured. Only partial lists of the injured were received and it is possible that the complete toll will show almost double this number.

In the Zeppelin raids on England to date about 368 have been killed and 870 wounded in two years.

Police reports show 158 persons killed and 4,484 injured on the streets of New York up to September 1. The New York State Automobile Association estimates show 226 killed, however, for New York City, and for the State outside of the metropolis, 192 killed.

In Detroit 63 were killed and 2,715 injured up to September 1 as compared with 31 killed and 2,005 injured during the same period alst year.

Los Angeles reports 57 killed, and Columbus, Ohio, 40.

Philadelphia, September 27. — The German merchant submarine Bremen has been captured by the British and is now tied up in Falmouth Harbor, according to a story brought here yesterday by Dr. R. Tait McKenzie, sculptor and director of the Department of Physical Education in the University of Pennsylvania, formerly of McGill University, Montreal, who has just returned to this city after 16 months in the army training camp at Aldershot, just outside of London

Dr. McKenzie, who was given the rank of major by the British War Office, said he heard the story of the Bremen's capture on the 15th of this month, one day before he sailed from Liverpool for New York. He added:

"The story reached me from a very reliable source. The Bremen is said to have had a cargo valued at twenty-five million dollars, consisting of dyestuffs and diamonds. Of course the official circles would not discuss the capture, and the war office was silent concerning the sudden termination of the Bremen's ill-fated dash for the United States.

"I heard of the capture through a prominent diamond expert in London who was called in by the British Government to estimate the value of the diamonds in the Bremen's cargo. He told me that some of the diamonds were famous precious stones that belonged to Germany. Of course I cannot guarantee the authenticity of his story. Personally, however, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind as to its truth."

The report of the capture of the Bremen, Dr. McKenzie said, was given wide circulation in semi-official London circles. As a war measure, however, the news of the capture was not officially announced. It was withheld by the British censor. Dr. McKenzie said, and very few persons were aware of the feat which under ordinary circumstances would have been heralded in the London newspapers.

Construction Of Arsenal Sewer Performed By Lindsay Man

Peterboro' Contractors Failed to Secure Contract For the Construction of Sewer in Lindsay—Work Will Be Don on Percentage Basis

LINDSAY, Sept. 28.—The construction of the arsenal sewer will be done by local labour, under the supervision of Mr. George Lindsay. This was the decision reached by the Board of Works at a meeting held for the purpose of further considering the awarding of tenders.

As was previously announced three tenders for the work were received and considered at a meeting of the council held Tuesday morning. These were from Messrs. James Bogue, John Carroll, and Richard Sheehy, Peterborough contractors. Mr. Sheehy's tender was the lowest ($1.57 a yard.) It was decided to get in touch with Mr. Sheehy over the 'phone in order to ascertain when he would be able to start the work in case he secured the contract.

In the interval, however, Mr. George Lindsay submitted a proposition, the reasonableness of which appealed to the council and completely altered the situation. Mr. Lindsay appeared before the council and agreed to undertake the construction of the sewer on a basis of 15 per cent. on the actual hand labour. The work would be done by day labour at a saving below the lowest tender.

Reeve Kylie pointed out that the reasons tenders were called for was for the purpose of showing the citizens that the council was proceeding openly and above board in its desire to have the work done as cheaply as possible.

Reeve McLean considered Mr Lindsay's proposition a most reasonable one. The council was not obliged to consider the tenders either from a moral or a legal standpoint.

Ald. Annis said there was a strong feeling that local contractors should get local work. Mr. Lindsay's proposition should be accepted.

In answer to a query, Mr. Lindsay stated that he did not think he would experience any difficulty in securing labour. He would undertake the work as soon as possible.

The work was awarded to Mr Lindsay. The ditching machine will be used in the preliminary work.

HORRIBLE BARBARITIES OF THE HUNS SHOWN IN RUSSIAN REPORT

The reader can only shudder at the absolutely incredible cruelty and barbarity in numbers of proved cases by which Germans and Austrians have placed themselves outside the pale of humanity. A record that would shame any tribe of primitive men, let alone a civilzed people who boast of "kultur,' is that contained in the reports of a commission appointed by the Czar to investigate. Copies of the report have been forwarded by the Russian Ambassador at Washington to Hon. Mr. Justice Riddell.

The documents contain sworn and sifted statements of mutilation, torture, and forms of abominable treatment that show the inventive character of the German mind and the callousness of a vivisectionist. They are accompanied by photographs of the particular cases that are sworn to, photographs that are too revolting for general publication.

Ear Cut Off.

The incidents are related in simple narrative, without embellishment. One of them tells that in the early morning of July 21st, 1915, Michael Ananiev, of an infantry battalion, was sent by his officer on a special message to a telephone corps, about twelve miles from Warsaw. On the way he found a reel of wire and picked it up, carrying it with him. In going through a wood he was captured by a German reconnoitring party. They seized him and demanded information as to the forces and distribution of the Russians. He refused any information, and they cut off the helix (the upper part) of one of his ears. He fainted from the pain, and when he came to himself he was sent in charge of one of the Germans towards the German position. On the way the German sat down to rest. Seizing a favourable opportunity, the Russian hit his captor on the head with the reel of wire, and then, snatching his rifle, smashed him on the head with the butt of it and made his escape back to his own lines.

Hung Head Downwards.

In a similar way, Matthew Poznlakiv, military servant to a regimental surgeon, was taken by two men in civilian dress while he was carrying his master's dinner to an ambulance station from the village of Gochistok. He refused any information, and his captors forced open his mouth and cut out his tongue, and left him hanging in a tree, head downwards.

Gunner Semen Pilyugin, in August, 1915, lost touch with his detachment and was surprised by a party of Germans. He was taken before an officer, who queried him as to the strength of the Russian forces. "Send twenty-five of your army corps into Russia, and it will take them twenty-five years to count all the troops we've got," was Pilyugin's answer. "Your tongue is too long and it must be shortened," returned the officer. The men then seized him and cut off his tongue.

Smashed His Toes.

A party of Germans who captured Vasili Ivanov Anpilogy, crushed his chest so that it pained him to breathe and then smashed the toes of his left foot so that later it was necessary to cut of a ditch in the forest, leaving arms behind his back with a belt and threw him into the water at the bottom of a ditch in the forest, leaving him there to get away the best he could.

Near the town of Mitau, Kornie Petrov Lysak was given the "third degree" and three times his captors cut into his ear till it was "left hanging like a piece of rag."

Early in the winter of 1915, near the village of Dimisevich, a Russian officer with four men, while reconnoitering, attempted to cross the river on the ice. The fire of the enemy killed the men and wounded the officer. The Germans carried the officer to a house where they had headquarters, and dumped him on a litter of straw, leaving him without attention and talking and laughing as though pleased with his sufferings.

Were Red Cross.

A German officer wearing a Red Cross badge on his arm went to the prisoner and started to drop a white powder into the prisoner's mouth. He writhed and tried to avoid it, but a German sitting on a chair put his feet on the victim's arm, while two more sat on his legs. The doctor then was able to force the powder into his mouth, with the result that he expired about 20 minutes later in fearful agony. The facts as to this were related by the owner of the house, where the outrage took place.

Breko Rogozin, with the artillery, while reconnoitring with five other men, lost their way, and suddenly became aware of a superior force of the enemy. They hid in a hollow, and while there saw an unknown Russian soldier, mounted, who had apparently also lost his way, ride straight into the camp of the enemy. This happened in January. The Germans surrounded him and ragged him from his horse. They then striped him naked and threw him on a pile of burning wood and encircled him with their rifles so that he could not escape, holding him there till he burned to death.

Lifted on Bayonets.

On another occasion a party of Germans had a number of prisoners, and were being pursued across a river. When they got to the other side the Germans, with their bayonets, lifted the prisoners out of the boats and threw the wounded men into the river.

The documents contain the dates and facts about over forty cases of treacherous misuse of the white flag. Evidence is given as to the use of explosive bullets, and cruel treatment of the wounded, putting out their eyes with bayonets, and driving stakes through their throats.

In the village of Novui-Dvori, in the Province of Lomzha, thirty wounded Russians were left three days without food or medical attention. On the third night, when the Germans withdrew, they fired the shed. Only ten of the thirty escaped.

With Red-Hot Irons.

In May, 1915, Efremov Zinoview was tortured by having a red-hot bar passed over his feet in an effort to make him disclose information. A doctor held his pulse while so tortured.

Other incidents sworn to include the cutting off of a Cossack's nose, the tearing off of an officer's fingerthe tearing off of an officer's fingers, nails, and hanging prisoners so that the blood rushed to the head, making them rapidly unconscious. It is a practice to revive the prisoners after such treatment, and then hang them up again.

The documents have been presented to Osgoode library.

HARVEST THANKSGIVING SERVICES AT ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH

The annual service of Thanksgiving for Harvest was commenced on Tuesday evening in the Anglican church dedicated to St. George, South Peterborough. The little church, which was filled with earnest, devout and enthusiastic worshippers, was most tastefully decorated with oats, flowers, fruits and vegetables, the painstaking work of many loving hands.

The service was fully choral, as, indeed, are all the evening services at this church. The Confession was sung to the Oxford setting, and appropriate harvest and thanksgiving hymns were sung. Before the collection of the offertory an anthem was creditably rendered by the choir. The first part of the Evening Office was intoned and sung by the Rev. Canon Cornish, Acting Rector of St. John's church in this city; the latter part of the prayers being taken by Mr. Claude Spence, who is in charge of the St. Alban's Mission at Browntown. The first and second lessons, which were special, were read by Messrs. W. F. Johnston and H. Rush; the preacher for the occasion being the Rev. C. Carpenter, of Campbellford.

On Sunday evening next this joyous service will be repeated.

Before the sermon, the Rector, the Rev. Jas. Price, extended a welcome and thanks to the several members of St. John's church who were present, many of whom evince a lively interest in the welfare of the little church of St. George.

ARREST IN BELLEVILLE SEQUEL TO DETROIT MURDER

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 27.—The police are questionning Eugene A. Collins, 43, who was arrested last Saturday in Belleville, Ont., in connection with the slaying of August Diehel, a Detroit saloonkeeper, on February 3 last.

Collins' wife informed the police. It is alleged that he boasted to her that he and two other men had killed Diehel. The prisoner abandoned his wife last August, and it was when he was reporting her husband's desertion she told of the shooting.

Relatives At Home Thirst For News of Jack Canuck At War

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, Sept. 27.—How hungry the relatives of men at the front are for a message from the trenches has been illustrated in a remarkable way in Toronto this week by the meetings at which Mr. Rowell, just back from Europe, has told of the visit to the front. At the Massey Hall meeting, which was arranged by the Women's Emergency Corps especially for the relatives of Canadian soldiers, the audience was most inspiring, made up largely of women, many of whom had brought their children with them.

At six o'clock in the evening, two hours before the meeting began, there was a long line of women on the street in front of the Hall and a group of mothers with their babies sitting on the steps and on the curb of the roadside. And during the meeting, which crowded the huge Massey Hall beyond its capacity, the sound of babies' voices was continuous, but no one minded it the least bit, for the babies were most welcome guests—children as they were of Canadian fathers at the front. The way that huge crowd of soldiers' relatives eagerly drank in every word of Mr. Rowell's speech and the messages of cheer he brought to them from their men was a memorable sight.

At the other meeting under the auspices of the Canadian Club, the leading business men of the city showed that they too wanted to hear every word Mr. Rowell had to tell them about the trenches in Flanders and in France.

Mr. Rowell has brought back a number of messages but the one that the public seems to have laid hold on most is this—that more and still more men are urgently needed to support the Canadians now in the trenches and to carry on the work of the noble Canadian dead who have fallen in the fight.

"TWIN BEDS"

Here Next Tuesday, Oct. 3

The announcement of the Grand for Tuesday next, Oct. 3, is Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo's uproariously funny comedy, "Twin Beds," which comes with a record of one whole year in New York, and is now in its second year in London. "Twin Beds" is conceded to be the best and most diverting comedy ever written. New ventures are difficult and new trails hard to follow, but in "Twin Beds" Mr. Field and Miss Mayo are said to have written the typical comedy upon a new and original idea, with an air of possibility and plausibility. It is the laugh play of the century, a comedy for all tastes, a tonic for old and young. Its story who live in fashionable apartment houses, whose only personal bond is that they pay rent to the same landlord, still have an unwelcome neighborliness thrust upon them, by way of elevator, dumbwaiter and insufficiency of lathes and plaster.

OKLAHOMA LIFE TERMER IN CANADIAN BATTALION

Quebec, Sept. 27.—Extradition proceedings were opened here for the return to the Oklahoma State authorities of Cotton Taylor, a life termer at Macalliater, Okla., who escaped from the State penitentiary and enlisted in Quebec in an overseas battalion. Taylor killed a man for the sum of one dollar and eighty five cents. According to Sheriff Albert J. Jedliska, Taylor when sure that his battalion was sailing, wrote one of the guards at Macalliater Penitentiary, advising him that he was in Canada and by the time the letter reached him he would be on the high seas. The Macalliater authorities irred the local police and Taylor was apprehended. He served time for bigamy before, and also escaped in 1911. American Consul Woolrich in this city is looking after the proceeding for the United States.

SOME TROUBLE FOUND IN THE BORDER TOWNS

LARGE NUMBER OF DRUNKS UP IN NIAGARA FALLS COURT—GOT BOOZE IN U. S.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Sept. 27.—The operation of the Ontario Temperance Act is going to be a more difficult matter in the border towns than was at first imagined, judging by the large number of drunks who appeared at the police court yesterday morning before Magistrate Fraser. All of the accused got their liquor on the other side of the river, some having as much as three pint bottles. About a dozen such bottles and a number of flasks as well as several bottles of beer were confiscated, and the liquor emptied down the sewer, Mayor Clendenning witnessing the operation.

The delinquents were fined $4 and $5 each, the Magistrate not imposing the minimum penalty under the new act. It is thought by some in authority here that if the council appoints an inspector it can secure for the exchequer fines which would otherwise go to the government.

good. To see some of the boys you would think they were at the seaside. Well, cheer up, I am not too bad. My arm is getting along fine. When you write to me at this address don't forget to put the complete address on the letters so that it will find me. We are having lovely weather at present. Well I can't say very much so you will have to excuse me.

In a letter just received from Capt. Layfield, he stated that Lieut. Frazer, (yesterday reported wounded) had been down to see him, having been in England on leave. He stated he was looking splendid, and made a fine officer. Lieut. Frazer worked with Mr. Layfield at the Canadian General.

This, of course, was written previous to his being wounded, which news immediately followed the receipt of the letter.

CAMP BORDEN NOTES.

CAMP BORDEN, September 28.—The prohibition has had a marked effect on the number of cases handled by the military police, is evidenced by the statement made by Provost Marshall James Widgery. There has not been a prisoner in the Guard House during last week, with the exception of two waiting for court martial. In the week previous to the inception of prohibition the average number in the Guard House for drunkenness or minor offences was ten. This figure certainly speaks well for a city of 25,000 men, and shows marked improvement in discipline in the entire camp. As a matter of fact crime in the camp since its inception has been comparatively nil.

Corporal John Common, an old Peterborough Collegiate boy, who enlisted in the Quebec Rifles last spring, has been promoted to Sergeant. The regiment expects to sail for England next month.

The Kingston Standard says:—It is generally believed that deserters who are caught and given terms of imprisonment by the civil authorities, are free from further service on the completion of their terms of imprisonment, but this is not so. Just as soon as the term of punishment is over, the deserter is taken in charge by the military authorities, and is compelled to complete his term of service. It has been suggested that all deserters be taken and placed directly on board ship, and sent direct to the trenches, and made fight in the hottest part of the battle line. With the appointment of Lieut. "Jim" Graham as provost-marshal to look after deserters, they will have a hard time in this district.

CAMPBELLFORD, Ont., September 27. — A splendid reception was given the 235th Battalion by the citizens of Campbellford yesterday, when the battalion, under the command of Lieut.Colonel S. B. Scobell, marched in from Brighton, a distance of 22 miles. This battalion was met at the town limits by the Mayor and Council, citizens, band and a score of automobiles, which escorted the soldiers to Exhibition Park, where they are camping for the week. Bells rang, whistles blew, citizens cheered as the boys in khaki marched through the streets. Ninety-seven recruits have enlisted with the battalion since starting on the trek from headquarters at Bowmanville, three weeks ago.

A record crowd attended the Campbellford Fair to-day, the feature of which was the military camp and physical drill of the soldiers. Nine enlisted to-day.

PORT HOPE, September 28.—The 136th (Durham) Battalion which recently went to an eastern training camp, has been reduced, it is said, from a four to a two company basis. Two of the four field kitchens which were donated by the people of this county, it is understood, are being returned to Port Hope for storage, also the $600 mess tent.

Since the battalion went to Valcartier the officers have been considerably lessened in number, Lieut. J. H. Rooney being transferred to the naval service, while Lieuts. F. S. Jemison, N. Haultain, R. W. Sills, S. L. Dudley, and R. F. Given went overseas with another draft.

The officers affected by the recent reduction are said to be Lieut.-Col. William Farrell, Major A. H. C. Long, Major H. W. Dudley, Capts. W. J. Hoar, R. W. Nicholson, H. F. Wilson, Lieuts. J. L. Armstrong, G. L. Bray, L. S. Dumas, W. E. Floody, W. W. Fair, F. C. Hambrook, H. M. Jakeman, and J. E. McClellan.

HAVELOCK READY.

The Havelock Standard says: An enthusiastic meeting of our leading citizens and business men was held in the Council Chamber on Friday evening of last week, to meet Lt.-Co. Johnston, the commanding officer of the new County Battalion, the 247th.

The purpose of Col. Johnston's visit was to obtain the views of the people of Havelock and Belmont as to the possibility of raising a platoon in Havelock for the new battalion. Col. Johnston addressed the meeting at some length and was essentially frank in stating his views as to recruiting and the manner in which it should be conducted. He said that he would have to place an officer here in charge of the work, but if the local committee would select a suitable man which he would much prefer, that he would give him a commission.

It was decided to form a local organization to carry out the ideas of Col. Johnston, and the following is the personnel:

J. A. Sgrsmith—President.
Wm. Mathison—1st Vice President.
Jas. Thompson—2nd Vice President.
H. F. McNichol—Sec.-Treas.

Executive Committee—Jas. Ketchen, Frank Breckenridge, T. P. Lanpeater, Jno. Howe, H. T. Andrews, Rev. has. Adams, Rev. Jas. Skene, Rev. R. B. Patterson, Wm. Anderson, Jos. Johnston, Isaac Barlow and Dr. Holdcroft.

The committee will convene for its first session on Saturday afternoon of this week at 4.30 o'clock at the Armstrong House.

In the meantime anyone wishing to have their names considered for the commission promised by Col. Johnston, should apply to Secretary McNichol.

HAVELOCK, Sept. 28.—Mrs. Bush of town received a cablegram from England on Monday, informing her that her husband, Sergt. Henry Joseph Bush, had been admitted to Clanton Park Hospital, Guildford, on Sept. 20th, suffering from severe wounds in his left arm, right thigh and face.

"Further particulars will be forwarded as soon as received," says the officer in charge of records.

Havelock friends of the wounded soldier, who is exceedingly popular here, sincerely hope that Sergt Bush's injuries may prove to be less serious than is anticipated, and that he makes a speedy recovery.

Major A. E. Bywater of Trenton, Ont., was officially reported wounded on September 21st, while fighting on the Somme. He was third in command of the 39th Battalion, and after some time in Shorncliffe, England, was transferred. Major Bywater is well known in local military circles.

The Toronto Star has the following reference to the wounding of Lieut. Leonard Fraser, who left Peterborough as a private with the 21st Battalion:

Lieut. Leonard Fraser, 1149 Dundas street, wounded, left for overseas service about 18 months ago. He has been in the trenches during the past eleven months. The telegram received by his sister stated that he had been wounded, September 15, but no particulars as to the extent of his wounds were given. Lt. Fraser is unmarried and before enlisting was employed at the Canada Foundry Co. He was later transferred to Peterborough, where he was employed by the Canadian General Electric Company.

Toronto, Sept. 27.—A full battalion of Americans now in England has a promise to be sent directly over to France. The battalion is made up of the men who enlisted in the 97th Bn. at Toronto, the 212th Bn. at Winnipeg, and the 237th Bn. at Halifax, and other points in the Maritime Provinces. At the time of leaving Canada they numbered about 1,400, all told; all Americans who came from the States to do their 'bit' for the cause of Canada.

Col. W. L. Jolly, the commanding officer of the original American Legion, the 97th Bn., organized in Toronto, was made lieutenant-colonel of the new battalion; Major Pitman, senior major of the 212th, of Winnipeg, second in command. All of the officers were selected from the three battalions, and re-appointed according to the desires of the examining board from Ottawa. Among those best known in Toronto who went as officers of the revised 97th were: Capt. Lambert, who went as chaplain; Rasmussen, formerly of the Carranza army in Mexico, as major; Tracy Richardson, formerly of the Villa army in Mexico, as machine gun officer; Paul Heinse, as signalling officer; the two sons of Capt. Minard, former manager of the American Club as lieutenants.

Inasmuch as there were fifteen majors, twenty-four captains, including the battalion staffs and a dozen subalterns belonging to the three battalions, and as there were only thirty-one officers all told to be selected for overseas, there were many left behind. Major R. A. Adams, well known as second in command of the 97th while in Toronto, went as a lieutenant, as did several other majors. Major Johnny Lieb and his brother, who had been a lieutenant, enlisted as privates, along with about a dozen other officers, including majors, captains, and lieutenants.

For a week previous to leaving Canada, the officers of the three 'American Legion' battalions were examined and drilled by a commission from Ottawa. The members of the commission then picked the officers to command the newly-organized battalion. Those who were not given appointments were given a month's pay of their rank, and advised to seek appointments elsewhere.

There is no more American Legion. The unit is known as the 97th O.S. Bn., C.E.F., and has no official recognition as being formed of Americans.

There now remain in Canada two battalions partly formed, of the American Legion brigade: the 215th Bn. of Vancouver, with about 500 men; and the 213th Bn. at Camp Borden, with a strength of about 400 men. It is announced that these two battalions will be amalgamated, made into one, and sent overseas.

Capt. R. Cleghorn and Sergt. Miller of the 247th Battalion, are in Lakefield to-day on organization work in connection with recruiting for the new battalion.

Lieut. Stuart of the local recruiting staff, has received word that his brother, Lieut. H. J. Stuart, has been wounded in the recent fighting on the Somme. Lieut. Stuart was with the Princess Pats.

Early Morning Drunk On Charlotte Street

The string of "drunkless" days at the police court since the sixteenth was broken this morning when a confirmed "jag" was remanded on a charge of being found drunk in a public place. He stated that he was not drunk, but Sergt. Kidd and P. C. Deannard, who picked him up on Charlotte street this morning at three o'clock, have an altogether different opinion. One report is that this man had been more or less drunk since previous to the 16th. This is the first local drunk to appear in court since the new law went into force. One other faced the magistrate last week, but his was a Lindsay "souse."

SIR SAM IN FRONT SEAT

LONDON, Sept. 27.—The Daily Sketch gossip writer to-day remarks that "General Sir Sam Hughes is, of course, in town just now, and when he is about there is no mistaking him, for he doesn't exactly slink down the back streets in disguise. He is fond of driving about in that open car, and usually sits in front, next his chauffeur."

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—A movement is on foot amongst the grocers of the southwest end of the city to get up a petition to present to the Council, asking them to pass a bylaw compelling the grocers to close their stores at 7 o'clock in the evening, on certain days of the week. It is stated that there are 86 grocers in the city, to that statement I take exception, I believe that there is a large number more, for dry good merchants and many others handle various lines of groceries and you can see bags of sugar in a furniture dealer's window.

Several years since the Council were petitioned for a similar by-law and after due consideration they wisely refused to submit the by-law.

I consider such a by-law an infringment on the liberties and rights of the citizens and the general welfare of the people of the city is what a wise and careful council will consider. My personal objections to this by-law is:

My store and house are entered by my shop door, my only front entrance. I have perishable goods that cannot be held over. It is necessary for me, and also for working men and farmers to come in the evening to make their purchases after their day's labour is over; it would be a positive injury to them.

The condition and state of trade demands that I make every effort to meet the ever increasing demands that are being made on me. If the petitioners want to close at 7, why don't they do it, no one hinders them—we have all kinds of fads in vogue—day changed into night and night into day.

Yours truly,
JAMES SUTHERLAND,
352 1-2 Water street.

Peterborough, Sept. 28th, 1916.
St. Paul's Manse.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sirs.—A friend has drawn my attention to a letter which appeared in The Examiner Monday evening signed "Seeker After Truth." I think that a more satisfactory answer could be given on the questions raised by your correspondent in private conversation than through the columns of a newspaper. I shall be delighted, therefore, to talk over the points raised by him in his letter at any time in my study at 540 Water street. I may add that the congregation of St. Paul's to whom I have ministered for nine years, know quite well the soundness of my theological beliefs.

Very sincerely yours,
R. POGUE.

Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—I am not surprised at the people of our city being so much agitated over this new scavenger by-law just enacted by our City Council. Judging from the strong language used by some of your correspondents, writing against this new by-law. We have every reason to believe that the people believe in their inmost souls that they are being unjustly dealt with and look on this new enactment as a very real hold-up, especially to the small householders.

I can tell you, Mr. Editor, it was a real stunner to about eight to ten thousand.

Our citizens when they read that the city council had raised the price for cleaning earth closets from 15 cents to 40 cents per month. The people want to know why they nearly tripled the price per month; a long jump! A writer in last evening's Examiner who signs himself "one who does know". (Now Mr. Editor we will take his word for it, that he does know something about this business). He tells us that one team and one man at $2.50 per night, averaged 30 places per night at 15 cents each—$4.50, leaving only $2.00 for the contractor and his team per night.

Of course, he would not figure out to his readers what balance would be left over for the contractor, now that the price is raised to 40 cents per month. But who could blame him for not going into that part of the question, there would be no money in it for him. Let me do a little figuring for you and your many intelligent readers, Mr. Editor. 30 places cleaned a night at 40 cents each, $12.00. one man's wages $2.50 per night $2.50; balance per night for contractor, $9.50, some pull from the poor man for Mr. Contractor, eh? Under our old system one writer says it cost us on an average of $1.50 a year, but let us say to be on the safe side, it cost us $1.80, that is 90 cents every six months. Under the present tax it will cost $4.80 per year $3.00 extra on the poor man's home assessed for $500 this new tax is equal to an increased rate on the dollar of six mills.

SIX MILLS. Write it large, Mr. Editor, that our Mayor and Aldermen may read it. Hundreds of our poor citizens, whose homes are assessed from $300.00 to $400.00, their rate on the dollar will be increased from 7 to 9 mills. Is it any wonder the people as protesting against this hold-up. With our taxes soaring in all directions, this is no time to attack the poor householder. There is a great cry out from the wealthy when the rate on the dollar is advanced 1 mill or 1¼ mills, but here is an advance of from 6 to 9 mills on the dollar on the poor man, and little is thought of it. Is it any wonder, Mr. Editor, and reader, that a writer in The Examiner the other evening, who signed himself "An Affected Resident," called this new enactment a "Damnable By-law!" And to you, Mr. Mayor and City Aldermen, I would say that whatever men from among your honourable body who will be the means of having this by-law repealed, and one enacted to have these earth closets 3 or 4 times a year at 50 or 60 cents each time, and insist that lots of dry earth be used, etc. Any of you, I say, that will be the means of doing this, you will be acclaimed a veritable "Daniels come to judgment."

Yours,
Jno. Carlisle.

P.S.—One reason given for this outrageous advance in the price, from 15 to 40 cents per month for scavengers' fees, was that it would compel the people to connect up with the sewer. Is that a square deal with thousands of our citizens whose houses are situated on streets where there is no sewer to connect up to? Will some one answer that question? —J. C.

WOMEN IN MUNITIONS PLANTS HAVE PROVEN A GREAT SUCCESS

MONTREAL, Sept. 28.—An inspection of a number of the big munition plants here by some Ontario manufacturers under the guidance of the Imperial Munitions Board proved a revelation, especially in reference to the great work being done by women. That Canadian manufacturers are able to do as much as they are doing is due to no small measure to the manner in which the women have come forward and tackled work which ordinarily would be considered entirely unsuitable for female labour. Not only have they come forward in large numbers in a patriotic desire to assist in the great cause, but their work has proved amazingly efficient, so much so that in certain operations their work is admittedly superior to that of the men. It is believed that the uptput of many of the big plants could be materially increased if it was only realized to what an extent it is possible to utilize female labour. The work is not nearly so labourious as might be supposed, owing to the introduction of the most modern labour-saving machinery, and the remuneration is particularly good. The lowest wages paid any of the women is $2 per day, and many of them make as much as $4.50 per day. After a certain maximum is reached the manufactures pay a bonus which stimulates the workers to put forth their best efforts.

On Heaviest Shells.

At one plant visited Tuesday some 200 women are engaged in various operations on the heaviest shell now being made in Canada. Care has been taken in the classification of women for the different operations with the result that the large plant is running without friction and the output is already going up. Special conditions naturally obtain in a munitions plant under war conditions, and to meet these conditions the female force is in charge of a young lady who has done social service work for many years and is therefore familiar with the problems which daily present themselves. Her testimony Tuesday was that women readily lend themselves to the impulse that calls for their services at this time. One part of the factory vies with another to make the best record, discipline is easily maintained and there is general contentment throughout the plant. So much for the heavy work.

The Sensitive Touch.

At another plant where over 600 women and girls engaged upon lighter and more intricate work. Here, where the operations are more delicate and intricate, the more sensitive touch of the women makes them admittedly superior to men and their reliability from day to day is leading to good results.

Easily Utilized.

It was declared by several members of the party that women could easily be utilized in munitions work if an adequate supply were forthcoming. Time would have to be spent in organization and in making the factory suitable for them to work in, as well as the training that would make them efficient not only in the handling of any particular themselves familiar with shop conmachine or operation, but in making ditions so that they would know the proper thing to do under all circumstances.

Apologizes To Mexico For Act of Corpora

U. S. WAR DEPARTMENT ORDERS INVESTIGATION AS PROMPTLY AS POSSIBLE.

Washington, September 27. — The United States has apologised to Mexico for the act of a Texas cavalry Corporal and seven soldiers who crossed the border on September 21, the War Department has announced.

In addition the Corporal will be tried by court martial. Colonel Joseph A. Gaston of the Federal Army, stationed at Marfa, Texas, and commander of the Big Bend district, has been instructed by General Funston to make an investigation "as promptly as possible and to report what action is taken.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

CLARK GRIFFITH SAYS SOX WILL REPEAT IN THE WORLD SERIES

Clark Griffith, manager of Washington's Nationals, picks Boston to win the world's series over Brooklyn; that is, providing these are the major leagues' representatives.

"It looks now as though the Red Sox are certain to cop in our circuit, and Brooklyn is so far out in front in the National League that only a decidedly unexpected reversal in form can cut it down," declared Griff. "It is my opinion that the Red Sox are too strong for any team in the old league.

"Carrigan has pitching; he has hitting; he has fielding; he has base-running. Brooklyn has a good ball team, but not a good enough one, in my belief, to down the world's champions. Carrigan has two left-handers in Leopard and Ruth, and these are the pitchers who will bother the National League winners. Daubert, Wheat and Stengel all bat from the off-side of the plate; this hurts Brooklyn's chances, as these men form the base of its attack."

BROOKLYN'S BEST TWIRLERS.

Griffith picks Pfeffer and Marquard as the pitchers Brooklyn will likely depend upon.

"Pfeffer is a fine hurler, while Marquard has been doing good work," he said. "The big right-hander may bother the Red Sox, but Carrigan has hurlers who will puzzle the Dodgers. The Red Sox beat Walter Johnson, and I am pretty certain that Pfeffer is not in Johnson's class.

"The Boston team is also a great money club. It plays its best ball when jammed in a corner. It's pretty hard to say how for the series will go, but I don't think it will be a long one."

FIRST GAME OF SERIES OCTOBER 7th

CHICAGO, September 27.—The world's series will open on Saturday, October 7, according to President B. B. Johnson, of the American League, who as a member of the National Commission is to-day ready to begin preparations for the series. With the race as uncertain as it is, no final action has been taken yet by the National Commission, Mr. Johnson said.

"I am certain that the world's series will start on October 7," said Johnson. "The contestants might be willing to begin October 6, but I hardly think so. The American League race closes one day earlier than the National, so I do not think that would be fair to the National League winner. It looks as if the opening game will be played a week from next Saturday."

GEORGE SISLER TELLS WHY HE DECIDED TO ENTER BASEBALL

George Sisler, the former Michigan baseball star, who has made an impression as an extraordinary player on the St. Louis Browns, was encountered in the lobby of a New York hotel recently. He was "slouching down in a big leather chair," but straightened up when he was asked why he had gone into professional baseball, having taken a degree at Michigan in mechanical engineering.

"I decided to go into baseball," he explained, 'because the financial returns were there. A man starting in a profession finds it hard at the start. Money comes in slowly, and there is much work and worry. I thought I would take advantage of my money-earning capacity in baseball and take up mechanical engineering as a means of livelihood in later years. Winter months will be used by me to keep from getting out of touch with the profession. At the present time I am concentrating on baseball.

"I want to get to the top, if possible. It's a grand game, and getting bigger and better all the time. At the present rate I think that in ten or twelve years I can retire from baseball with a fortune. One thing, I will never play in the minors. As soon as I start to slow down I will quit, and then see what I can do with mechanical engineering."

British Columbia Officer Killed In Winning The V.C.

LONDON, Sept. 27. — The Victoria Cross has been awarded Lieut. Thomas Orde Lawler Wilkinson, North Lancashire Rifles, who was killed on July 25. He was 22 years of age and the second son of C. E. Wilkinson, of Comox, Vancouver, and was a surveyor in Victoria. He enlisted early in the war with the Canadian Gordons. Lieut. Wilkinson was decorated "For most conspicuous bravery. During an attack when a party of another unit was retiring their machine gun, Lieut. Wilkinson rushed forward and, with two of his men got the gun into action and held up the enemy till they were relieved later, when the advance was checked. During a bombing attack he forced his way forward and found four or five men of different units stopped by a solid block of earth over which the enemy was throwing bombs. With great pluck and promptness he mounted a machine gun on top of the parapet and dispersed the enemy bombers. He subsequently made two most gallant attempts to bring in a wounded man, but at the second attempt was shot through the heart just before reaching the man. Throughout the day he set a magnificent example of courage and self-sacrifice."

The Victoria Cross is also awarded Rev. William Robert Addison, chaplain fourth class, who early lived in a Canadian lumber camp. He carried a wounded man and assisted several others to cover, and by his splendid example of utter disregard for danger encouraged stretcher bearers to go forward under heavy fire.

FIRST OF BLACKMAIL GANG SENTENCED TO PRISON

WM. BUTLER GETS 18 MONTHS —PLEADS GUILTY TO CONSPIRACY CHARGE.

New York, Sept. 27—The first member of the octupus "blackmail syndicate" to receive the penalty of the law, William Butler was sentenced by Judge Martin P. Manton to eighteen months in the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta.

Handcuffed to a United States Deputy Marshal, Butler was brought to this city to-day from Philadelphia, where he was arrested a few days ago.

The conviction of Butler in such a summary manner is taken by the authorities to foreshadow the speedy destruction of the gang. Hitherto the members in their frequent clashes with the law have been able to defy the authorities.

Butler was brought to New York under two indictments. One of the items charged him with conspiracy to fraudulently represent a government officer. The other charged him with the extortion of $585 from Mrs. Regina S. Klipper of Philadelphia. Butler pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge.

BERGS PERIL OF THE SEAS

Deadliest Menace the Mariner Has to Face—How Ice Masses Are Made

There are few matters about which such widespread ignorance prevails as about the ice masses with which the North Atlantic, in the region of the Grand Banks, is bestrewn every spring and summer. The general impression is that this is ice which is formed along the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador and is released every spring, but, in truth, the origin of the icebergs and ice floes is entirely different. Icebergs are huge masses of glaciers formed in the vast Arctic continent of Greenland.

The glaciers lowly but irresistible press seaward through Greenland valleys into the ocean, where when the weight of the outer portion, once it is unsupported by the land becomes too great, it breaks off from the parent mass, a process called "calving". The calving portion becomes an iceberg, and sometimes these are of enormous size—many miles in extent indeed, and often so vast that they ground on the shoals in the region, until, by the play of the winds, the seas, the currents and the sun, they become top heavy and tumble over again to break apart into smaller fragments which are ferried southward on the bosom of the Polar current and which ultimately reach the avenues of ocean travel. These floes can only make their escape from the Arctic waters during the brief three summer months.

SAIL MANY MONTHS.

It takes these ice-masses six or eight months to voyage over the two thousand miles separating Melville Bay, in West Greenland, from the Grand Banks, and the larger bergs, which often ground along Labrador, are even longer on the way.

These floes and the bergs which are often amongst them, but which are increased later in the season by a vastly large number of bergs that sail along in solitary grandeur after having had their progress retarded by grounding on shoals or points of land themselves over the Grand Banks and become the very worst sort of menace to ocean shipping. It would be possible to occupy the whole of the space devoted to this article in merely summarising the cases of ocean steamers which during the past fifty years have met disaster through collision with icebergs in the waters off Newfoundland. All other records in this regard, however, were completely overshadowed by the appalling disaster to the Titanic. This mighty master creation, the greatest the world has ever seen, was eliminated in the brief space of a few hours, through the mistaken idea of some of those in authority on board, that she was so staunchly built that she could defy all agencies of nature and race with impunity through ice-laden seas.

SEEK THE GULF STREAM

As the summer advances and the sun becomes more powerful, the bergs melt into smaller fragments or upset and break into pieces on the shoal ground of the Grand Banks, being then swept into the Gulf Stream where they lie in the way of the steamers plying east and west and cause the shipping casualties so frequent during these months. Still migatier bergs, however, ground along the coast of Newfoundland in the spring and summer and move southward in the fall.

Admittedly the worst ranger menacing transatlantic travelers in modern days, with steamers of such speed as are plying on the Atlantic, is that of collision with an iceberg in a dense fog. It is morally certain that the mysterious disappearance of big steamers like the Naronic and the Huronian in more recent years, and of many others previously is attributable to this cause, for no other agency is powerful enough to work the ruin of a modern liner with her cellular bottom and water-tight bulkheads.—"American Review of Reviews."

Didn't Give Windsor Boy as Severe Whipping as Was Justified.

WINDSOR, Sept. 27. — Finding that Frederick Snider, Principal of Wyandotte street School, had used good judgment in dealing with William Watson, thirteen years old, one of his pupils, who charged him with assault, Magistrate Leggatt dismissed the charge and exonerated the principal from all blame. The boy swore at the principal and called him a vile name and the magistrate said more severe punishment than the boy got would have been justified.

Garden of Eden Is No Paradise For A Tommy

WOULDN'T TAKE A FLAMING SWORD TO EVICT ONE SOLDIER.

It is the oldest country in the world but you will find little or nothing that is old in it within 350 miles of the sea, writes Edmund Chandler. The Garden of Eden, if there is any truth in legend, is changed beyond recognition. Five of us—a padre, a doctor, a regimental officer, a supply and transport man, and myself, ought to know, for we were moored to the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil for the greater part of the last week in June. We were all bound for Nasiriyeh, on the Euphrates, and waited or burying the victims of the night little hope—for a problematical general in whose existence we had ceased to believe.

The palm-tree and the fig leaf were the only paradisaical things we found in Eden. Even the serpent was invisible, though his work remains and the knowledge of evil thrives preposterously. Man is still chastised in this spot, and we had reason to be thankful that the longest day was followed by the shortest night. Our pyjamas began to sweat before we put them on. We neither slept nor were we thoroughly awake. We flung open our mosquito curtains and threw off our pyjamas, jackets, for the air seemed too heavy for insects. But the hour of the sandfly was only postponed. They came towards midnight and perished in our sweat like flies in marmalade.

At five the sun came licking over the horizon again to recharge the atmosphere that had lost nothing of its retained heat during the night. A message came early in the morning that the general had not left Ali Gharbi. We could not start that day and it was very improbable that we should get away the next.

At ten o'clock a breeze sprang up and our interest in things revived. I went ashore with the S. and T. man and the regimental officer. The doctor and the padre were busy restoring or burying the victims of the night. Two more graves were being dug in the British cemetery across the Euphrates. I heard a man in a gunboat nearby bellowing like a heifer. He was unconscious and they were wrapping him in ice. We would have given days of our life, lumps of our pay, for one long, bubbly iced drink. The padre told me that three times during the night he had entirely evaporated, but that towards dawn the humid atoms had collected themselves by some miracle of attraction. The he had survived to minister to mind and bodies in greater peril of dissolution.

We explored the streets up to Rit road, Eve's walk leads into Charing Cross, and Serpent's Alley, of course into Temptation Square, a small insect in the houses by the quay where half a dozen benches are protected from the sun by matting on reed supports. Temptation for the Arabs takes the form of tinned pineapple, Aden cigarettes, canned salmon, and the like, which repeat the unhealthy process of sophistication that was so disastrous to our first parents.

Some of the houses on the river front bear the mark of shot and shell. They were held by the Turks when we took the place in December, 1914. There were snipers at every window, and our troops were exposed to a very heavy fusilade as they advanced under cover of the palms on the other side of the river. In the meanwhile the sappers were building a flying bridge three miles lower down by which the 110th were able to cross. This regiment and the 104th now hold Quarnah in their hands. The Turks, mostly Anatolians, a good stubborn breed, had to fight it out or surrender.

There were parleyings during the night between the two camps, and among the Turks much poring over a thumb-marked and dog-eared copy of The Hague Convention in English and French. It was found the next morning, Dec. 9, on the Governor's table, open at "The Surrender of Town ships," when the 104th and 110th marched in and received the piled arms of the garrison. We captured 11 guns with the Governor, Subhi Bey and 1,300 Turks.

On May 31, 1915, we fought an amphibious action, which probably has no parallel in military records. We collected all the bellums in Basra, five hundred or more, and allotted them to the brigade. In this strange armored craft, with iron shields in the bows, we advanced like the Vikings of old against the enemy's fortified island.

On June 1 the Turks were in full retreat up the river. This brilliant little [illegible] marsh battle was Townshend's first action in Mesopotamia, and the beginning of the series of victories which carried out small British force up the Arch of Ctesiphon and within eighteen miles of Bagdad.

We suffered more casualties from heat stroke in the action than from shot and shell. But the lust of battle is a great restorer, and in victory the spirit carries along the flesh. It is better to fight in a climate like this than to moralise or think. The men who evicted the Turks from the Sumerian Paradise, have happier recollections of it than the draft fresh from home who passed through on the longest day of the year and left their toil behind.

"——!" as the profane trooper said. "It would take no blooming swords to turn me out of this."

WATERWORKS REPAIRS WOULD COST 75,000

GUELPH CITY ENGINEER HAS ESTIMATED THAT SUPPLY IS AMPLE FOR 50,000.

Guelph Sept. 27—City Engineer McArthur has finished an long and exhaustive report on the condition of the waterworks pipe line and springs on the property owned by the city. His report estimates that there is sufficient pure spring water on the city's farms to supply a city of 50,000 population. In regard to repairing the pipe line, which has caused trouble for almost two years, and on account of which the water supply has been treated with chlorine, the report recommended a wooden pipe with steel banding and an asphalt coating. The cost of the repairs, the engineer reports as $75,000. A special committee from the City Council will consider the report.

WAR TURNS HAIR GREY

Prematurely Ageing the Fighting Men in All Armies.

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The effect of the war in prematurely ageing the fighting men in all armies has become the subject of serious scientific discussion in England. Investigations have shown that men under thirty, in a few months in the trenches, turn grey.

This effect is noticeable, not only in the British army, but among the French also, and among German prisoners, many of whom, giving their ages as 21 to 27 years, present the appearance of men over forty.

"The grey hairs come quicker to the officers than to the 'Tommies,'" says a Canadian army surgeon. "I have never known of hair actually growing white overnight, but it often happens within the space of a week or ten days."

This will be one of a series of interesting meetings for men planned for Sunday afternoon. Sergt. McCrea is not a stranger to Peterborough, having been here as a reader with the late Pauline Johnston, the celebrated Indian poetess and reader. Sgt. McCrea's specialty is the reading of Dr. Drummond's habitant poems. He also had a wide experience in addressing gatherings or patriotic subjects. The following comment on his address in Winnipeg on the above subject was made by the Winnipeg Free Press: "Mr. Walter McCrea appeared last evening at the Royal Alexandra under the auspices of the Municipal Chapter of the I.O.D.E. His address was full of flashes of wit and humour which relieved the sober background, and was one of the most imperial ever delivered under the I.O.D.E. auspices in this city."

The men of the city are cordially invited to be present at the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday afternoon.

1,250 STANDARD HOTELS.

Licensed Vendors' Sales in First Week Not Encouraging.

TORONTO, Sept. 27.—Vice-Chairman Dingman of the Board of License Commissioners announced today that the total of standard hotel licenses now issued within the Province had reached 1,250, an increase of 64 since the Act came into force.

The four Provincial vendors have no visions of sudden riches from the vending of liquor under the Act from the business done in the first week since prohibition came into effect. One vendor reports his sales for the week only totalled $22. The slackness in business is attributed to the fact that everybody is stocked up. Later it is expected the vendors' business will improve.

Vendors anticipate a famine in brandy within the next two months. The stocks are now almost exhausted, and as France, the greatest brandy producing nation, has forbidden exportation, serious difficulty is expected in securing even the limited supply needed by the vendors.

UNITY OF FRENCH AND BRITISH COMMANDS.

New York Sun: There is an aspect of the Franco-British offensive that one hears nothing about, and that is the complete harmony of the armies of the Allies in their field operations. Never before in history, we believe, have two nations fought side by side in a great war without friction, confusion, cross-purposes and heart-burnings. There have been mistakes and badly timed movements in the great campaign in France, but nothing was said about them except by the critics in the rear, who were more concerned about claiming credit for France or for England, as the case might be, than in doing justice to the commanders and to the spirit of their men. Have men of one race ever gone into battle with more singleness of purpose and high courage than the soldiers of France and of the British Empire? It has been an inspiring spectacle and surely the world would never have behind it if the traditional enemies did not believe that their cause was just and that the consequences of failure would be disaster irreparable.

WINTER BILLETS UNCERTAIN.

Nothing Definite yet Except that Small Places Won't Get Soldiers.

Ottawa, Ont., Sept. 28.—It is altogether likely that the Department of Militia will turn a deaf ear to all demands from small towns to be assigned a number of troops for the winter months. An official of the department said that requests for troops had been received from all but a few towns in the Dominion, but it has been definitely decided to depart from the practice of billeting the soldiers in small towns. Just how many battalions will be assigned to divisional headquarters such as Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, is not known yet. It depends largely on the number of battalions which it is decided to send across the Atlantic before the arrangements for the winter quarters are completed.

SEEK WAR BIRDMAN WITH IRON NERVES

THE APPLICANT MUST BE IMMUNE FROM SHOCK WHEN REVOLVER IS FIRED ONLY A FOOT BEHIND HIM

To be an aviator in the French army one must be as nearly immune to sensation as the human being can be. To ascertain if the would-be aviator has the requisite iron nerve he is subjected to a complicated system of tests both of his physique and psychology. He must show that sudden shocks don't throw his nerves out of gear; he must show the quickest response to stimuli, but show that he makes only the proper response; he must be able to show not the slightest tremor when a revolver is fired unexpectedly a few inches from his ear. Some idea of the sytsem of testing applicants for the aviation corps is given in an article in the October issue of the Popular Science Monthly, which says:

"The war aviator must be so constituted that the sudden menace of danger, of shells bursting about him, of machine gun bullets raining about him will find him calm and collected. He must face a crisis not only with deliberate calm but with the ability to escape with a whole skin.

"Polo players, lion tamers, big game hunters proved to be the best aviators in the early days of the flying machine, simply because they were so constituted that they were not appalled by danger. Indeed they courted perils. Men of this rare type are hard to find. Besides every man obsessed with the dare devil spirit does not necessarily constitute the ideal aviator. Even timid business men have their moments of reckless daring. What is wanted is the stuff which Daniel Boones and Shackletons are made.

"But in addition to the dare devil spirit, has the prospective aviator muscular and nervous endurance? After clutching for an hour the control levers of a speedy monoplane, is his hand firm or does it tremble? After witnessing a terrible accident, is his heart beat, his 'cardiac rhythm', unDisturbed? Moreover, are his nervous and muscular systems so well balanced and so nicely corelated that his hands promptly obey every external command

"These important questions must be answered in his favor if he hopes to get a job as a war flier with the French army. The French do not want dare devils to drive their machines, if they are mere devils and nothing more.

"For the purpose of finding out just how favorably each applicant can answer these difficult questions—and he cannot answer them with his lips—the French war department employs an ingenious testing machine. Psychologists have known and have employed what is called the d'Arsonval chronometer for many years. But it is unlikely that the delicate mechanism has ever been put to such an interesting task.

"One part of it tests the pulse beat. Another determines the tremor of the nerves. Another apparatus discovers the ability or the inability of the applicant to withstand fatique. After he has undergone several simple examinations the candidate is seated in a chair and the final supreme test is applied.

"How would most men act if a revolver were discharged unexpectedly behind their ears? The answer is simple. They would leap into the air; their heart beat would probably double; they would gasp and tremble as if they had the palsy. In so doing they would promptly disqualify themselves as aviators in the French army.

"In testing the possibilities of an aviator various contrivances are attached to the body, all having a definite purpose. Tubes lead from these devices to a slowly rotating cylinder, on which paper is wrapped. They terminate in points which record the slightest variation in his physique.

"When the clockwork is started, and he is perhaps wondering what the queer apparatus is all about, a deafening explosion takes place a foot behind him. The record made at that moment on the revolving paper determines whether or not he is to become a French aviator. If his heartbeat, his respiration and his arm nerves and muscles show no undue excitement on the paper cylinder, he goes to work. But if the stylus actuated by the pulse beat dances about the rotating sheet he is disqualified. It is only natural that his reflex nervous system should respond in some way to this sudden impulse; but the man who tests him knows how wide a variation from normal may be tolerated.

"Next in importance to the revolver shot test is that which ascertains the candidate's promptness in acting upon an external command. For instance he is told to press an electric button when he feels a light touch on his left ear-lobe, or when he sees a light flash. His quickness in acting upon these sensations determines whether or not he could meet the sudden contingencies which occur in the air—in a word, whether or not he could handle his 'plane over a roaring battlefield without losing any part of his nerve."

Laurier's Call To French-Canadians

"I admire the young Canadians who are to-day fighting on the soil of France, and I do not want it said that we left the deliverance of France to the citizens of British origin. The honour of the French-Canadians must not tolerate a statement that we have not done what our fellow citizens of the English race have."—Sir Wilfrid Laurier at Montreal.

SOFTENING PROCESS PLAYED HAVOC WITH HUN DEFENCES AT SCHWABEN

Slowly But With Deadly Precision British Guns Prepared Way For Final Victorious Dash of Troops—Redoubt, as in a Vice, Fell Between Crushing Blows From Either side as Brave Tommies Rushed German Lines—British Wave of Infantry Followed Murderous British Gunfire and Position Fell in Few Minutes.

(By Frederick Palmer.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES ON THE FRONT IN FRANCE, September 30.—"You have just time to get into a tree top and see us go after the Schwaben redoubt," said a staff general to a correspondent to-day.

Attacks have been so numerous along the British front in the last few days that even if informed of all beforehand the correspondents would have to possess a dual personality to be present at all. The offensive is in one of its bit-by-bit stages, but is being pressed with sustained and tireless fury under the auspices of the halcyon Autumn weather for the past week, surpassing any other week since it began.

Schwaben redoubt is beyond Thiepval, which was taken Tuesday. A crucifix once crowned this ridge. Where it stood became the centre of the strongest defense German industry and ingenuity could build. This was the goal of the Ulster men in their heroic charge on July 1, when they fell face forward under the storm of machine gun fire sent from the site of the former shrine, which peasants working in their fields could see when they looked up from their labours in the surrounding fields and villages.

SOFTENING TREATMENT.

In all the weeks since July 1 the British made no further attempt at this hill. Their trenches were in the same place as before that day. The "No Man's Land" or dead space, remained where it was when the Germans first formed their defensive line. But while they were swinging in from the south, where the grand attack on July 1 had succeeded, they had given Thiepval and Schwaben redoubt a fair daily allowance of shell fire, though making no infantry attack.

For nearly three months this softening process continued. Then when the British had gained the ridges running at an angle with the old German line of Thiepval they began to take fresh interest in that old first line. Now they did not have to attack it in front, but approached it from the side, as well as having it in a crushing vise.

THOUGHT BRITISH STUPID.

One German officer, who was captured, said he did not think the British good enough soldiers to attack in this way, which was just the way the British did attack after their lesson of July 1.

"And we hope the Germans will continue to think us stupid," said a British staff officer.

UNDER STEADY STRAIN

But beyond Thiepval was that last commanding high ground south of the Ancre. Bare and brown it looked this morning and distinct were the German trenches, which were going "to get it" at a given moment.

Meanwhile all along the line of battle came just the steady gunfire which has been maintained without intermission of late. This keeps the Germans always under strain, destroying their works as fast as they can dig. They never know when or where such things as happened this morning at Schwaben redoubt may happen.

SHIELD OF GUNFIRE.

And suddenly balls of smoke so thick that they soon became a cloud were laid over the German first line on the ridge, and everyone breaking from an ugly flash. Hissing, crashing death laid its gripping, clinging mantle over this trench whose inmates could survive only by hugging their dugouts. Every shell seemed to fall between two imaginary lines of tape laid for the guidance of the gunners.

When the rain of steel ceased, the British soldiers, timing their arrival to its cessation, were over the parapet and at the doors of the dugouts. Then on to the next trench in the same fashion the waves of shellfire swept up the hillsides as shields for the advancing waves of khaki.

BARRAGES DIFFER.

There are creeping artillery barrages and jumping barrages and many kinds as the guns come playing an increasingly skillful part. And the Germans came back, their shells screaming through the British shell curtain, trying to check the human waves. But unless their curtains were laid in the right place they were waste. A line of infantry may be fairly safe with a curtain shellfire a hundred yards on either side.

To-morrow those waves may break with sudden intensity at some other point along the battle line and another village or system of trenches may be taken.

Three-quarters of Schwaben redoubt is in British hands and five or six hundred prisoners were shelled out of their dugouts, while the fighting continues at this writing.

All along the line the British are gaining ground.

If You Have to Work too Hard Take Iron for Your Blood Phosphorus for Your Nerves

Makes you 100 per cent. stronger in 10 days.

It is the desire of every man, woman and child to feel well, eat well, digest well, look well; but you must have plenty of iron in your blood to attain this glow of happiness and youth. The moment that the blood gets thin or impure, your stomach is unable to digest your food and it passes into the bowels undigested, then your bowels are unable to take any nutriment from the undigested food and the food begins to ferment, causing indigestion, the impurities run into your kidneys soon follows liver trouble, constipation, rheumatism, etc., and your skin becomes sallow, your nerves shaky, you feel tired and all worn out, you take all sorts of medicines and you find nothing does you any good. Now, what you need is iron to build up your blood and phosphorus to restore your nerves. First see how much you weigh, then go to your druggist and get some Bonised Phosphorus with Iron, and in ten days you will find you will be 100 per cent. stronger. The moment that Bonised Phosphorus with Iron is taken it is absorbed by the blood and nerves and you will notice a difference almost immediately. By putting the iron with the phosphorus you form an entirely new form of iron that will not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach nor cause constipation.

Bonised Phosphorus with iron as spoken of here does not contain an atom of arsenic strychnine, nor any poison which has been found so harmful in almost every tonic. This is not a stimulant which makes you feel fine for a while, but instead it goes to the root of your trouble, builds up your blood, strengthens your nerves, giving power to digest your food and drives away all stomach, liver and kidney complaints. Bonised Phosphorus with Iron is dispensed in this city only at F. C. Weber's Drug Store, Charlotte street.

The Germans are Losing Spirit in Their Attacks Against French Troops

Smaller Force of Allied Troops Forced Hun Battalion Back With Heavy Losses When They Attempted Skirmish—Heavy Shelling Needed to Cut Enemy Wire Before French Troops Are Allowed To Leave Their Shelters For Forward Dash—Naval Guns Are Being Used With Good Effect.

REMINDING THE HUNS

ON THE FRENCH FRONT, September 30.—The French troops, cooperating with the British, continued their advances, and are driving the Germans out of villages and fortified positions both north and south of the Somme and frustrating all attempts at counter-attacks.

The forward move of the Allied armies, although seemingly slow, appears to be irresistible. Since the offensive began on July 1, the French alone have recaptured on this front of the Somme 200 square kilometres of territory, their advance varying from 2 to 12 kilometres in depth over a front of about 20 kilometres. Besides this gain of ground, approximately 40,000 German prisoners have been taken by the French, while cannon numbering over 180 pieces, more than half of them heavy guns, have fallen into their hands. The machine guns taken by the French total more than 600 in this drive, and dobens of others have been buried in the battered German trenches, together with their crews.

SMALL DAMAGE DONE.

The correspondent went over the entire ground just as the German troops delivered a futile counter-attack in the neighbourhood of Bouchavesnes, which cost them a heavy price in casualties and prisoners. The villages recently taken by the French were under constant, though not heavy, artillery fire from guns of all calibres, but the French troops have been so well dissimulated, and captured German works have been so well consolidated that very small damage was done.

As one battalion of German infantry came forward in waves to attack a detachment, the French holding the most advanced trenche sprang over the parapets and dashed forward to meet them in the open with the bayonet. The Germans hesitated before the seeming daring of the much smaller force of French, who reached them before they had recovered from their surprise, and the few that escaped the bayonet or capture fled back to their trenches.

From an observation post situated right in the centre of the recent fighting opposite Clery, the correspondent watched the French shelling the ruins of Mont St. Quentin, which still contained living Germans. Every shell threw up clouds of red brick dust, and while this was settling the Germans replied by bombarding the ruins of Clery, in the hope of disturbing the French there.

REMINDING THE HUNS.

All the landscape was indented by myriads of large and small shell holes. The slopes and numerous crests were marked with communication trenches and former front lines which had been flattened out and their German occupants killed. Numerous French batteries had taken positions from which, behind the rising crests and aided by keen observers they constantly reminded their German adversaries of their presence. Across the wide plateau scarcely a movement could be seen, although tens of thousands of [illegible] there, ready at any moment to start or to repel an attack.

BREAKING THE WIRE.

Traversing the battle field where the Germans and French had faced each other for many months, barbed wire was encountered at every angle. Its strands had all to be broken before the French infantry could make an advance of even one pace across the difficult country. The process of destruction demanded the expenditure of almost fabulous quantities of shells, as many as a hundred of them being necessary for the destruction of a single square yard of the entanglements.

The French prepared the way for their advance very thoroughly, knowing the difficulties of the country where the Germans had chosen to oppose them. Every fot of the German works was swept with projectiles before a single file of French soldiers was permitted to go over the top of the trenches.

SPARING THE MEN.

The French have learned the lessons of sparing lives since the beginning of the war. They have, however, retained all their old dash when once given the word to engage the Germans, whether in the open or in an attempt on fortified positions. This dash and heroism has been brought into play many times since the Somme offensive, for without these qualities no soldier could ever, in the face of serious opposition, make his way across country such as this, with its crests, slopes and deep ravines.

As the French now occupy the highest crests, it is difficult for the Germans to inflict much damage on them with their artillery, which has been deprived of its vision by the acknowledged superiority of the allied air service. They cannot use observation balloons, owing to the vigilance of the allied fliers. On the other hand, besides squadrons of aeroplanes the entente allies have stationed every few hundred yards along the entire battle front dozens of "Sausages" from which, when the weather conditions are favourable, come reports of every move behind the German lines. Naval guns have taken an important part in the present offensive.

NAVAL GUNS USED.

During the entire day only two German aeroplanes showed themselves near the allied line in this sector to see anything and they remained only one or two minutes; for immediately they were observed a dozen entente allied machines chased them back eastward.

The naval guns have been found of enormous value, owing to their lower range. They are mounted on railroad trucks in the most efficient manner and are extremely mobile for transfer from one point to another on the front. The French seamen besides, are now using many of the waterways in this district, along which they approach the German positions in armoured boats carrying big ships guns, with which they do great damage.

Behind the lines everything is carried on with such efficiency the impression is created that war is an ordinary condition of the country.

Burning of Many Barns In Lampton County Blamed On German Gang Or Fire Fiend

PROVINCIAL POLICE AUTHORITIES CONDUCTING SEARCHING INVESTIGATION INTO BLAZES.

Oil Springs, September 29.—Barn burnings, directly laid at the door of German propagandists and "terrorizers" by popular opinion, have roused the people of Dawn and Inniskillen townships as has nothing before in the townships' history, and provincial detectives are now here conducting a rigid investigation. Two more well-filled barns were added on Sunday to the fast-growing list. Six have been destroyed within the past three weeks in the two townships and in every case "cause unknown" has been written after their reports. Public opinion substitutes "German torch" or "maniac firebugs" for the words "cause unknown."

BIGGEST BARNS IN DISTRICT.

In every case the barns have been the biggest and the best filled of the district. What is believed to be the best clue to the perpetrators, an incident that is considered as significant by those who have been investigating the blazes, occurred in connection with the destruction of the barn of George La Pointe, near Dresden, at 10.15 Sunday morning. No one had been near the structure for three hours before it was discovered in flames, but on Saturday, during the absence of the owner a stranger called at the house and demanded to be allowed to take a photograph of the barn. Mrs. La Pointe was alone at the time and refused to give her permission. The man, however, carrying his camera, or what was supposed to be a camera, walked to the barn and instead of setting his machine in front of the building, entered the structure.

POLICE HAVE DETAILS.

This man's description has been furnished to the police.

Feeling is running high over the occurrence, and "German reign of terror"-gangs who wish to cut down Canadian supplies, are blamed.

Sunday night the sixth barn was added to the list when the big bank barn on the farm of W. J. and George Thompson on the 5th concession of Dawn, was totally destroyed. Three other buildings went with it.

The fire here was as mysterious as the others. Shortly after 10 o'clock the brothers happened to look from their home window and discovered that their barn was a mass of flames. They managed to save their stock, but 2,000 bushels of grain, the season's hay crop, and implements, were destroyed.

NEIGHBORS GIVE AID.

Neighbors from the whole countryside responded to the alarm and did what they could. The closeness of the house to the barns threatened its destruction at any moment and it was only saved by strenuous efforts. As in the case of the La Pointe barn, no one had been near the structure for hours, and once more the cause is laid at Germans or German-sympathiser doors.

None of the barns has been lost during a storm and none is close to a railway.

Bad Weather Hinders Operations On Western Front

French Troops Gained Some Ground North of Rancourt—Bulgars Are Being Attacked on Three Sides Russians Make a Fresh Advance

3,000 PRISONERS

PARIS, Sept. 30. — (French Official Communique).—French troops gained some ground north of Rancourt, following a preparatory artillery bombardment. Rain storms continue to hinder operations on the rest of the Somme front. In the Bulgarian theatre of war the Bulgars are being attacked on three sides by the French, Russians and Serbs. The Roumanian forces are holding at all points, but further advances have been stopped by bad weather.

On the Russian front, the Czar's forces have resumed the offensive against the Turks, taking several hundred prisoners and stores in Asia Minor. In a fresh advance in the Carpathians during the last two days, the Russians have taken three thousand Austrians with six guns.

The admiralty officer insisted that the stoppage of the consignments of false teeth was not the part of a starvation plan.

NAVY SURGEONS WERE HEROES IN SEA FIGHT

Now, as in Nelson's Day, the "Sea Doctor" is Honour to Service.

The picture of the dying Nelson is engraved on the mind of every Briton. Against the fierce setting of smoke and flame the little group of officers surrounding their chief, stands out clear and memorable; the figure of the Navy surgeon bending at his task retains its graciousness; in the eyes of the hero we rejoice still to discover a shrine of our tradition.

We would not have it otherwise; and if our view of the new pictures of sea war is here and there obscured by that old scene the loss is less than the gain. For the old scene is strangely like the new when the accidents of time and circumstance are discounted. The eyes of the hero look out still on the fields of our sea; still sailormen are gathered about their dead in the deep comradeship of service; the naval surgeon remains still the gracious figure of old time amid the suffocation and darkness of his distributing station in the iron deeps of our battleships. The traditional silence still encompasses the naval surgeon, as if it was enough that he should go about his business seeking no reward but his achievement. Yet when the full story of the battle of Jutland Bank and our other naval battles is written men will marvel as greatly at the achievement of the naval surgeons as at the achievement of those who manned the guns or directed the courses of the great ships, says the London Times.

During the battle of Jutland Bank the naval surgeons performed a terrible task. At first when the enemy was sighted there devolved upon them the work of transferring stores and equipment from the sick bays above the armour to the fore and aft distributing stations below it. The emergency was a sudden one and the time at disposal short. With the closing of the armoured doors the time for action was come. Soon in their stations they heard the beginning of the guns, and soon there crept down to them the fumes of the exploding charges. From that time the stations became scenes of fierce and terrible activity.

In one great ship rallying smoke filled the doctors' rooms at the very moment when the stream of wounded began to flow down to them, adding suffocation to the thousand other perils of the work. The ship reeled under pounding blows, she staggered in a difficult sea; the concussion of her guns was so great to preclude the possibility of adequate surgical assistance. Wearing gas masks the doctors did what they could, bending their energies self lessly to the great task, as is the tradition of their calling.

In another ship an enemy shell destroyed the aft station utterly, so that the whole work of relief fell on the remaining forward one. Hour after hour, without reck of time or exhaustion, the staff laboured to overtake its great task. Another ship was holed, and her electric light cut off. The medical station was in darkness; it was foul with the gas fumes from the enemy's shells; water poured in by the holes in the vessel's sides. Here single-handed a young naval surgeon toiled by the light of an electric torch until at length he was ordered to get his wounded away because the ship was sinking. And this task he achieved so well that not a life was lost. The doctors witnessed strange scenes during these hours, and perhaps the strangest of all was that which followed the announcement that a German ship had gone down, for then all the wounded, including the man on the operating table, be-

In the Hospital Ships.

The medical work of the Navy has been planned with a care which has been justified by results. At the beginning of the war everything was ready—hospital supplies equipment ships. Within four days from the declaration of war, hospital ships were fully equipped and on their way to join the Grand Fleet. Had a great battle occurred during these early days it would have found this department of the Navy as well prepared as all the other departments. When, in time, the battle came, the work proceeded without hitch. The sick bays, which are situated above the armor, were evacuated in favour of the distributing stations, where immediate treatment can be afforded. The stretcher parties using the remarkable Neill-Robertson stretchers went about their hazardous work as at drill, and as soon as was possible the wounded were evacuated to the hospital ships and taken to the shore hospitals. Thanks to the splendid spirit of the medical staff and their assistants the toll of suffering was mitigated in great degree and the lot of the wounded during the battle made as easy as possible.

It is evident that the treatment in the stations is of first importance, because evacuation of wounded men into the hospital ships is impossible during a battle, and may be impossible afterwards if a ship is in difficulties and is hurrying to get back to port. Apart from the treatment of wounds, the most difficult problem is furnished by the terrible burns met with. These burns are of two kinds, those due to the ignition of cordite supplies by enemy shells—which are so severe as to amount to an instantaneous mummification—and those due to the flash of bursting shells, which are not usually very severe. The problem here is to protect the skin of the body, and efforts are being made to solve it; for the danger of a burn increases in proportion to the amount of skin affected. It is interesting to note that the eyes are not affected by these burns; the eyes are able to shut before it reaches them. In other words, the time occupied in seeing the flame and reacting to it is less than the time occupied by the flame in reaching the eyes.

Navy Is a Healthy Force.

But the work of the naval surgeon is not only battle-work. The health of the Navy is his supreme care, and, as events have proved, his supreme triumph. Never in its history has the Fleet been so healthy. The incidence of sickness is ridiculously low, amounting, in the case of most of the ships, to a fraction per cent. This great result is no chance circumstance determined by a healthy life; it is the outcome of ceaseless toil and infinite attention to detail. It proves that the naval surgeon is availing himself of every advance in knowledge and is not sparing himself in his daily work. To those who are inclined to make light of this constant supervision, it may be pointed out that by means of it the complete crews of two super-dreadnoughts have been presented as a gift to Britain; a few years ago these men would have been found in hospital. The Navy is a vaccinated force, and vaccination has proved its value so conclusively that Navy men are free to enter areas where smallpox may have broken out. Cases of infectious disease of any type are segregated at once and conveyed to special hospitals.

Not does the good work end at supervision. No supervision, however, careful, can compete with bad hygienic conditions. It is a true statement that within the last two years a revolution has been wrought in the sanitation of the Fleet, and more especially in the ventilation of battleships. To the uninitiated this may appear to be a small matter, but when the conditions of modern naval warfare are considered the small matter becomes a matter of supreme moment. Efficient ventilation in the gun turret, where the fumes of bursting shells are penetrating everywhere may mean the difference between good shooting and bad, between the seising of an opportunity and the losing of it. Again, in the exchange rooms, where the telegraph and telephone operators work efficient ventilation means quickness of brain and rapidity of action. It means generally better health and better spirits, and that in the hour of trial means increased fighting efficiency. The new system of ventilation are extremely ingenious, and secure a free supply of warmed air for all parts of the ship. The air is "breathed" into the ship rather than pumped into it, and so there are no draughts. By means of a clever contrivance ventilation can be carried out in the worst weather conditions when decks are awash.

We have here an evolution, vast, silent, momentous, and evolution which is winning men for Britain and defeating the hopes of the enemy. The Naval Medical Service also exhibits the "Nelson touch" of resource and sacrifice. It is a splendid monument to the care and ability of its chief, Sir Arthur May, who has laboured without respite to make it efficient and also to the fine work of preparation carried out by Sir James Porter. Sir Arthur's predecessor, who laid the foundation of the present system, Sir Arthur has his reward in the record of work accomplished and in the clean bill of health he is able to present. The thanks of the British people are due to him, as they are also due to Fleet Surgeon R. C. Munday for his schemes of ventilation which have achieved almost revolutionary results and to Fleet Surgeon D. W. Hewitt, who has evolved a series of fully-equipped hospitals out of the old sick-bays of the ships.

PICKLES AND RELISHES.

Old English Pickle.

Chop fine eight ounces each of onions, red peppers and pared tart apples, and place the min a crock. Boil for five minutes one pint of white wine vinegar, adding to it a dessert spoon of salt, then turn it over the pickle. When it has stood for 24 hours it may be bottled into small jars, to be opened as needed.

Quick Pickles.

Take 100 gherkin-sized cucumbers; wash thoroughly and pack in a crock with a handful of salt and enough cold water to cover, holding them down with a weighted plate. Let stand 36 hours, then remove and drain entirely free of the salt, and pack in a fresh crock. Boil two quarts of vinegar for five minutes, with a small spice bag, then pour it over the pickles, cover and let stand for three days and they will be ready for use. Leave a long string on the spice bag and draw it out in a week or ten days—before it grows slimy.

Spanish Pickle.

Chop finely thirty ripe tomatoes, twenty onions, ten green peppers and one bunch of celery. Add two and a half cups of sugar, two tablespoons of salt, one level tablespoon each of allspice, cloves, cinnamon and mace. Add three quarts of vinegar and let all come slowly to a boiling point. Stir often and let the mixture boil from two to three hours until it is dark brown in colour and heavy to stir. When cold it may be stowed away in a crock or in jars.

French Mustard.

Take a pint of vinegar and add to it three lumps of sugar and a carefully prepared spice bag. Let boil three minutes, then remove the spice bag. Have one box of good dry mustard mixed to a very stiff paste with a little cold vinegar. Wash and heat an iron poker red hot, then pour the boiling vinegar into the mustard, stirring vigorously with the hot poker until it is perfectly smooth. Put in wide-mouthed bottles, cork securely, and it is ready for use.

HOME-MADE VINEGAR.

Great danger lies in cheap acid vinegar, so the careful housewife makes her vinegar. Get a large crock or small keg to make it in. Use three pounds of very dark sugar, one cupful of strained honey, half a yeast cake and four gallons of warm water. If the jar is used, tie a piece of cheese cloth over the top and keep in a warm place. If a keg is used, put a little paste around the bunghole and cover with cheese cloth. Do not move or shake and in from one to two months, according to the heat, it will be a fine, strong, pure vinegar.

CONCERNING WOMEN.

Swinging Indian clubs will fatten the neck by developing it.

If you are troubled with insomnia try drinking a glass of hot milk after getting into bed. Sip it very slowly and as hot as possible. Some people like a pinch of sugar or salt in it. Hot milk has a soothing effect on the nerves and helps to induce sleep.

Liquid vaseline may be employed on the scalp or tonic conatining oil and other stimulating ingredients. For this purpose use a drop stopper and apply directly to the scalp, not to the hair. In this way the skin quickly absorbs the moisture, leaving the hair free.

A skin bleach is made from one pint of distilled water, two drams of triple lavender water, one dram of powdered salammoniac and one half dram of hydro-chloric acid. This is strong and should be mixed by a chemist. To use, the skin is wet with it morning and night, the liquid drying in.

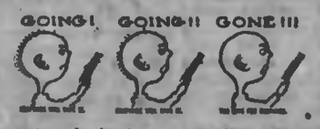
Use Newbro's Herpicide IN TIME AND YOU WILL NEVER NEED FALSE HAIR

Wearing false hair is a harmless deceit of which many ladies are guilty. These women are all objects for sympathy rather than criticism.

Early neglect in the care of the scalp has caused the loss of so much hair that their personal appearance is sadly marred. To correct this defect they resort to artificial hair hoping by so doing to hide the results of their earlier inattention to the details of their toilet. These unfortunates are deceiving no one but themselves as no artificial hair no matter how costly, ever has the snap and luster nor can it be made to look as pretty and attractive as natural hair.



Most ladies would resent any imputation of personal carelessness and neglect. And yet very many permit their natural hair to become so dull, brittle and lusterless that it looks no better than that bought at the store.

All this is as unfortunate as it is unnecessary. Hair that is unsightly or thin may usually be attributed to the destroying effects of Dandruff. This destructive formation shortly robs the hair of life, with the result that it finally loosens and drops out.

There is a preparation, sold and guaranteed by all dealers, the intelligent use of which will kill the dandruff germ. It cleanses the scalp of all accumulations and makes the hair shine with the luster of life and beauty. That remedy is Newbro's Herpicide, the Original Germ-Remedy for Dandruff. In no way can you add more to your personal charm and attractiveness than by the use of this remarkable and well known scalp prophylactic.

On account of its astonishing merit and its delightful and exquisite odor, Herpicide finds users everywhere among all classes. It may be purchased in 50 cent and $1.00 sizes at all drug stores and toilet goods counters. Applications may be obtained at the better barber shops and hair dressing parlors.

Upon receipt of 10 cents in postage or silver to cover cost of packing and mailing, The Herpicide Co., Dept. S, Detroit, Mich., will send to any address a nice sample bottle of Herpicide and an interesting booklet on the care of the hair.

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

LUCK AND PLUCK.

(Respectfully submitted to the young men of our town and vicinity.)

Young man, your success or your failure, your weal or woe of life will depend largely in the manner in which you treat these two words.

Our fathers were good religious people and did not mean to foster atheism when they talked about luck and gave a half-way assent to its Godless reality. If the universe were an infinite chaos, if order had no throne in its wide realm, if universal law were a fable or a fancy, if God were a Babel, or the world a pandemonium, there might be such a thing as luck. But while from the particle to the globe, from the animalcule to the archangel, there is not a being or a thing or a time or an event, disconnected with the great government of eternal law and order, we cannot see how such a game of chance as the word luck supposes can be admitted to any corner of the great world. Luck! What is it? A lottery? A frolic of games? A ruse among the elements? A trick of dame nature? Has any scholar defined luck, any philosopher explained its nature, any chemist shown us its elements? Is luck that strange nondescript unmateriality that does all things among men that they cannot account for? If so, why does not luck make a fool speak words of wisdom, an ignoramus utter lectures on philosophy, a stupid dolt write the great works of music and poetry?

Many are the young men who waste the best part of their lives in attempts to woo this coy maid into their embraces. They enter into this or that or the other speculation, with the dreamy hope that luck will pay them a smiling visit. Some go to California or Australia, or the far West, or the torrid or frigid zones, or some other way off place, with no fair prospects or hope of success from their own energies or exertions, but depending all the while for a gentle smile from capricious luck. Poor fellows! they find that luck does not get so far away from home.

Some less daring and more lazy, loiter about home, drawl about town, or loll through the country, whose only hope and expectation is in a shuffle of luck in their favor. They know they deserve nothing, yet with an impudence hard as brass they will pray to luck for a windfall or a fat office, or a living, and foolishly wait an answer. These are the men who make your gamblers, house thieves, your counterfeiters, your gentleman loafers. They are not men who originally mean any harm but they believe in luck, and they trust to luck, and they are going to have it out of luck in some way. They despised meanness at first perhaps as bad as you or I do, but somebody told them of luck and they believed, and lo! they are duped. Little by little they went over to meanness, awaiting all the while for a shake of the hand from luck.

It is not luck, but pluck, which weaves the web of life. It is not luck but pluck which turns the wheel of fortune. It is pluck that amasses wealth, that crowns men with honour, that forges the luxuries of life. We use the term pluck as synonomous whole-hearted energy, genuine bravery of soul.

That man is to be pitied who is too fearful and cowardly to go out and do battle for an honest living and a competence in the great field of human exertion. He is the man of luck—bad luck. Poor fellow, he lost his luck when he lost his pluck. Good pluck is good luck. Many a man has lost his luck, but never while he had good pluck left. Men lost their luck by letting their energies eke through bad habits and unwise projects. One man loses his luck in his late morning naps, another in his late evening hours, another in the bar room, another in the ball room, one down by the river holding the boyish fishing rod, another in the woods chasing down the innocent squirrel. One loses his luck in folly, one in fashion, one in idleness and a great many in bad management. Indeed, bad management is at the bottom of nearly all bad luck. It is bad management to train up a family into bad habits—to eat out one's living and corrupt one's life.

An amicable disposition linked with an energetic desire to please those with whom we live, smooths over the rough places that are found in every household. There are different temperaments with which to contend, housekeeping cares, the demands of society, and a great many women have hard, rough work to do. To perform all these duties and at the same time keep everything running in harmony, requires patience, tact, and oft times much skill. Should the housekeeper possess what is known as a bad temper, it becomes her duty to control this passion. A refractory temper brings about more unhappiness in a household than almost anything. If we once give way to a harsh word another one is much easier to follow and almost invariably will. Get started cross in the morning and things go wrong all day. "It is the rift within the lute that makes the music mute." We should do our best to overcome any inclination to give up to the little crosses, for these count.

PEACH FRITTERS.

Mix and sife one cup of flour, one and one-half teaspoons of baking powder, one-third teaspoon of salt and two tablespoons of powdered sugar. Stir in gradually one egg well beaten and diluted with one-third cup of milk; then add four peaches which have been peeled and cut in small pieces. Drop from the spoon into deep hot fat, fry until delicately browned, drain on soft paper and serve with lemon sauce.

Lemon sauce—Boil three-quarters of a cup of sugar and one-quarter cup of water for five minutes, remove from the fire, add two teaspoons of butter bit by bit, then add the juice of half a lemon.

Red Currant Wine.

To a quart each of currant juice and sugar allow two quarts of water. Place in a cask unstopped, for three weeks, when place bung in loosely for a week longer—until all danger of fermentation is past. Then seal tight and let stand a year before using.

SAUCE

Soak one cup of shredded cocoanut one hour in one cup of milk. Peel four bananas, cut them in halves lengthwise, fry until brown in batter to which one-half teaspoon of curry powder has been added, then transfer the fruit to a heated platter. Pour the cocoanut and milk in the frying pan, bring to a quick boil, add one beaten egg, stir until thickened and pour at once over the bananas.

Frizzled Dried Beef.

One jar of dried beef. Break into small pieces, pour boiling water over it and let it stand ten minutes. Drain and heat it in one tablespoon of hot water to curl or frizzle it. Then mix in two or three beaten eggs and cook until the eggs are scrambled.

BEEF TONGUE WITH RAISINS.

Wash a fresh breef tongue, cover with boiling water and simmer gently for one hour, then remove the skin and trim off the roots. Place in a casserole with one teaspoon of butter, two cups of water and a flavoring of herbs, cover closely, cook three hours, then add one cup of raisins, and cook one hour longer. Place the tongue in a platter, surround with raisins and thicken the gravy with a spoonful of flour.

Relief From Indigestion

The Most Common Cause of This Trouble is Poor Blood

All conditions of depressed vitality tend to disturb the process of digestion. There is not a disturbed condition of life that may not affect digestion. But few causes of the trouble are so common as thin, weak blood. It affects directly and at once the process of nutrition. Not only is the action of the gastric and intestinal glands diminished but the muscular action of the stomach is weakened. Nothing will more promptly restore digestive efficiency than good, red, blood. Without it the normal activity of the stomach is impossible.

Thin, pale people who complain of indigestion must improve the condition of their blood to find relief. The most active blood builder in such cases is Dr. Williams Pink Pills. They make the rich red, blood which quickly restores the digestive organs to their proper activity, and the dyspeptic who has hated the sight and smell of food now looks forward to meal time with pleasure. As proving the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in curing indigestion Miss Edith M. Smith, R. R. No. 4, Perth, Ont., says: "I can honestly say that I owe my present good health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My stomach was terribly weak and I suffered from indigestion and sick headache, and was always very nervous. I was troubled this way for nearly three years and in that time took a great deal of doctors' medicine, which, however, did not help me. I could not eat anything without experiencing the most agonizing pains. My sick headaches were most violent and I could not rest day or night. I was asked one day by a friend to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and consented to do so. After taking them for some time I found they were helping me and I continued to take them steadily for several months, until I found that I was completely cured. While taking the pills I gained both in strength and weight, and I feel it impossible to praise Dr. Williams' Pink Pills too highly."

You can procure these pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Mrs. Able Says:

PEOPLE ask me why my tea tastes so good. First, I use freshly drawn water. When boiling briskly I pour it over the leaves, allowing the tea to steep, not boil, five minutes. Next, I pour the tea off the leaves into another pot. In that way you get the flavor of Red Rose Tea in all its fullness and richness. Try it.

Fashion's Latest Fad—the Long Flowing Veil

Draped on Small Turbans or Sailor Shapes it is Quite Irresistible

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—"I simply must have one of those new veils. I think they are so fascinating!" This, I overheard a young girl saying to her friend the other day on Fifth Avenue.

The veil she referred to was a long, flowing one draped over the top of a small high-crowned hat with a narrow turned-down brim, like the one pictured here. It was caught together in front and fastened to the top of the crown with a large, round pin, and from there it hung softly down the back. No wonder this young girl was so enthusiastic about it, for it really was the most adorable affair on the smartly-dressed young woman who wore it. The veil formed a charming cloud-like background to her pretty face and floated gently in the air as she walked. The veil was of lace and the hat was of satin.

SATIN DRESS BRAIDED WITH SOUTACHE

They are ever so many charming veils of this type nowadays and one sees dozens and dozens of them. They are made of chiffon, silk net or lace, some of them finished with borders and others without. And they come in a variety of colours to suit every complexion and every taste. Some of the prettiest ones are in lovely shades of purple, soft rose-colour, lavender, taupe, green and blue, as well as black and white. They are sometimes worn on small close-fitting turbans and again on large sailor shapes.

Hats and veils like these are worn with frocks of serge, satin or silk. The one pictured here was worn with a dress of black satin with a snug bodice fitted at the waist with soft pleats. The skirt had a full tunic pleated at the waist and made with the popular loop pockets, which were faced with purple satin to match the purple-traided design which trimmed the dress. This is one of the favored designs for autumn and it certainly is a most becoming one. The sleeve was cleverly cut to form a point below the elbow, where a silk tassel was placed.

SKIRTS ARE LONGER AND STRAIGHTER

There is a decided tendency to longer and straighter-hanging skirts in most of the autumn models. Paquin has made many dresses noticeably longer, both for street and evening wear, and many of the other Parisian couturieres have lengthened the skirts for the coming season, though not to an exaggerated degree. The skirts have not lost any of their fullness in their downward tendency. They simply follow the lines of the figure more closely and do not flare as much. The hoop skirts and crinoline effects are practically dead and some soft draperies are seen in their stead, especially in evening and afternoon dresses of satins, crepes and soft silks.

RECIPES WORTH KEEPING AT HAND

An Egg Drink.—Beat three eggs thoroughly, add six tablespoonfuls of sugar, and one and one-half cupfuls of ice water. Whip into the mixture the juice of one orange and a small amount of the grated rind. Serve it in glasses topped with whipped cream.

Grape Cordial.—To one quart of rich, unsweetened grape juice add one-quarter of a cupful each of cold water and sugar syrup, and one-half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg. Just before you serve the drink fill the glasses two-thirds full of crushed ice and pour the cordial over it.

Currant Shrub.—Heat two quarts of ripe currants, and strain the juice through cheesecloth. To every quart of juice and three-quarters of a pound of sugar, and stir the syrup until the sugar dissolves. Add the juice of one lemon, and enough cold water to dilute the syrup. When it is cold, pour it over cracked ice, and ornament each glass with a slice of lemon or a bunch of ripe currants.

Mint Sherbert.—Wash the mint thoroughly, then crush it and bruise it well, and add a pint of boiling water, let the infusion stand for twenty minutes, strain it carefully add a cupful of sugar, and let the whole boil for ten minutes. When you take it from the fire, add the juice of three oranges and a cupful of pineapple syrup. Put the liquid into a freezer, and when it is partly frozen add the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs. Freeze it again to the consistency of mush. Serve it in sherbert glasses, with shredded cocoanut sprinkled lightly on the top.

A SPLENDID WAY TO REDUCE ONE'S WEIGHT

There is, perhaps, no one thing that shows the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 25 or 30. However young our face may appear, our figures "give us away."

The cause of this over-stoutness is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce a proper combustion to destroy the fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good druggist and get oil of orilene in capsule form, and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Oil of orilene taken at meal times gives you all the benefit of the food you eat, and at the same time dissolves the fatty tissues from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00, postal note or money order. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1249 Montreal, Can.

CUSTARD PIE.

Beat 2 eggs lightly, add 3 tablespoons of sugar, 1-8 teaspoon of salt and 1 1-2 cups of milk. Line plate with paste and build up a fluted rim. Strain in the mixture and sprinkle with a few gratings of nutmeg. Bake in a quick oven at first to set rim, decrease the heat afterward, as egg and milk in combination need to be cooked at a low temperature.

"Although I Had Little Faith in Them"

That is the feeling of hundreds who have been helped by Gin Pills. They admit after the cure that when they used Gin Pills it did not seem possible that such a simple remedy could relieve such severe suffering. The case above, for instance, is from the letter of Mr. M. F. Herbert, Fleetville, recommending

Gin Pills FOR THE KIDNEYS

He says, in part, "I suffered from Kidney trouble for several years. I have tried numerous remedies and used medical prescriptions without having permanent relief, my case being chronic. I decided to try Gin Pills although I had but little faith in them. The first dose gave me relief. Since, I have taken four boxes of these pills and I find myself completely cured."

If you have lame back, swollen joints, constant headaches, urinary troubles, stone, gravel, rheumatism, remember Mr. Herbert's experience and try Gin Pills.

MUDDY, PIMPLY SKIN?

Many people with disfigured complexions never seem to think that they need an occasional cleansing inside as well as outside. Yet neglect of this internal cleanliness shows itself in spotty and sallow complexions, as well as in dreadful headaches and biliousness. HEALTHY COMPLEXION

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

HEADACHE.

HEADACHE IS A SYMPTOM, and not a disease. If you have a headache it is in most cases due to some bad habit. You eat too much, drink too much, sleep too little, strain the eyes too much, or work too continuously in bad air at some trying occupation. True there are headaches due to Bright's Disease or other organic diseases, but these are infrequent compared to those coming from causes which are remediable. Let us consider some of the common causes of headaches and see how this discomfort may be prevented.

(1) From over indulgence in beer, whiskey, or wine. The remedy is to cut them out, or so lessen the quantity to give your kidneys and skin a fair chance to eliminate the poison. If you have indulged, better get rid of the booze as quickly as possible. This may be done by a combination of two cathartic pills, a hot bath, hot cloths applied to the head, hot broth, and rest in bed.

(2) From biliousness or over indulgence in food. Nothing is better than a good dose of ordinary Epsom Salts and rest in a quiet, darkened room.

(3) Want of outdoor exercise. The city man (or woman) at a desk in a close room or the editor at work under constant strain from 5 p.m. to 1 a.m. with hurried meals is often the subject of headaches. All these people need more outdoor air and exercise. Golf, bowling or tennis, especially golf, with one-fifth the quantity of fresh meat, potatoes, and bread and the difference in fruit, vegetables and water will do more for sick people than all the headache cures in the world.

HEADACHE A SYMPTOM

(4) Eye strain, due either to defective eyesight or to trying eye work, causes lots of headaches. Headaches of this kind usually come on in the evening, (sometimes in the morning) after a trying day. They are usually in the forehead or temples. A simple way to test eye strain is for one to hang up a test-card in a well-lighted room, stand twenty feet by measure away from the card and see if you can read the line marked 20, first with each eye separately and then with both eyes, and if the letters are not clear-cut, distinct, and separate one's eyesight is faulty and glasses are required. Go to a first-class oculist and get the eyes properly fitted.

(5) Fatigue headache. Some people get headache from fatigue. These headaches develop towards the close of the day. The only cure is to avoid over-exciting oneself.

(6) Too light a breakfast. Many people, especially women, eat nothing for breakfast but tea and toast. This is insufficient to carry one along for four or five hours. After the long fast overnight one needs a good breakfast. It ought to be one of the best meals of the day. A good type of breakfast is—

Oranges or Grapefruit.
Cereals, with Milk and Cream.
Eggs; soft boiled, poached, or in omelette.
Toast and Butter.

(7) Neurasthenia headache. A headache of this character is often described as a band about the head. There may be a feeling as though the top of the head is coming off, or it may be such as to make a man feel he is going insane. The way to prevent a headache of this character is to improve the general physical condition by good food, outdoor life, relief from excessive nervous strain and worry—especially from worry.

(8) Migraine. Boys and girls from eight to fifteen years of age frequently have headaches of a particular character. The subjects of these headaches waken in the morning with a heavy loggy feeling. There may be a disturbance of the eyes, such as flashes of light first in one eye then in the other. These symptoms are succeeded by headache, nausea, and sometimes vomiting. These headaches come on periodically without any apparent cause. They are often called sick headaches. They run in families. Some women have them well into the prime of life and are in bed in a darkened room with them for a day or two every month. This form of headache is called migraine. It is often confined to one side of the head, hence the name hemicrania. The best treatment is to use hot and cold applications to the back of the neck and cold to the forehead and top of the head. If the face is pale use hot applications; if flushed use cold.

The person addicted to migraine should lead a simple outdoor life with plenty of exercise and fresh air. He should eat lightly and simply, keep the bowels regular, and avoid any excesses. By these means the tendency to headache will probably disappear.

None of the remedies proposed, as will be seen, include headache medicines, for the reason that all headache medicine which have as their basis in one of the coal-tar products are injurious. Some are positively dangerous. Numerous people have been killed by their use, and the best course is to avoid their use entirely.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S TUCKED SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

The woman who enjoys wearing the tailored style of shirt waist on easy, comfortable lines will appreciate the charm of the one in the accompanying illustration; it should meet the most exacting standard.

The cooler weather for the coming season will not preclude a continuance of the present one of the low neck, but most of the models in blouses will allow for lapping the fronts, so that the neck and shoulders may be protected when necessary. The waist pictured is on this order, with a collar square in outline and of medium breadth and depth.

There is a back yoke, and in each half of the back two tucks are made, turning toward the armhole; they give a trim effect. In each front four tucks are introduced; the sleeve is full and long, finished with a turn back cuff in color outline to match the "trim" of the collar edge. This is a blouse that will go well with a plain tailored skirt.

The pattern, No. 7919, is cut in sizes 34 to 42 inch bust. To make in size 36 will require 2¾ yards of 36 inch material and braid or banding to trim, as illustrated.

You can obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

Airmen Vital Link In Somme Success

London, September 29.—The official report from British headquarters in France to-day that the "preparation and execution of the attack by the artillery and infantry and the co-operation between them, were in all respects admirable," testifies to the British commander's recognition of the advance made toward a final solution of a long standing problem.

The British and French losses in the Somme operations, which began July 1, have been below the calculations made in advance by the General Staffs of the price that would have to be paid for a highly desirable result, which could only be obtained by a thoroughly effective use of artillery.

British official despatches have shown several instances in the past where the artillery co-operation with infantry was faulty, and French experts like Captain Pierre Mille, himself a gunner, have admitted that during the earlier stages of the war even the highly trained French artillery was unable to cope with all the difficulties presented.

"All of us," recently wrote Captain Mille, who spent the first twenty months at the front, "know that even as late as September, 1915, although we had many more heavy guns and shells, the connection between infantry and artillery proved very imperfect, and was responsible for many losses."

According to the same authority, the average casualties of the French army are fewer than half what they were last year. The whole secret consists in establishing a close and almost mathematical connection between the work done by the artillery and the movements of the attacking troops. Such a difficult problem was not easy to solve. The French authorities made no difficulty about confessing that it took them a long time to find out exactly how to proceed. It was only by hard experience that the best methods of dealing with the German barbed wire defenses and entrenchments were learned, and that two separate and distinct kinds of artillery preparation were required.

It has been worked out with mathematical precision how many shells are required per yard of wire entanglements. When it comes to the destruction of ground defensive works, experience has shown that the best way to deal with front line trenches, especially when they are not easy to observe, is to use exclusively against them an enormous number of trench mortars of all sizes. Howitzers are only used at present against the second and third lines, and all works behind the first line trenches. As it is, their task is already a sufficiently heavy one, and it is assumed that every inch of ground must be plastered with shells.

Once this work of preparation is over the great problem was to safeguard the attacking troops, as they moved forward, by a protective curtain of shells, which had to be lifted ahead in accordance with the ground gained. Here, owing to the difficulty of keeping artillery exactly informed as to the movements of infantry, the only solution which was found for a long time, was to regulate exactly beforehand the movements of the attacking troops, and lengthening the artillery range by a clockwork schedule. This left a considerable margin for mistakes and miscalculations as the advance of the infantry was not always according to the schedule.

With the aerial supremacy obtained by the Allies on the Somme front, came the best solution of the problem. Communication between the advancing infantry and the artillery is maintained by aeroplanes, Captain Mille says. Each French division is now provided with a number of so-called infantry aeroplanes whose task it is to follow closely the advancing line, not in order to fire on the enemy, but simply to report to the gunners, and let them know exactly what is going one. As soon as the infantry have reached a given point, the 75's are informed that they must lengthen their range beyond it so as not to hit their own men. Information is similarly given if the infantry happen to be held up by any unsuspected obstacle or if a German counter-attack is seen coming up from the rear.

The way in which this new device is worked on the Somme is marvellous. It is mainly due to the scientific system that the troops have been able to advance under a curtain of shells, which moved continuously ahead of them at a distance of 200 or 300 yards.

The points explain why the French losses have been reduced so materially in spite of the almost continuous offensive.

The main handicap, which the French are still contending with, arises from the fact that they have not been able to smash the deadly German long range guns. With respect to this point both the French and British headquarters bulletins have recently referred frequently to the successful work accomplished by their heavies in demolishing the German long range batteries, and the prediction is made by Captain Mille that "means whereby the last difficulty—that of making it impossible for the Germans to delay the allied advance by their curtain of fire of big guns—will be met as successfully as the other ones have been" is echoed in many quarters here.

That the allied offensive on the Somme is far from having been stopped, as the Germans asserted, and has not even reached its maximum, is believed here to be the fact. Color is apparently lent to this belief by the reports that the artillery preparation which for three days preceded the latest Franco-British advance, was the greatest the war has yet known.

DEAD AVIATOR TELLS STORY OF HIS FEATS

Flight-Lieutenant Rosher's account of his experiences as an airman ("in the Royal Air Service." Chattos and Windus, 3s. 6d.) written by himself in letters of great simplicity and sincerity to his family, breaks entirely new ground. It is for this reason one of the most remarkable books of the war has produced.

Lieutenant Rosher, in the all-too-brief years of his life—he was only 22 when he was killed last February—had proved himself of the race of heroes. He had taken part in four raids of extreme peril—against Zeebrugge, against Ostend twice, and against Antwerp. He had chased and been chased by a Zeppelin. His hair-breath escapes from death were so numerous that we lose count of them.

His letters give the first really intimate picture of an airman's life in war. As Mr. Arnold Bennett says in his introduction, in that new arm "the hour of greatest danger is precisely the hour of spiritual solitude and separation from all mankind". And here the world learns what the sensations of those grim moments are.

ZEPPELIN ENCOUNTER

His encounter with a Zeppelin was perhaps the most grisly of Lieutenant Rocher's adventures. He was alone, on his way to bomb an airship shed in Belgium, and the day was just breaking. He intended to hide from the Zeppelin and then to "catch him sitting". This was what actually happened.

"One of the (German) searchlights picked me up and anti-aircraft guns immediately opened fire on me. Then a curious thing happened. The Zeppelin sighted me, and immediately came for me. This was the tables turned on me with a vengeance and the very last thing I ever dreamed of. It was a regular nightmare. I was only 6,000 feet up and the Zepp, which was very fast, must have been 10,000 feet. Without being able to get above it I was, of course, helpless and entirely at the mercy of his Maxim guns. I don't think I have been so disconcerted for a long time. We had 'some race'. He tried to cut me off from Holland, but I get across his bows. He was a huge ,big thing, most imposing and turned rapidly with the greatest of ease. I hung around north of Ghent, climbing hard."

The Zeppelin rose to "some fabulous height," and with great difficulty Rosher made his escape.

FLAMING BULLETS.

Another expedition of desperate risk was that undertaken to bomb the submarine base at Hoboken, near Antwerp, in company with four other airmen. Rosher arrived second.

"I was only 5,500 feet up and they opened fire on me with shrapnel as soon as I got within range.

I passed over the yards at about 1,000 feet only, and loosed all my bombs over the place. The whole way down I was under fire, two anti-aircraft in the yard, rifle fire, machine guns, and most weird of all, great bunches (15 to 20) of what looked like green rockets, but I think they were flaming bullets. The excitement of the moment was terrible. I have never travelled so fast before in my life. My chief impressions were the great speed, the flaming bullets streaking by the incessant rattle of the machine gun and rifle fire, and one or two shells bursting close by, knocking my machine all sideways."

SHRAPNEL AT 8,000 FEET

In all this his machine was only hit twice. Of one of the dangerous runs to Zeebrugge he says:

"I was one of the first off (in the dark). I didn't relish it a tiny bit. Ostend was simply a mass of guns. Afted flying for three-quarters of an hour I reached Zeebrugge. I had to come down to 5,500 feet, because of the clouds. I streaked in through them, loosed my bombs, and then made off.

I don't mind owning that I have been scared stiff once or twice in the last two days. They are hitting with shrapnel at 8,000 feet. They reckon to get third shot on for a cert."

Yet he will not allow that he did anything extraordinary. "Army pilots", he says modestly, "are flying day after day for hours on end under fire." Not without reason do our infantry declare that all airmen deserve the V. C., for their lives are spent in deeds which seem beyond the power and imagination of man.

ENGINEER STEPPED IN FRONT OF TRAIN

Rochester, September 29. — That John Driscoll, a stationary engineer, employed at the Reed Glass Works, in Maple street, who was crushed to death between freight cars on the New York Central Railroad, September 18, stepped from the boiler room, directly in front of the approaching train, was an interesting piece of testimony brought out at an inquest before Coroner Thomas A. Killip.

Rocco Matalino of 797 Smith street, an employee in the plant, who stood looking from an upper window of the building, told the coroner he called to Driscoll to warn him, but that it was too late to prevent the accident. The train was moving slowly because an extra car a few feet away was to be attached. Matalino said another workman called to the brakeman and the train was stopped immediately.

The testimony of Henry W. Hoff, the brakeman, corroborated that of Matalino. The witness said that he had just coupled on a car and was walking to the rear of the train preparatory to getting the last car on before pulling out of the siding. When asked as to the care given to safety at the point where the accident occurred he said: "We try to follow the rule book as closely as possible and protect persons at these factories."

Other witnesses told of the work they were doing the night the accident and of the protection given the employees at the factory. The coroner will give his decision later.

WIRELESS WOMEN NOT A SUCCESS

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The Marconi company, after several months' experiment to determine the suitability of women as wireless operators has not found the idea altogether successful. A school for the purpose of training the women was established at 168 Strand. "Generally speaking," said Mr. Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of Marconi's, to an interviewer, we have found a good deal of difficulty in becoming suitable women to train. They were not sufficiently expert telegraphists in the first instance, and many of those who started left after about a week because they suffered too much from headaches to continue the training. It also had some effect upon their nervous system. A few pupils remain, and these are quite promising but there are not sufficient of them. Nor have they made sufficient progress to justify the school being kept open longer than the end of this month. We shall retain those that we are training and see how they prove. We could not, of course, employ women as operators at sea; only at land statins. At present we have a number of women working on long distance land lines in communication with wireless stations. We have not, however, been able to put any of them on a wireless circuit yet. The whole idea, of course, is only in the preliminary stages, but we shall do our best to obtain suitable women for the work."

Signor Marconi in an appeal in the London papers for the Italian Red Cross Society points out that Italy's soldiers fight at such altitudes and wool is now extremely scarce in Italy.

Even the conscientious minister will marry for money.

Our worries would be few if it was not for the things that never happen.

All women are consistent but the majority of them refuse to work at it.

ADVICE TO PIANOFORTE STUDENTS

(By Horace Atkinson, Windsor, Ont.)

The time has arrived for renewed activity for pianoforte students, and at this season I wish to impress upon their minds the true nature of 'slow practice'. Let this be your slogan, it does not matter whether you are just commencing the study of music or an advanced pupil. Students following out this rule will gain more actual progress in six months than one disregarding it will gain in two years. All the best teachers advocate and insist upon this method. Hurried, careless practice is the ruination of many a young student, the cause of wrong notes and disruption of tempo.

Your parents have been kind in providing you with a piano. They willingly and cheerfully bear the expense of your tuition, and in many a case I know make great sacrifice. In return show gratitude by going to your studies regularly—it pleases them and delights them when they hear of your advancemtnt. My advice is, grasp the opportunity whilst young, study slowly and methodically, remember and carefully note all your teacher explains, and when you are older it will prove a big asset all your life. Youth is the best time to learn. As you get older the brain becomes more stubborn and rebels against the slow methods; the fingers get stiff and refuse to act as you will would have them. Therefore, it becomes a harder problem to solve. There are hundreds of people who regret not having taken the opportunity of the musical tuition their parents extended to them in their youth. Do not let those regrets be yours in after life. Never let your parents drive you to practice; there is nothing more hateful to them than to act the part of taskmaster; you will go willingly if you really love music. Have your teacher instruct you the right position at the piano, the position of the arms and the fingers, for these are essential to correct playing. Take special care of the correct fingering, tempo, guard against practice by fits and starts—try to play as smoothly and connected as possible, avoid loud playing. Do not cultivate a lazy, indolent attitude. Ask your teacher if you are in doubt, get to know all you can from him, he will be glad to give you explanations. When at practice put all your heart and soul into the work, do not think about your surroundings but concentrate your mind on the one thing. Carefully study the music before you, try it over on the piano with the right hand, taking particular attention how the theme or melody is formed, observe the phrasing and the touches necessary according to the composer's ideas, in this way you are interpreting the musical language of another person who has gone through the same slow practice as you are going through. Have you ever given it a thought that when you play you are (as it were(speaking the composer's language which only musicians can interpret? All the great masters are long since gone, yet their language is conveyed to us through their works. Truly music is a beautiful language. Play the piece slowly, giving every attention to touch, tone and phrasing. Make every phrase and melody beautiful in itself. You will do so if your heart and soul is in your work. A good way is to play the piece through first with the right hand, then with the left hand, always remembering the left hand requires as much care and attention as the right hand, although a great many students do not seem to think so, and so long as they strike some notes or keep the left hand going they are all right, these have no ear for music. The left hand gets the proper attention by the thorough student. If any difficult measures present themselves practice these separately until you are able to play them as well as the easy measures. Do not imagine you are making progress by rapid playing, you will never acquire real progress only by slow, careful, analytical practice, this method in the long run will dispel all difficulties. Try to memorize your pieces by reciting aloud the notes as you play them, you can commit to memory a few measures each day by so doing.

Work in a thorough manner, concentrate your mind on the one thing, if you do you will accomplish much. Your parents give you all the facilities for your work. Go earnestly and thoroughly to it and prove to them that their trust, hope and confidence has not been betayed, and remember that "slow practice" is the only guide to your success in music.

THE DOG AND THE CLOCK.

I had a Scottish terrier (now dead) that knew the clock (writes a correspondent of the Saturday Review). When 12.30 and 1 o'clock struck she took no notice; but at a quarter past one she looked at the clock and began to lick her forepaws and feet vigorously. I often wondered if she copied me washing my hands before luncheon, or reasoned it out for herself as that which ought to precede her chief meal. At 25 minutes past one she glanced again at the clock, walked to the door, and listened for the gong at 1.30.

SUNKEN SHIPS WITH TREASURE CAN BE RAISED

Must all the millions of dollars that now lie at the bottom of the sea in the form of ships and their sunken treasure be forever lost to the world? Most of the vessels that have been sunk, whether by accident or in the course of the present war, lie in comparatively shallow waters, many of them at a depth of less than 300 feet, and the problem of their recovery does not seem entirely hopeless in the light of recent improvements in deep-sea diving and the feats accomplished by the expert divers of the U. S. navy. The matter is the subject of an article in the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, Washington. In discussing the organization of companies in the United States whose purpose is the recovery of some of the wealth now lying in the ocean's depths, the writer says:

"Certain it is that the project of recovering sunken ships, or the most valuable of the treasures that have gone down with them, is more feasible now than it was four or five years ago. Such great improvements in diving apparatus have recently been made that it is now possible for a diver to operate for a limited time even at the depth of 300 feet below the surface. These improvements are largely due to the remarkable experiments in deep-sea diving conducted under the auspices of the bureau of construction and repair of the navy department of the United States in 1914. Prior to this time the greatest depth reached by divers was 210 feet, two English officers having accomplished that feat during a series of tests carried on by the British Admiralty in 1907. For the benefit of those who do not appreciate the difficulty of diving to such depths it may be stated that at a depth of 10 feet below the surface the pressure is 4.33 pounds per square inch of surface of the body submerged. This pressure increases proportionately, and at a depth of 100 feet it has increased to 43.3 pounds, and at a depth of 300 feet to 129.9 pounds.

Can Go 305 Feet.

"Notwithstanding this tremendous pressure, the expert divers of the U.S. navy have succeeded in not only reaching a depth of 300 to 305 feet, but in remaining at that depth for from five to twenty minutes at a time, making examinations and observations in regard to a sunken vessel that made its subsequent salvage possible. This work was done in connection with the raising of the U. S. submarine F-4, which, it will be remembered, plunged to the bottom of the sea just off the harbour of Honolulu on March 25, 1915. Not only did the divers establish a new world's record for deep-sea diving upon that occasion, but the subsequent raising and recovery of the F-4 is the only instance in history where a sunken vessel was recovered from a depth of 300 feet."

The writer gives a sketch of the history of diving as a useful art from the time of Aristottle down to the present time, and after explaining a modern diving outfit and explaining in some detail the matter of the divers being subjected to two pressures, that is, the pressure of the air inside the helmet and suit and the external pressure of the water, continues:

"The necessary of having the air pressure within the diving dress compensate the external water pressure, thus subjecting the diver to pressure directly proportioned to the depth to which he descends, is the dangerous element in deep-sea diving. At a depth of 100 feet a diver must be subjected to a pressure of four atmospheres, or 40 pounds per square inch, in order to compensate the external water pressure.

Exposure to such pressure is apt to be followed by dangerous physiological effects, commonly known as "caison disease," the symptoms of which include pain in the muscles and joints, commonly called 'bends," deafness, embarrassed breathing, vomiting, faintness, etc., sometimes resulting in death. They do not appear while the pressure is being raised nor so long as it is continued, but only after it has been removed; and the view now accepted is that they are due to the rapid effervescence of the gases which are absorbed in the body fluids during exposure to pressure.

Bubbles Fatal.

Experiment has proved that when the pressure is suddenly relieved the gas is liberated in bubbles within the body, and these do the harm. Set free in the spinal cord, for instance, they may cause partial paralysis, or in the heart lead to stoppage of the circulation. It has been found, however, that if the pressure is relieved gradually the bubbles are not formed, because the gas comes out of solution slowly and is got rid of by the heart and lungs.

To prevent these effects, the withdrawal of the air pressure—in other words, the decompression—should be slow. Hence the diver's ascent must be regulated accordingly, and the deeper he has been the slower and longer must be the periods of decompression.

It was particularly in regard to this matter of decompression that the experiments of the U.S. navy department in 1914 led to improved methods enabling the divers to descend to 300 feet below the surface. Being able to safely observe and direct the work of rescue at such a depth, and with modern lifting apparatus, who can say that the recovery of ancient treasures of sunken Spanish galleons, of hundreds of more recent wrecks of merchant vessels, and finally of many of the magnificent war vessels that have been sent to the bottom during the present war, is an idle dream?

AUSTRIANS TEACH CAPTIVES ENGLISH

MAUTHAUSEN, Austria.—From a picturesque, though little known, village on the upper Danube, Mauthausen has become the 'clearing house' in Austria for Italian prisoners of war. Its peace-time population of a few hundred persons has grown to the size of a small city, and each month there pass through it, with a few weeks' stop for quarantine purposes, several thousand Italian soldiers and several hundred Italian officers.

There were only some 8,000 or 10,000 Italian soldiers interned in the "city" when the correspondent arrived to pay the camp a visit. Two days earlier there had been 25,000 but the greater part of them had been sent out along their way—to permanent camps in eastern Austria and Hungary.

Daily there arrive at Mauthausen some 8,000 bulky parcels or 'love gifts' from relatives and friends in Italy. The banking and bookkeeping department of the camp has to maintain a ledger with something over 11,000 running bank account, the total of which far exceeds a million crowns. Each prisoner, wherever he may be, is permitted to possess 10 crowns a week for canteen spending money. All that he receives from home over that goes into his account. The actual handling of cash devolves upon Austrian officers; the bookkeeping is done by Italian prisoners of war, who are thus in a position to know that the funds of their compatriots are honestly and accurately administered.

So long as he stays in Mauthausen which may be for a year if his conduct is good, the Italian soldier has the privileges of a school in which illiterates are taught to read and write and in which the better educated may take courses in German, in English and in other useful subjects. If so inclined he may take up painting and wood carving and sculpture.

The hospital section of the camp is one of the best in Austria in cleanliness and equipment. It is the Colonel's boast that there never has been an epidemic of any character, that only such diseases as were brought by the men have ever been encountered and that there have been a large number of cures. Deaths occur regularly, as in any large community, but now the cause is chiefly tuberculosis or old standing among the prisoners.

The English classes are conducted by Tony Tenore, who told the correspondent that a brother in New York (Frank Tenore of 300 Bridge street, Brooklyn,) believed him to be dead because he had had no opportunity to communicate with him. The Italian, who said he had lived two years in America, begged to be remembered to the brother.

One of the chief aims of the authorities is to give the men as much opportunity to work as possible, and on the whole they find them tractable and willing. If the men do nothing they receive six cents a day if privates, twelve cents if corporals or sergeants, and eighteen cents if higher non-commissioned officers. If they go out to work on farms or in quarries or roads they get a settled sum in addition.

Their food, so far as the correspondent could judge from an examination of a week's bill of fare, appears to be ample though somewhat monotonous. They have two meatless days a week, as the rest of Austria does, a fatless day, and the other restrictions. But the authorities find it hard to compel Italian tastes to accustom themselves to Austrian food.

Though the men are inclined to be moody at times, in keeping with their temperament, none of them seem to have lost spirit so far as the war is concerned. The Colonels laughed as they told of the marked change in the camp when the prisoners read of the beginning of the general offensive against the Central Powers. And in the course of the walk through the huge camp the correspondent spoke with no single soldier who did not express a firm belief in the eventual victory of his side.

Bob:—"I'm feeling fine. How are you Jim?"

Jim:—"I got the shock of my life last night."

Bob:—"How's that, anything serious happened?"

Jim:—"You know Bob, I've been considering insurance for some time. Promised Jones a policy over two years ago. I finally consented to be examined yesterday. Doctor refused to pass me, said I had paid too much attention to business and was on the verge of a breakdown. It has somewhat broken me up as my business affairs are rather complicated and I don't know how the wife and family could manage in the event of anything happening to me."

Bob:—"Guess I better let Jones write my application for $5000 to-day Jim."

Things Worth Knowing.

When you put your white summer clothes away for the winter, put an extra amount of bluing in the last water. In the spring, wash again, and they will be beautifully white.

Wash the soles of your new shoes; dry perfectly in the sun, and then treat to a coat of dark oak varnish. Dry again and give a second coat. They will outlast the uppers, and the only cost is 10 cents for a small can of varnish.

In sewing snaps on garments, sew the ball snap on the upper piece, and thus eliminate the round mark on the goods which is always left by the socket snap.

Did you ever try keeping shears in the kitchen? They are indispensable once you get used to them, trimming meat, cutting up fowl or fish, shredding lettuce or peppers, etc. Of course, wash carefully in hot water same as any utensil.

ESCAPES JAIL AND IS KILLED

SAY ACCUSED MAN IS RELATIVE OF ONE OF THREE GIRLS BROUGHT FROM ITALY.

Rochester, September 29. — If Rocco Scalzo of St. Paul street, had not escaped from Sing Sing prison on June 28, 1915, he probably would be alive to-day. Chief Joseph M. Quigley is in receipt of a communication from Ralph C. Vincent, chief constable, Sault Ste. Marie, Canada, notifying the Rochester police of the killing of Scalzo by Charles Bagnato, alias Pasquale Bagnato, 27, of Italy. The killing took place at the Soo on August 29th, and a reward is offered by the Canadian police for the arrest of Bagnato.

Chief Quigley and Captain William H. Whaley of the detective bureau, say the killing of Scalzo was the result of an oath of vengeance taken by Bagnato, a relative of one of the three girls imported by Scalzo from Italy to the United States five years ago. The arrest of Scalzo on a charge of white slavery in Rochester created a country-wide sensation in the early part of 1912, and it was proven by the local police that Scalzo enticed three girls from their homes in Italy to come to Rochester. The three girls were of exceptional beauty, still in their 'teens,' and Scalzo was arrested March 10, 1912. He was sentenced to a term of not less than six years four months to ten years, at Sing Sing, and he escaped June 28, 1915, by jumping into the Hudson River and swimming to the west shore o the stream.

PRISON SAVED HIM.

Captain Whaley later informed the Sing Sing officials that Scalzo was in Toronto, but the latter fled to the Manitoba Northwest before the prison guards arrived in Toronto. It was known at the time of Scalzo's trial for importing the girls that their relatives swore vengeance. The long imprisonment meted out to Scalzo frustrated plans for revenge, but when Scalzo made the escape from Sing Sing his fate was sealed.

By some method the girl's avengers ascertained Scalzo's whereabouts and he was shadowed from place to place, the police say, not for the purpose of accomplishing his rearrest but to enforce the "unwritten law." The alleged murderer, Bagnato, is thoroughly familiar with the celebrated Camorra system of tracing victims, and the killing of Scalzo took place at Sault Ste. Marie les than a month ago.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S.

German Privates Are Well Fed

A correspondent for a United States newspaper writes from London: At Leigh in the County of Lancashire, I unexpectedly came upon an internment camp for German privates and, showing my papers, I had no difficulty in getting permission to visit it. Leigh, although called a camp, has no likeness whatever to the tented field. The "camp" I found is really a weaving mill, which had been finished but not yet used when the war broke out, and which was then taken over by the government. A few slight alterations have made it into a very comfortable, airy barrack for two thousand prisoners of war. That was the number of men which I found there, and as they all were taken in the early stages of the war they were almost all men of splendid physique. A very well nourished crowd they looked, and those whom I asked what they thought of the food they received all declared it excellent and plentiful, though of course rather monotonous. They declared that they got more meat than they ever had been used to before and certainly more than they got in the German army, where the ration is about three-eighths of a pound per man. The prisoners came from all parts of Germany, and there were many Bradenburgers among them.

The commander of the camp, Col. Blagrove, told me discipline is very easily maintained, and that at a matter of fact the prisoners themselves looked after that. "From the very first," he said, "I have encouraged the sense of responsibility and authority in their non-commissioned officers, who are really a splendid lot of men.

GAMES AND EDUCATION

"I have allowed the 'feldwebels' (senior non-commissioned officers) certain small privileges, and they more than make up for this by keeping things running smoothly. The prisoners have their own educational committees, and many of the men have taken up the study of English. Others, less ambitious, work at wood carving or play cricket, a game of which they knew little or nothing before they came here. The men have also organised a fine band and we have two theatres where performances are given three times a week.

Nearly all the men were in the habit of receiving remittances from home, generally in small weekly sums but many of them have now written to their families that they get everything they want. And that it is absolutely unnecessary to send them anything. Food parcels have become a thing of the past entirely.

SEPTEMBER DAYS.

Old Father Hubbard went to the cupboard
To get him a bottle of beer.
But when he got there the cupboard was bare,
Alas! Prohibition was here.

He went to the tavern to purchase some ale,
But when he got there the place was for sale.

He went to the shop for a bottle of gin,
But when he go there he couldn't get in.

He ordered some whiskey — for use scientific!
They sent him wood spirits: the smell was terrific!

He went to a Vet to prescribe for a calf;
Some brandy would do — say a pint and a half.

He found on returning the Vet played him false;
The bottle contained only water and salts.

He went to a doctor for rum for a boil,
But Doc prescribed sulphur and sweet castor oil.

He went to a druggist with a prescription,
So couldn't get liquor of any description.

He sought a blind pig as his only resort;
But when it was raided he landed in court.

He went to the farm out at Guelph for a rest;
He thought when released, prohibition was best.
He's glad to be freed from King Alcohol's power;
So now he goes thirsty or drinks lemon sour.

MEAT CAUSE OF KIDNEY TROUBLE

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers

If you must have your meat every day, eat it, but flush your kidneys with salts occasionally, says a noted authority who tells us that meat forms uric acid which almost paralyzes the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken, then you suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids to cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys also to neutralize the acids in urine, so it no longer irritates, thus ending bladder weakness.

FINDS ALL GERMANY ANXIOUS FOR PEACE

New York, Sept. 28.—S. M. Bier a naturalized American citizen of German birth, has just returned to this country after a visit in Germany, which began before the outbreak of the European war. He has had a chance to watch the German people from the very beginning of the hostilities, and says they would now like to see peace. He says that in conversation with men of all ranks he found the opinion the same, that although they were confident of winning they knew that the struggle would be a hard one, and would be glad to see it concluded.

"The educated classes," he said, "want things to remain as they are and fulfill the desires of President Wilson on the submarine issue, because they want America as their friend—their intimate friend. The landed proprietor class is the one that is behind the agitation to have the submarine war pushed to its bitter limit, because they think that Germany can thus win the war. Among the important industrial people—and they always represent the best sentiment of any country, since for them the world is all one big family—there is the desire to keep the submarine war where it now stands.

"Bethmann-Holweg fought the extremists and I am sure that he would prefer to resign rather than give in to them. He is very popular. The people believe that he is honest, and they love him. They have been sorry for one thing, and that is, to have seen him during the war dressed in a general's uniform. It does not fit the popular idea of him, and I believe he never had much to do with the army before the war began."

String beans fried with small pieces of bacon or salt pork are extra good. Boil first, and then brown slowly with the pork.

CATTLE MARKETS

A slightly easier tone the first of the week, resulting in a decline of about 25c from the average of the previous week's price on choice heavy steers and medium butcher cattle, was followed by a steadier tone and gradual firming up of cattle prices for the rest of the week. This applies to the better grades of butcher cattle in particular, the medium and common qualities more slowly recovering their former standing.

Offerings of real choice lots of butcher cattle were very scarce the latter part of the week, and prices in this class were more easily maintained, through trade at no time during the week could be said to be really active and brisk.

The stocker trade was comparatively quieter than the week before, and prices for light eastern stockers were easier. Good quality feeders, with breed in them, and 900 to 1,000 lbs. in weight, were steady at last week's prices.

Choice quality milch cows, and springers were in fairly good demand.

Canners and cutters in good demand at steady prices all week.

Sheep and lambs inclining to easier prices.

Hogs show a decline of 50 to 75 cents from the previous week, but market was irregular, and steadied for the closing market.

CATTLE RECEIPTS.

Union Stock Yards—Total receipts this week, 614 cars, with 7,473 cattle, 870 calves, 14,425 hogs, 5,842 sheep and lambs and 720 horses.

City Cattle Market—80 cars, with 1,043 cattle, 2,088 sheep and lambs, 741 hogs, 48 calves and 115 horses.

TURK GRAND VISIER MISSING FOR YEAR

NO MENTION OF HALIM PASHA IN DESPATCHES FROM CONSTANTINOPLE.

London, Sept 29—The noiseless disappearance from the stage of the Archduke Frederick, the Generalissimo of the Austro-Hungarian army, is but a small thing in comparison with the stranger disappearance of another high personage—the Turkish Grand Vizier.

Nothing has been heard in England or in any other country, of Said Halim Pasha for the past twelve months. Nobody has even seen his name mentioned in the papers in Germany since Bulgaria's intervention in the war. Even when the German parliamentary deputation visited Constantinople some months ago no mention was made in the German press reports of the Grand Vizier. The deputation was received on behalf of the government by the foreign minister and it was he who presided and spoke at the chief banquet.

If said Halim Pasha had been ill, physically or diplomatically, the fact at one time or another—and certainly in connection with the Germans' visit would have been mentioned in the German press. If he had been dismissed the fact, too, would have been recorded, and a successor would have been appointed to take over the seals of the office. It is possible that he has been assassinated or spirited away to some secluded spot for his pro-entente views? This surmise has been uttered by some who know the ways of the present dictators of Turkey.

There is a rumour to the effect that Said Halim Pasha has simply fled from Constantinople, and is hiding abroad, and that certain of his old French friends know it.

To Regain a Healthy, Girlish Complexion

If you would have a clear, fresh, girlish complexion, one ounce of ordinary mercolised wax will add you in this direction more than shelves full of cosmetics. It produces a natural beauty. This wax, procurable at any druggstore, completely absorbs a bad complexion, receding the healthy young skin underneath. Its work is done so gradually, day by day, that no inconvenience is caused. The wax is applied at night, like cold cream, and removed in the morning with soap and water.

Another valuable rejuvenating treatment—this for wrinkles—is to bathe your face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in 1/2 pt. witch hazel. This has a remarkable action in smoothing out the lines and "firming up" the face tissue.

GOT WHAT HE WANTED—A private in a Scottish regiment was supposed to be a bit balmy. When he saw an officer crossing the square he would sit out of the window with a stick, a piece of string and a bent pin, and pretend to be fishing. This was an everyday occurrence, and he was recommended for his discharge as being mentally deficient. When he was leaving the barracks after being discharged the sergeant of the guard said to him. "Are you not fishing to-day. The man put his hand into his pocket and pulled out his discharge papers and said, "No; there's no need. I've got what I was fishing for."

Afraid He Would Lose His Money—Sandy McTavish was a highly skilled workman in a new aircraft factory. Therefore it happened one day that Sandy was asked if he would care to accompany the works aviator on one of his trial flights on a new machine. Sandy, after some hesitation, agreed to do so. During the flight the aviator Asked Sandy how he was enjoying it. "To tell ye the truth," answered the Scot, "I wad rather be on the grun'". "Tut, tut," replied the flying man, "I'm just thinking of looping the loop." "For Heaven's sake don't dae that," yelled the now very very nervous M'Tavish. "I've some siller in my vest pocket, an' A micht lost it."

"Do you think you will ever own a car?" "Why not? The controlling circumstances are bound to meet." "What do you mean?" "Autos keep coming down and I keep saving up." —Louisville Courier-Journal.

Summer Complaint Was So Bad He Could Not Work

DR. FOWLER'S Extract of Wild Strawberry Cured Him

Mr. Stephen H. Shaw, Fairmount, Sask., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and must say it is a fine medicine for Summer complaint. We have so much alkali water here in the west that last harvest time I had summer complaint, and became so weak I could not work. I was advised to try "Dr. Fowler's," so got a bottle, and in a few days I was as well as ever."

THE BRITISH IMPROVE POSITIONS AND BEAT OFF COUNTER ATTACKS

British Forces Are Heavily Shelled But Hold Their Own At All Points--French Make Further Progress North of Rancourt But But Elsewhere Were Held Up by Bad Weather Conditions---Shell Wrecked Trenches Converted Into Great Pool of Mud and Water.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, Sept. 30.—British troops improved their positions at Stuff redoubt, north of Thiepval, and beat off German counter attacks at the Hessian trench last night, General Haig reported this afternoon. Fighting at the latter place was very severe, despite a heavy downpour of rain that converted the shell wrecked trenches into great pools of mud and water, in which Germans and British fought. The Germans shelled the British positions south of Ancre from Destremont Farm to a point south-west of Leears Village, toward which General Haig's men are approaching. Despite this artillery attack, the British continue to improve their positions on the whole Thiepval sector. The French, to-day's official Paris report showed, made further progress north of Rancourt last night, but elsewhere were held up by weather conditions. South of Neuvillest Vaast the British made a successful raid last night.

FRENCH GAIN TO NORTH OF RANCOURT

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, Sept. 30.—(French Official).—The French gained some ground north of Rancourt last night. Rain storms continue to hinder operations on the rest of the Somme front, it was officially announced to-day. A French aviator winged two enemy planes in thirty seconds.

Allies Have Taken 62,000 Prisoners

Special to Examiner:

GRAND HEADQUARTERS OF THE FRENCH ARMIES, Sept. 30.—In the first thirteen weeks of the Somme offensive, the French and British have captured more ground than has been taken by the Germans in more than six months of battling at Verdun. A survey of the results of the great Allied drive, halted temporarily yesterday by a terrific downpour of rain, shows that the Allies have reconquered two hundred and eighty-five square kilometres of French territory (about ninety-two square miles), exceeding by fifteen kilometres the territory gained by the Germans at Verdun. Forty-five villages, each one organized into a veritable fortress by the Teutons, have fallen before the battering of the French and British artillery. In every instance the German position was so strong that it had to be broken down by shell fire before the infantry could storm it... A total of sixty-two thousand prisoners, two hundred and eighty-five cannon, half of which are heavy artillery pieces, and more than one thousand machine guns have been taken everywhere. From the Ancre to a point near Chaulnes the German first, second and third lines are completely in the hands of the Allies, who this week were rushing through hastily constructed German trenches for great gains when bad weather halted operations.

307,169 CASUALTIES IN THREE MONTHS

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Sept. 30.—On all fronts the British have lost 307,169 in killed, wounded and missing in three months, including 17,234 officers. This includes the period of the great Somme offensive, and the major part of losses were sustained there. The casualties averaged 1,925 per day in July, 4,127 in August, and 3,985 in September.

MR. ROBERT ALLEN SEES MANY CHANGES IN PETERBOROUGH

Former Resident of Douro Returns Home on a Visit After an Absence of Six Years—Mr. Allen and the Cold Wave Arrived Here Together

NOTES MANY CHANGES

"A cold winter's day" was the way Mr. Robert Allen characterized the weather this morning. Mr. Allen is back in Peterborough after an absence of six years spent in Vancouver, so that his observation on the weather was more by way of comparison with climatic conditions as they exist on the Pacific Coast. "This is about as cold a day as we ever have," said Mr. Allen. "The weather is not so extreme on the Pacific Coast, due to the tempering breezes that wing their way over the Pacific Ocean, and are eventually sharpened to a point of intensity by their passage over the ice-clad tops of the Rocky Mountains. As Vancouver is fortunate enough to be situated on the Pacific side of the 'Canadian Alps,' the residents there are favoured with a more uniform temperature. In another week or so the rainly season will set in and the Pacific Coast substitute for the genuine Canadian winter will have become a material and evident fact."

Changes in Peterborough.

It is about six years since Mr. Allen left the township of Douro, and this is the first visit that he has made to his home town in that length of time. He arrived in the city this morning, and will remain here for about a month. Mr. Allen was struck with the number of changes that have taken place in Peterborough since he left six years ago. The changes include paved streets, magnetite arc lighting system on the streets, and a substantial industrial expansion.

"Labour is very scarce in Vancouver," said Mr. Allen. Speaking of the crop situation, Mr. Allen said that the grain and vegetable crops were very good this year. There was a very good potato crop, also a fruit crop.

DON'T CRIPPLE YOUR EYES.

If fifty per cent. of all the people in this city had infantile paralysis we would hold up our hands in horror, but only fifty per cent. of the people who need glasses wear them. Fifty per cent. are being cruel to their eyes. Which side of the fence are you on? See Dr. Lacey and see better 410 George Street.

GOLDEN OPPORTUNITIES

Since the war broke out there has never such an opportunity for quick promotion in the Canadian Expeditionary Force as is offered now by the new Peterborough Battalion—the 247th. Practically all the trained non-commissioned officers in Canada have gone to the front. There is urgent need of non-coms and instructors and a splendid field is open to any bright ambitious young man who dons the khaki at the present time. In addition to this advantage there is the chance to put through nearly all the preliminary training at home. Any of the officers of the new battalion will be glad to give all the necessary information.

Two More Local Soldiers Appear On Casualty List

Lance-Corp. Walter S. Dawson of the 39th and Pte. Jos. Faux of the 59th Are Wounded---Lieuts. L. J. Stuart and N. C. Hatton of the 93rd Have Gone to the Front ---To-day's General Military News.

PTE. JOS. FAUX WOUNDED.

Pte. Joseph Faux, an old member of the 57th Regiment, and a son of Mr. Henry Faux, Rogers street, East City, has been wounded in the recent fighting. Pte. Faux enlisted in Belleville and went overseas with the 59th Battalion, being afterwards drafted to another Canadian battalion at the front. The official message states that he has been admitted to the New Zealand Hospital at Amiens. Pte. Faux left a wife and five children to don the khaki. His many friends will wish him a speedy recovery.

LANCE CORP. DAWSON.

Another of the gallant band of Peterborough boys who went overseas with the 57th Contingent to the 39th Battalion, has been wounded. The casualty lists issued at Ottawa last night, contained the name of Lance-Corp. Walter S. Dawson, of 30 Lafayette Avenue. Lance Corp. Dawson entisted here on Jan. 9th, 1915, and went to England with the 39th, afterwards going to the front with a draft. He is twenty-four years of age and unmarried. Lance Corp. Dawson's relatives live in England, but he has many friends here who will be sorry to hear that he has been wounded.

The Kingston Whig says: The men of the three battalions at Barriefield Camp will before sailing time have an opportunity of spending a few days with their friends. Four days' leave will be granted to every man whose conduct warrants this trust.

One of the best systems ever tried out by any battalion for the granting of this last leave was used successfully by the 93rd of Peterborough while at Barriefield.

Lieut.-Col. Johnston decided that the battalion practically as a unit should go on four days' leave and for that length of time the camp was almost cleaned out of men. Only two men did not turn up after the four days' leave.

The officers commanding battalions at the camp expect an even better result. They are now planning the best scheme to allow the boys to go home.

A cable from England last night announced that two Peterborough officers have crossed to France. They are Lieut. L. J. Stuart and Lieut. N. C. Hatton, two of the best known officers with the battalion.

Major Campbell, the chief recruiting officer for No. 3 District, will pay a visit to Peterborough next week to go into the recruiting situation here.

Several of the Peterborough boys in the Cobourg Heavy Battery draft are home on final leave before going overseas.

OTTAWA, Sept. 30—The new regulations for the discouragement of desertions from the expeditionary force provide a two-year imprisonment for any soldier who absents himself with out leave, and any justice, police or stipendary magistrate is given jurisdiction to try a deserter. The production of a service roll or attestation paper shall be evident of enlistment and a written statement from the officer commanding a military district shall be evidence of absence without leave.

SERGT. M'CREA AT THE Y. M. C. A.

An Enjoyable Meeting for Men To-morrow Afternoon

Every man is cordially invited to attend a men's meeting at the Y.M.C.A. to-morrow afternoon at 4.15 o'clock. Speaker, Sergeant McCrea, of the Base Hospital, Toronto. Subject: "Ideals of Empire." Mr. McCrea has appeared in Peterborough previously with the late Pauline Johnson, and gave much pleasure to those who listened to his rendering of Dr. Drummond's habitant poems. We hope every man and boy will improve the opportunity of hearing Mr. McCrea on Sunday.

Forty Horses Shipped Yesterday

Messrs. Green and Cruickshanks, yesterday, shipped forty horses. These animals will eventually find their way to some one of the Allies remount depots and will play a prominent part in the prosecution of the war. Messrs. Green and Cruickshanks are still in need of good horses and are in a position to give the best market prices. Their yards are at the east end of London street, where a corral has been erected for the accommodation of the horses as they come in.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

Rev T. H. Mitchell Will Speak on "The Four Great Theories of Conduct"

The annual Institute of the teachers of the city and county will be held, this year, on Thursday and Friday, October 5th and 6th. The evening session will be held on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock, in the Assembly Room of the Collegiate Institute.

There will be a short introductory musical programme, and an address will be delivered by the Rev. T. H. Mitchell, M.A., B.D., of St. Andrew's Church. The subject of Mr. Mitchell's address is "The Four Great Theories of Conduct."

The evening session is free to all and it is hoped that many of our citizens will avail themselves of the opportunity to hear the address.

Promotion Exercises At George Street

The promotion exercises of the Sunday School of the George Street Methodist Church will be held in the Sunday School room to-morrow afternoon, commencing at 2.45 o'clock. In the evening the Pastor will preach on the subject of "Money, its use, and how to get it." At the present time, money is an all absorbing question, not so much to those who are doing their bit at the front, as to those who are staying at home and getting their bit.

GREECE HAGGLING OVER TERMS NOW

In the Meantime the Revolution is Spreading By Leaps and Bounds —Crew of Greek Battleship Have Deserted.

POPULAR DEMONSTRATIONS

ATHENS, Sept. 29.—Great popular demonstrations were held to-day at Mitylene and Chios, at which the population of the islands signified their adherence to the national defence movement. Another Greek torpedo boat to-day went over to the allied fleet, this being the fourth vessel of the Greek to secede.

LONDON, Sept. 29.—Greece to-night is reported haggling with the Entente over territorial terms before taking the final action which will bring her into the war against the Central Powers.

This information is contained in a despatch from Rome, which quotes the well-informed newspaper Messagero. It is stated that Greece has asked the Allies if they are still disposed to make all the concessions promised for Greece's co-operation at the time of the Saloniki incident. Greece some time ago announced the annexation of northern Epirus, being at that time in close touch with Germany. This section, which is in southern Albania, also is believed to be desired by Italy, and for that reason Greece apparently is determined to know just where she stands before committing herself. The allies hold the upper hand in the situation, however, and with Constantine face to face with war or revolution his action, it is believed, cannot be long delayed.

No word has yet been received of the action taken at the Crown Council to-day, at which the ultimatum to Bulgaria was to be completed. Despatches are anxiously awaited here.

Uprising Spreads Rapidly.

Meanwhile the revolution is spreading by leaps and bounds. Not only has the Greek warship Hydra been seized by the rebels and brought to join the allied fleet in Salamis Bay, but the Kilkis, formerly the United States battleship, Idaho, is reported to have deserted. The Greek Ministry of Marine denies this, but the report persists in Athens, where all is excitement.

The Hydra was practically stolen by the revolutionists, though with the consent of the commander, an enthusiastic Venizelist. At an early hour in the morning silent men put out in a rowboat to where the Hydra was anchored under the guns of the Piraeus arsenal, and climbing on board threatened the officer of the deck and the watch officer with death if they made a sound. All the ship's officers not in sympathy with the revolution were put overboard into small boats, and two tugs, which had been ordered to come at a given hour, hooked onto the big warship, and silently drew her out of the harbour. Arriving in Salamis Bay she was turned over, amid cheers, to the allies.

LIVERPOOL IRISH HAVE RUSHED TO EMPIRE'S DEFENCE

No Irishman in That City Who Is Not a Staunch Supporter of Allies —They Fail to Understand Any Irishman Who Takes Any Other View

THE IRISH PARTY

by T. P. O'Connor

London, September 30. — One of the paradoxes of the Irish attitude toward war, was brought home forcibly to me by a visit I paid the past week-end to my constituents in Liverpool.

Irish Nationalists have put down that week-end as one of the most memorable in the history of Irishmen in that city, where they form nearly one-third of the entire population and have in the municipal council and all public bodies regularly constituted Irish parties.

All Liverpool Irish have rushed to the allied flag, perhaps more numerously and promptly than any other city in the Empire. They form special battalions in Lancashires and the Liverpool regiment of that battalion has fought splendidly in several engagements and lost heavily.

Last Sunday they held a memorial service in the chief Catholic Chapel. Lord Mayor A. Stout, Protestant himself, in a Protestant city, walked in full state, and attended the service, while municipal councillors, all creeds, Anglican, Noncomforist and Jewish, attended the service and listened to a stirring address by Father Bernard Vaughan.

VISITED THE SCHOOLS

I visited the Catholic schools next day and nearly every child had a father, a brother or an uncle in the army. A third had lost relatives in the war.

On Monday night a big hall was crowded to excess with an audience gathered to raise funds for the Irish soldiers, including those imprisoned in Germany.

Throughout my whole visit and at all functions, I did meet with one Irishman who was not a staunch and vehement supporter of the Allies, and declared they were incapable of understanding why any Irishman could take any other view. They would not have sent their children to fight and die by the thousands if this feeling had not been universal.

In Ireland, one has to recognize that my opinion is from this unanimity.

A SOLID STRUCTURE.

It is many years since I first wrote the sentence that there were no things more alike in the world than the French Republic and the Irish party. Speaking, of course, in pre-war times. I used to point out that the French Republic apparently was one of the most solid structures in the world. It had at its back all the sane people of France. It went through its change of President like clock-work; anything approaching to a serious insurrection seemed to be impossible. It has produced a union of all classes, such as was unknown in the century that succeeded the downfall of the Bourbons. Apparently it was founded on impregnable rock. But as I used to point out all this superficial strength and stability were subject to very great exceptions. French character and French history remain in the same position of uncertainty which made de Tocqueville declare that France would sometimes attract, and France would sometimes repel, but France would always interest the world. It is a land of surprises and uncertainties. The result was that any close student of France would never be surprised if apparently a very small incident produced something like a political upheaval. The incident might be one of even a comparatively trivial and

THE UNITED STATES AND THE WORLD.

President Wilson, as a candidate, is showing more courage than he has done as President of the United States. He is now declaring that he doesn't want any pro-German votes. This is all the more remarkable when we recollect that he is the first candidate that has no use for votes. It is a complete change of base, in regard to his attitude towards Germany on the part of President Wilson. For the past two years he has taken great pains to conciliate German sentiment, or, at least, refrained from antagonising it. He has, through his course of policy, permitted his country to be insulted, allowed the flag of the nation to become powerless to protect the lives of United States citizens, doing no more than proffer polite remonstrance against barbaric outrage. He has been "strictly neutral" till now, when he "takes sides"—virtually declares that the German people are so utterly bad that he does not want, even their votes, something that he never, as now, needed so bad in his life, if he hopes to be re-elected. If Mr. Wilson rejects German votes, on principle, he has come to a high level of sentiment. If he rejects them from the knowledge that he won't get them anyway, the grapes have become very sour. It has generally been felt that in his vacilatory course and attitude towards German outrage, aggression and insult, he has not expressed what was in the heart of the great mass of the right-thinking and serious-minded people of the United States. The mass of the people recognize that in fighting their battles, the allied nations are fighting their battles, too. The United States is full of politics now. The people are at a periodical crisis, when the fate of the nation for four years is in the balance. Although swayed by party feeling the best elements of the people have, at heart, resolved that their heart must find expression in the Presidential contest. They recognize that national honour must be vindicated, and the interests of the country and its people, interested, as the whole world of humanity is, in the outcome of the sanguine issue between right and wrong, must be defended. World good and world evil demand that their sympathy and their wishes go to the cause of the Allies—in effect, their own cause, whose triumph is worth, in default of material and organized aid, at least, moral help. The United States can't get away from the world they are a great part of, and they must play a part worthy of the great people they are.

GENIUS AND PROPHECY.

Genius is prophetic. Germany in evil intent, knew this great war was coming, and few besides, except with foreboding and fearful looking out inspired by partial knowledge of Germany's aims but many great minds have forecast or foreshadowed many o fthe events of this great struggle in a way that proves that genius is prophetic, has the oracular spirit. Not only in regard to the incidents and accompaniments of the war, but in other ways, has been shown the prophetic spirit of genius.

One of the most striking instances, and interesting to ourselves, is furnished by a great Canadian, Hon. Joseph Howe, of Nova Scotia, not only the greatest statesman his province, fruitful in great minds, has produced, but one of the greatest of Canadian statesmen. He was for a long time premier of the province. When he entered public life, over seventy-five years ago, though railways were only in their beginning, Howe with prophetic vision saw their influence upon national development. He warmly advocated them and when, in the early fifties he was premier he was the chief promoter of a maritime province line, the nucleus of the Intercolonial railway of to-day. In support of this enterprise he made a speech on May 15th, 1850, at Halifax, and in its course made this remarkable prophetic utterance:

> 'I believe that many in this room will live to hear the whistle of the steam engine in the passes of the Rocky Mountains, and to make the journey from Halifax to the Pacific in five or six days!"

This speech was made, this prophecy uttered, in 1851, twenty years before a transcontinental railway was thought of by others. In 1871, after the lapse of twenty years, in the fourth year of Confederation, the condition of British Columbia's entering was the building in ten years of a railway to cross Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This staggered united Canada, seeming to be a vast, and perhaps impossible, undertaking. Surely we can credit with prophetic vision, "Joe Howe," who twenty years before saw not only its possibility, but its accomplishment.

A quarter century earlier there arose another prophet, Tennyson, the poet seer of England. In his Locksley Hall is found a striking prevision of aerial navigation, made in our day so actual and insistent, that it creates no wonder — only "overcomes us as a summer's cloud." The third couplet of the following is especially being fulfilled in our sight to-day:

> For I dipt into the future far as human eye could see,
>
> Saw the Vision of the world and all the wonders that would be,
>
> Saw the Heavens fill with commerce; argosies of magic sail,
>
> Pilots of the purple twilight, dropping down their costly bales.
>
> Heard the heavens fill with shouting, and there rained a ghastly dew,
>

But he did not stop there. He not only foresaw and foresang what we see has come to pass, but he foresaw what we believe from our hearts will come, as golden fruit of the triumph of right and justice and freedom in this ghastly war:

> Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm
>
> With the standards of the people plunging thro' the thunder storm
>
> Till the war drums throbbed no longer and the battle flags were furled
>

More than a century and a half ago, Rev. John Wesley, a clergyman of the Church of England one of the greatest reformers of its history, and the divine instrument in the founding of one of the greatest religious societies of the world to-day, knew the Germans, read their character and issued a warning that looks as if it were meant to be effective to-day. The Church Times, one of the most serious and solid of church papers, says that "at the present time it is interesting to recall the reasons which decided Wesley against throwing in his lot with Count Zinzendorf and his German co-religionists. Writing in 1750, Wesley says:

> "I do not admire their close, dark, reserved behaviour, particularly towards strangers. The spirit of secrecy is the spirit of their community, often leading them into guile and dissimulation. One may observe in them much cunning, much art, much evasion and disguise. They often appear to be what they are not, and not to be what they are. They so study to become all things to all men as to take the colour and shape of any that are near them; directly contrary to openness, frankness, and plainness of speech. The leopard has not changed his spots.

Verily the leopard has not changed his spots, and the prophetic warning of Wesley against German treachery of character and action, has not lost its force.

In 1814, when there were peace pour-parlers at Chatillon, fruitless and ill-timed because Napoleon was still at large and his wings unclipped, another English poet laureate, a hundred years ago, in his famous ode against "peace at this momentous time," denounces Napoleon and the following stanza, with "France" changed to Germany (though at the expense of the metre), reads as if Southey were looking through ten decades and saw the Kaiser to-day:

> O Germany, beneath this fierce barbarian's sway
> Disgraced thou art to all succeeding times;
> Rapine and blood and fire have marked thy way,
> All loathsome, all unutterable crimes,
> A curse in on thee Germany, from far and wide,
> It hath gone up to heaven; all lands have cried
> For vengeance upon they detested head.
> The living and the dead
> Cry out against thee they who beat,
> Crouching beneath its weight, thy iron yoke
> Join in the bitterness of secret prayer
> The voice of that innumerable throng
> Whose slaughtered spirits day and night evoke
> The everlasting judge of right and wrong,
> "How long, O Lord, holy and just, how long?"

To drop from rather ponderous, though prophetic poetry, to prize ring prose, we have the confident forecast of one of the greatest of living statesmen, and more than a statesman, a marvellous man of action. Lloyd George, British Minister of War, in a recent interview, in homely words of prophetic "punch," forecasts the crushing of the mortal arch enemy of mankind. He said, and we gladly believe him—so close is fulfilment coming on the heels of prophesy — these words:

> "Germany elected to make it a fight to a finish with England; and now we intend to see that Germany has her way. The fight must be to a finish—to a knock-out."

EDITORS SAID TO HAVE BEEN SHOT

HAVRE, France, Sept. 30.—The Belgian government authorities here have received information of the continued appearance of patriotic newspapers at Brussels and throughout Belgium, in defiance of the German censorship and despite all the efforts of the German military police. It is one of the mysteries of the German occupation of Belgium how these secret papers can be published, where they engrave their cartoons, ridiculing the Germans, and how they set the type and circulate the papers.

HUGE REWARD.

There is a price of 50,000 marks on the head of the editor of the Free Belgium, but it keeps on appearing just the same. Several of the supposed editors are said to have been shot. One man was sentenced to twelve years' hard labour; others to three and eleven years; and a woman, Mrdame Scheupens, to five years. But each time that a supposed editor is imprisoned and the German authorities feel the trouble is ended, the paper appears the following day more lusty than ever with a cartoon making fun of the prosecution.

CALLS HUNS BARBARIANS AND LIARS

La Patrie is another of these secret newspapers. It announces under its title that it is a "non-censored journal, appearing how, where and when it pleases." Another line states that it is in the second year of its publication. The bitterness of this paper is shown in the standing line carried at the head of its editorials, referring to the Germans as "barbarians and liars always". A recent number showed the German "en route for Calais" by way of the Yser river, and the bodies of German soldiers slaughtered by the Belgians floating in the river.

L'Echo, another of the secret journals, announces that it prints "what censored journals dare not and cannot say." A recent number gave a speech of Premier Asquith in the House of Commons declaring there would be no peace until Belgium was free. The editorial was headed: "Teuton Pirates and Vandals."

"A file is kept here of these secret papers, as a matter of curiosity. Free Belgium, which has given the most trouble, prints the following notices under its title:

"A bulletin of patriotism, submitting to no censorship whatever.

"Business office: Not being handy to have an established address, we are installed in a movable automobile cellar.

"Advertisements: Business being all under German domination, we have suppressed our advertising page and counsel our patrons to keep their money till times get better.

MOCKS GERMAN OFFICERS

A recent issue of Free Belgium gave a cartoon of Raemaker, adapted from Gustave Dore's "Scenes in Hell" showing a woman and children in agony as they are trampled down by a soldier in German helmet, the face of the soldier being evidently meant for that of the Kaiser. Another cartoon entitled "Love's Chagrin," shows General von Bissing, the military commander of Brussels, trying to find the editor of Free Belgium in cellars and attics, while the editorial room, business offices, etc., are depicted on wheels. A big sum, labelled Free Belgium, smiles down derisively at von Bissing's vain efforts to capture the editors.

New dances are the jitney bus, corkscrew glide and walking the dog.

Would Require a Heroic Method.—Whilst a political meeting was being held in a small village, one of the speakers was continually interrupted by the audience. Good-humuredly he asked them to give him a hearing, and he would be pleased to hear their complaints at the finish of his speech. When he had done, several questions were put to him, all of which he answered satisfactorily. Soliciting further queries, one individual, with rather a large head, inquired if the speaker knew anything of phrenology. He replied in the affirmative. "And how would you proceed to examine my head?" the man inquired. "With a hammer and a chisel," gravely replied the man, amidst roars of laughter.

Love and logic are seldom on speaking terms.

"NO INTERFERENCE" WITH THE COURSE OF JUSTICE AND PUNISHMENT OF CRIME

Mr. Lloyd George's stern reminder to all the world that, just as the British did not squeal when they were fighting against overwhelming odds, so now, when they are in the ascendancy, they will tolerate no intervention, comes as a veritable bugle blast of freedom. From the outset the British have not swerved from their course. When first the Germans sprang their hellish plot against the liberties of the world and all the most sacred laws and cherished institutions of mankind, Britain announced that she would spare no effort and stop at no sacrifices till the Prussian militarism which was at the bottom of it all was smashed beyond repair and crushed beyond all hope of resurrection. None of us—with the possible exception of Lord Kitchener—realized then the colossal task to which we had been committed. Had we realized it, the only effect would have been to make us accept the challenge of Germany more readily and more completely. Mountainous sacrifices and heart-breaking struggles soon carried home to the hearts of the people the gigantic task to which they were committed.

As Mr. Lloyd George says, there was no demand then to the spectators to call off the combat, or to alter the rules. We settled grimly to our task, with the original object ever held unswervingly before us. Germany summoned all the powers that diabolical ingenuity and the most callous and brutal minds could conceive to aid in her satanic scheme. We met them all in the same spirit of stoic heroism, unswerving faith, and unbending determination. The soul of the British people was as the soul of Henley, when he wrote:

> Out of the night that covers me,
> Black as the pit, from pole to pole,
> I thank whatever gods may be
> For my unconquerable soul.
>
> In the fell clutch of circumstance
> I have not winced, not cried aloud
> Under the bludgeonings of chance
> My head is bloody, but unbowed.

The English papers tell us that when the Germans who fell to their death in the first Zeppelin brought down on British soil were buried, the clergyman who read the burial service over their remains made a significant addition of his own. "Earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust, in sure and certain hope of the resurrection," he proceeded. Then he added, "and the Day of Judgment." The Day of Judgment is dawning now for the nation that is branded with the bloody brand of Cain. And those who attempt to withhold the execution of that judgment will be traitors to mankind. To quote Mr. Lloyd George again:

> "This ghastliness must never be re-enacted on this earth, and one method at least of answering that end is the infliction of such punishment upon the perpetrators of this outrage against humanity that the temptation to emulate their exploits will be eliminated from the hearts of the evil-minded amongst the rulers of men."—Montreal Herald.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

STORM AND WEATHER FORECASTS FOR OCTOBER, 1916

BY REV. IRL R. HICKS

A Reactionary Storm Period is central on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th. The Moon is at greatest south declination on the 2nd, and at first quarter on the 4th. The Mars, Earth and Mercury periods bear with their combined perturbing forces on this period. We may reasonably expect that the Mercury brace, coming with the Mars and Earth periods over from September, will bring a prolongation of cloudy, unsettled, and even stormy weather with it, over into the period central on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th. On and touching these dates storm forces will be augmented—the barometer will break down, temperature will rise, and increasing cloudiness, merging into rain, wind, and probably snow and sleet, will take up their accustomed march over the country from west to east. These reactionary storms will reach eastern extremes about the 4th to 5th, with high barometric pressure, westerly gales and much colder weather pressing closely behind. It is well to remember that these autumnal storms are not only dangerous from the direction of the Gulf, but that they are more or less certain to reach violent stages over the great northern lakes. The easterly gales that blow in from the Atlantic Ocean, to meet the low barometic depression advancing from the west, are also to be regarded as more or less certain and dangerous, especially along the coast line. The Moon being in perigee, or nearest the Earth, on the 6th, will combine with the Earth and Mars forces to aggravate and prolong all disturbances at this time.

A REGULAR STORM PERIOD.

Is central on the 9th, covering Saturday, the 7th, to Tuesday, the 12th. Disturbing causes and things to expect.

Do not fail to observe that the Mars brace is approaching ite centre, and make careful observations, with a view to determine whether continued storms and weather are bearing out the theory we have claimed for the Mars equinoxes. Are storms and weather of the same general character as prevailed during the last half of September? The Moon is on the celestial equator on the 9th, the central day of this period, and in opposition with Earth and Sun on the 11th. In the west there will be indications of brewing storms as early as the 7th and 8th. These indications will bring clouds, wind and rain promptly in western states. By the 9th storms of wind, rain and possibly thunder gusts, will develop and start on their eastward journey. On and about the 10th and 11th these storms will be central over a vast area, stretching up and down the great central valleys. Heavy gales will naturally attend these storms, breaking into possible fury as they pass over the lake regions. On and touching the 9th, 10th and 11th, the barometer should be properly watched in all the Gulf and south Atlantic regions, as autumnal hurricanes and tidal waves are entirely possible and probable not far from these dates. Close on the western flanks of these storms the barometer will rise rapidly, stiff, boreal gales will set in from the northwest, and an unseasonably cold wave will follow in the wake of these storms, over almost the entire country. We venture again to warn shipmasters, and all who are interested generally, of the great probability of cold, high gales and danger over all the lake regions at this time. There will also be danger on the open sea and along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts—earlier by several days along the Pacific. We do not recall any masters and owners who vaunt themselves on their courage, more than they should, that was not verified by dangerous storms and severe changes of the weather. It seems to us the part of wisdom and commercial economy to give heed to these things, and yet there are always some dare-devil shipmasters and owners who vaunt themselves on their courage, more than they value their vessels and cargoes and the lives of men. Watch this autumn's record of lost lives and ships on the northern lakes.

A REACTIONARY STORM PERIOD

Is central on the 14th, 15th and 16th. This period finds the Moon at greatest declination north on the 15th. The influence of the Earth's autumnal equinox is about closing at this time, but it is near the centre of the Mars period. The perihelion of the planet Mercury falls on the 15th, that is, Mercury is nearest the Sun at that time. The difference in the distance of Mercury from the Sun is so vast, and the different rates of his speed in his orbit are so great, at his aphelion and perihelion points, that it seems to us unscientific and irrational not to recognize him as a marked factor in the physical perturbations that lie behind the meteorologic elements. As this may be, there are sufficient causes to make practical readers of these forecasts watchful at this reactionary period. As the Moon moves southward from its high point north, boreal currents will follow from the north, adding to cold, discomforting weather.

A REGULAR STORM PERIOD

Is central on the 20th, reaching over Wednesday, the 18th, to Tuesday the 24th. Disturbing causes and things to expect.

The Moon is in apogee and at last quarter, on the 19th, and on the celestial equator, going southward, on the 23rd. We arrive at the centre of the Mars equinoctial disturbance on the 21st. The quadrature of the planet Saturn, together with the opposition of the great planet Jupiter, fall within on hour of each other on the 23rd.

A DANGEROUS STORM PERIOD.

For all these, and other reasons not enumerated, we conclude that this will prove the most violent and dangerous storm period during this month. There are also strong probabilities that, under the central strain of the Mars disturbance, a stormy period, beginning at this time will continue forward into th reactionary storm period following on the 25th, 26th and 27th. As early as the 18th, 19th, and 20th, in all western sections of the country, extending from the Pacific coasts eastward over the Rocky Mountains, marked indications of general storms will develop; the barometer will show phenomenal fluctuations and depressions in the atmosphere, the temperature will make startling strides upward and downward in rapid successions; fitful winds and ominous clouds will all foreshadow the approach of far-reaching and violent storms. By the 21st, these storms will attain a high state of development, approaching the central parts of the continent. A wave of warm weather and threatening fall of the barometer will precede the storms into the Mississippi Valley, and on eastward as the storms push closely from the west. From the 21st to the 24th, these storms will reach dangerous stages, first in the form of rain, thunder and violent winds, all followed by rapidly rising barometer, shifting winds to high westerly gales with heavy snow for the season, and a cold wave out of the ordinary for October. This is another time of risk and danger over all the great northern lake regions. All who are in any wise concerned, will do the wise thing to watch this period, look for dangerous storms, heed all signals and indications of the same, and stay in port until safety is assured. The danger crisis will hinge on about Saturday, Sunday and Monday, the 22nd, 23rd and 24th.

ALLIED DISTURBANCES.

A Reactionary Storm Period is central on the 25th, 26th, and 27th. The Moon is in conjunction with Sun and Earth on the 26th. At such times the Moon is passing between the Earth and Sun—sometimes directly so—at all other times a little to one or other of the Sun. But in all cases the combined action of the Sun and Moon on the Earth, is such as to increase ocean tides, barometric phenomena, increase of temperature, earthquakes, storms and allied disturbances. Centring on and next to the 26th, therefore, expect a return of decided storm conditions. Rain, wind and thunder, merging into snow, and followed by rising barometer and change to much colder, are among the things to expect. The Moon will be at extreme south declination on the 29th, which fact will contribute to prolonged cold; with the atmosphere tides from the north. Change to warmer will be in sight from westerly directions as we pass out of October. A regular storm period, with the Moon in perigee, begins in the far west on the 31st. The cosmic forces that lie behind all storm and changes of the weather, emanate dynamically from the Sun, outward into the ether, and thence into the atmospheric, magnetic, and electrical environments of the planets of the solar system. The periodic excess of solar energy thus received into our atmosphere, and into the solid globe itself, breeds physical unrest and distemper out of which spring, from the starting points over sea and land, all the perturbations comprised in storms, weather extremes, volcanic eruptions and earthquakes. The new Moon will intensify and aggravate these forces, adding materially to weather disturbances that may arise on and about the 26th.

EARTHQUAKE PERIODS.

An earthquake period is central on the 11th, extending from the 8th to the 14th. The pressure of Mars and Earth disturbances will augment earthquakes and volcanic unrest at this time. So will the Moon's equatorial contact on the 9th, and its opposition to Earth and Sun on the 11th. The exact opposition of the Moon to Earth and Sun is near midnight on the 11th, and the earthquakes resulting at this period will occur within three days of that hour. They will be in maximum forces in regions north of the equator, with sympathetic responses on and south of the equator on the far side of the Earth from the Moon—that is, on a straight line from the Sun and Moon, diagonally through the Earth to its opposite side. There are scientific reasons for all this—reasons that all our readers may easily master and apply.

The next Earthquake Period will centre on the 26th, extending from the 23nd, to the 28th. This, our readers will note, is near the centre of the Mars period. The quadrature of the planet Saturn, and the opposition of great Jupiter fall within one hour of each other on the 23rd, and the quadrature of the planet Neptune falls on the 26th. The Moon is near the ecliptic, half way form the equator to its extreme south declination. The quadrature of Uranus falls on November the 8th, possibly within close enough range to be felt in this very marked earthquake period. The new Moon passes conjunction with Earth and Sun in the middle of the forenoon on the 26th, and within seventy hours of that time earthquakes will visit many parts of the Earth. The initial shocks will begin in regions of the Earth directly under the Sun and Moon, which will be south of the equator in the south seas, but they will pass through the Earth diagonally, coming out along the middle Atlantic Ocean and in Europe. These earthquakes, and volcanic outbursts attending them, will be destructive in some places. The Panama Canal zone will not be out of the range of danger. Seismographs will record sympathetic shivers in most parts of the Earth. See!

CONVICTED MAN MAKES GETAWAY

OTTAWA, Sept. 30.—About 5 o'clock yesterday morning Herbert Down, who on June 15 was sentenced in the Ottawa police court to serve one year in the Ontario reformatory for bigamy, made his escape from the Rideau street hospital where he was removed shortly after being sent to the reformatory. He was gone from the hospital for about an hour before his absence was discovered and the police were notified. A search party was immediately sent out, but so far the police have been unsuccessful in locating him.

Down, who over a year ago enlisted with the Canadian Engineers, got as far as Halifax with the troops last spring. Just before sailing for England it was found, when his second wife made a claim at the separation allowance office for an allowance that he was a bigamist. He was brought back to Ottawa and was convicted, and sent down for one year. One week after he was sent to the reformatory he was removed to the Rideau street hospital.

He was in the hospital since about the end of June. When he made his escape from that institution yesterday morning he was in a poor state of health.

There has never been such a demand for efficient, responsible young women secretaries.

HARVEST FESTIVAL SERVICE AT ALL SAINTS CHURCH

Inspiring Sermon Was Delivered by the Rev. J. R. Moore of Toronto—Special Music by the Choir—"Worship is the Body of Life."

That the predominating effort of our life should be consecrated to the service of God, formed the keynote of a stirring message that was delivered last evening in All Saints' Church by the Rev. R. J. Moore, M. A., rector of St. George's Church, Toronto. The occasion was the Harvest Thanksgiving service, which will be continued on Sunday next. Rev. Mr. Moore took for his text three verses from the book of the prophet Isaiah, 6th chapter, which read as follows: "In the year that king Uzziah died I saw also the Lord, sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory."

Festival Day.

"You who are familiar with the calendar of the Church must know that this is one of the great festival days of the Church," said Rev. Mr. Moore. Whenever we say the Lord's Prayer we pray "Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven." We do not mean by that petition that we bow down in pious recognition of the divine faith while here on earth, but at all times and as it is done by the angels in heaven. The lessons that come from God concerning the angels speaks to us of worship and of service. When God calls upon man to do a piece of work, God gives him strength to do it. If you want to spend a profitable few minutes open the Bible at the 6th chapter of Isaiah, and read the chapter through and through. The prophet tells us that he was called by a vision. Not only does God come and reveal Himself in this wonderful way, but he tells us that if our life is to be a great life for us on earth we must do what the angels are doing in the presence of God. In the words of the text: "Above it stood the seraphims; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said: Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of his glory."

Four And Two.

"The seraphim," said the speaker, "had six wings; four for worship and two for service, or action. There was a larger power for worship than there was fo service or action. If we would do a great work for God we must do as the angels did—more worship than service. Some of us are more concerned about work and visible success than we are about worship. Without worship we cannot work effectively. Worship is the body of life. Take up your burdens; begin all over again and in God's way, four and two, or four for worship and two for work."

Rev. R. B. Grobb, Rector of All Saints hurch, assisted in the service. Special music was rendered by the choir.

Fatalism in The Front Trenches

BY A CANADIAN OVERSEAS

Few men can remain in the front lines for any length of time without becoming inveterate fatalists. It is interesting to follow the different phases through which a young soldiers understanding may travel on the road which ends in a cul-de-sac of complete fatalism.

A young soldier joins the colours and in the course of time finds himself on board a transport crossing the channel on his great adventure. As the vessel leaves port the pride of personal participation in the common danger thrills him. He is light-hearted. As he sees the shore grow rapidly less distinct, he finds himself wondering what will be his fate. As he moves to a sheltered part of the deck and cheerfully lights a cigarette he mutters to himself half unconsciously, "What has to be!—has to be!" Thus are the first seeds of fatalism sown.

Some weeks later he finds himself trudging with his company through a long, twisting communication trench to the front line. The night sky clothed in clouds, occasionally lets through moon gleams which light the warriors on their way between the walled-up clay sides of the sunken track. Now and again a distant Boche star shell of great brilliancy throws an uncanny white light, which dying out quickly, only serves to emphasize the darkness it so suddenly interrupted.

Though there is a steady crunch of moving feet, an occasional ripple of rifle fire and some way ahead the more distant boom of heavy guns, a peculiar feeling is produced that in spite of these sounds, silence reigns. It is the first taste of the front lines and this is not what was expected.

Suddenly in the grey nothingness above there are four vivid flashes, accompanied by snaps, like boom whiz-bangs, or an instant the company halts as one man; remarks mostly of a totally unmeaning nature for the occasion are heard, then it coiles onwards once more.

A few minutes later there is a crashing, crunching Gurrunch!—then again Gur-r-unch! Gur-r-unch! High explosives.

Great spurts of earth rise foountain-like in the air and shower down on the string of men, who mechanically take close cover against the trench side. The men again move on and they realize that it would be but a chance shot for one of those crater-creating shells to fall in the narrow way as they pass along, the seed of fatalism already sown, germinates in the young soldiers' souls.

The takin over of a line of trenches by the incoming company from the outgoin is not always a matter of undimmed delight. Though silence has been strictly maintained, the Boche has an uncanny habit of learning where the change is taking place. At such a time the trench is doubly manned and presents a chance for the Hun to tak his desired death roll with accurately directed trench-mortar bombs. The incoming company has a warm reception from heavy shells, on their way to the fire trench. Sometimes the change is managed without any special incident, and the new occupants of the trench are soon settled in their respective positions. But they are never left long undisturbed. Without warning missiles come whistling whiz through the air and land with a heavy flop on the loose earth in front of the trenches. A few of their newcomers realize what it is and peer over to discern. Three seconds later it fuses! Crunch!— a trench mortar bomb, it explodes with little less force than the high explosive shells they have already experienced. Then farther down the line there is another—then another, followed at intervals by others.

Men stare skywards to where the rocketing "Very" lights of the Boche reveal earth and sky —al leave the sentries. These gaze steadfastly across the sell-scarred, death-daubed land, to where the game they have come to hunt lies concealed.

The bombs still come with flopping bumps. Strecher bearers are called for. Nothing can be seen of the hurtling horrors which come with their swishing swoop out of the night, unless the moon suddenly gleams nakedly down. Then these sinister, death-dealing instruments show up, sailing through the air with a topsy-turvy-like career. The Boche bombardment ceases. Unseen, these bombs are deadly; when visible, in their loop-ing-the-loop-like flight, they can be avoided. The casualties are several and serious— the number of narrow escapees remarkable. Such is the great part the element of chance plays in the grim game of war.

A couple of hours later a patrol goes out to find the strength of the enemie's wire entanglements. This is risky work. The light is more than sufficient for seeing, so it is a big chance. "Mind you don't get blotted out, Bill," says a chum as the former scrambles over the parapet. "If I've got to be, I've got to be," replies the other with fatalistic grimness as he starts on his mission.

"To pluck bright honours from the pale-face moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep."

GROCERS PETITION FOR EARLY CLOSING GOES TO COUNCIL

With 70 of the city's 82 grocers signing a petition for a 7 p.m. closing by-law, the Finance committee last night recommended the drafting of the by-law which will be presented at Monday night's Council meeting.

F. Grierson, officer commanding the 74th Battery, in which twenty-five of thirty Peterborough men enlisted, wrote, requesting a donation to provide certain comforts for the men. The coming of cold weather would make any little extra greatly appreciated by the men. Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Ald. McIntyre, that the request be laid for the present.

Mrs. W. C. Ackerman wrote that W. C. Reid, who enlisted with the 52nd Battery, was entitled to the city's grant of five dollars. Mayor Duffus moved, seconded by Ald. Saunders, that a cheque be issued as requested.

Mr. Frank Yeigh, of Toronto, who is publishing a book of facts about Canada asked for the particulars of Peterborough' population, etc., and suggested that the city purchase a number of copies.—Received.

What Pasteurized Milk Has Done to Prevent Infantile Paralysis

Are parents too callous in regard to their own and their children's health?

Why are they not more aroused to their duty by the large number of cases of Infantile Paralysis which has recently occured in New York and other large cities?

Is there no lesson for them in this cruel epidemic among children? Let us see:

Medical Health Officers in New York and other large cities, including Toronto, who have been making investigations, have no hesitation in declaring that Pasteurization of Milk would have made this epidemic PRACTICALLY IMPOSSIBLE.

Here's the Proof

Pasteurized Milk was delivered free to 2,500 poor children's homes in New York City, with the result that not one single case of Infantile Paralysis has been recorded among these children.

What Does This Mean?

Does it not mean that grave danger must lurk in raw milk, when a toll of 8,000 cases have been reported in New York, and that the little bodies of children can be SAFEGUARDED from Disease and Disfigurement by using

Scientifically Pasteurized Milk

Then why not safeguard your Milk Supply by using Scientifically PASTEURIZED MILK, supplied by the

Peterborough Creamery

Scientific Cleanliness

Safeguards every operation in this Creamery.

You are Invited to Come and See Whenever You Like.

If you have not been awakened to the FACTS about Pasteurized Milk is it not time you did?

Another Fact to Bear in Mind

It has been repeatedly confirmed by the most skilled investigators both in Europe and America that Pasteurization not only destroys all disease-producing germs and 99 per cent. of all other bacteria, and does not affect the taste or in any way interfere with the nutritive value or digestibility of the Milk.

CAN'T RAISE HALF BATTALION HERE UNLESS SENTIMENT VEERS

Col. Johnston of the 247th Says Men of Military Age Are Exercising Their Voluntary Right to Remain at Home—Many Could Still Be Spared.

LOCAL PRESS NOT "PROFITEERS"

A tribute to the assistance of the Peterborough newspapers was paid by Col. Johnston of the 247th Battalion last night, during a conference with the Council last night. Announcements of all kinds were printed without any charge and more than that the press gave every assistance in preparing the matter for publication This voluntary and unremunerated support was confined to Peterborough alone, Col. Johnston continued. In conversation with a dozen commanding officers he had learned that their battalions were charged according to regular advertising rates. In Peterborough all work of this kind was done gratis by the local press.

"Unless there is a change of sentiment among the men of military age in this district we can't fill half a battalion", Col. Johnston incidentally remarked.

Ald. Stratton had stated that it was the wish of the Council to further the enlistment and interests of the 247th in any way that was open. It was felt that Peterborough should supply another unit.

Col. Johnston replied that at present he was not aware of any call he could make upon the Council.

"There is only one thing I want", he stated, "recruits". I can't compel men to enlist but I know that there are many around the city who could be spared. They are exercising their voluntary right of course. No man could fill this battalion by his own efforts. If all don't help to enlist, to secure recruits, I can't make them"

He had already received $500 from the Government but this did not apply to travelling expenses. If recruiting trips were made to outside points this expense had to be defrayed by the battalion. Col. Johnstan stated that he expected to visit outside points beginning next week

REGARDING A BAND.

He had not expected to raise a band but he had met Bandmaster Chadwick of the 136th Battalion, Port Hope, and had him transferred here. Mr. Gliddon had promised him every assistance and it was understood that there were a number of local players who desired to join. Some were expected also from the 201st Battalion which was recently broken up. A formal request had been made for the 93rd instruments if that band had been broken up.

Ald. Stratton stated that the Council had made a grant to the 57th Regimental band this year in the expectation that it would be drawn from when a new battallion was organized. It was felt that it would be more helpful than by enlisting strangers.

Col. Johnston replied that he did not know what understanding had existed, but in any case the men would have to enlist as do the other men.

APPLY FOR NO BATTALION.

At the outset Mayor Duffus explained that he had discussed with Col. Johnston the idea of attempting to secure other troops to winter here. He felt that Col. Johnston should be considered and his opinion requested. The latter replied that such a step would not, of course, be an advantage to the 247th and moreover he did not know what other Battalion the city could hope to have quartered here this winter.

And that's about as far as the idea proceeded. The Council did not wish to do anything to weaken the 247th but rather was anxious to assist it. And besides it was not manifest whence the troops that municipalities are scrambling for could be brought unless they are raised here

Ald. Stratton enquired if Col Johnston expected to have 500 hundred recruited here by Christmas and the 247th O. C. replied that this figure considerably exceeded his expectations under the present response.

Surplus of $3,000 Is Estimate After 1916 Council Is Through

But—The End is Not Yet and While Council Has Its Back to the Wall the Surplus Has Good Chance to Become An Overdraft

A comparative statement of the city's departmental appropriations and expenditures for the year was presented to the Finance committee last night which Ald. Stratton totalled, finding a balance of $3,000 in round numbers, as a prospective surplus. He pointed out to the members and especially to the respective chairmen, that this was a small margin. It should serve a cautionary purpose in regard to future demands and expenses. Mayor Duffus characterized the report as very satisfactory and urged that further expenditure this year be carefully considered.

City Treasurer Adams pointed out that the statement was based on the fixed charges for the year and the balance estimated on that basis.

Ald. Stratton mentioned certain unsettled legal actions which alone might wipe out the prospective balance.

The Returns by Department.

Ald. Evans' Fire, Water and Light committee promises a balance of $2,016.99, a report that was welcomed all around the Board.

Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Board of Works, said he had no written statement, but had about $700 remaining. He did not anticipate a surplus at the end of the year.

The Property committee is overdrawn $166.65. Ald. Saunders remarked that a mistake had been made in some way regarding the coal and ice items.

The following balances are practically assured:

Administration of Justice	$336.58
Assessments and taxes	37.14
Elections and by-laws	21.25
Light	470.46
Law and legislation	580.32
Municipal government	371.62
Queen Mary Hospital	50.25
Water	250.00

Ald. Weir's Manufacturers' committee will have a surplus of $334.12.

Special grants are already over drawn $271.50.

"This indicates nothing for Red Cross, Patriotic, Belgian or other grants this year," observed Mayor Duffus. "We will have to sit tight or get the money from next year's Council and we should not do that."

"TWIN BEDS"

Celebrated Comedy Coming

No more diverting comedy has even been offered upon the English-speaking stage than "Twin Beds," Salisbury Field and Margaret Mayo's clever little story of the domestic difficulties and embarrassing adventures of three married couples who reside in the same apartment house. "Twin Beds," played for one solid year in New York to record-breaking business, and is now in its second year in London, playing to capacity at every performance. "Twin Beds" will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House, Tuesday, Oct. 3rd, and comes under the direction of A. S. Stern and Company, the enterprising New York firm, which has given to the stage many notable successes, and will send here a carefully selected company of fun-makers. Reserved seats now on sale at Box Office.

PASTEURIZED MILK FOR THE CHILDREN

Much attention has been called to pasteurized milk since the recent development of infantile paralysis in New York and other large cities. It is recorded that 8,000 cases have occurred in New York in the course of the epidemic; and the significant statement is made that there was not a single case among the 2,500 babies known to have been fed on pasteurized milk. That looks like strong testimony in favour of pasteurized milk for children.

The New York Journal says that in New York City where, for a quarter of a century, Nathan Straus distributed pasteurized milk, and at last forced the health authorities and the milk companies to come to pasteurization, the infantile paralysis epidemic is extremely mild. In Brooklyn where milk pasteurization has been neglected, the epidemic developed and is at it worst.

It is generally conceded that boiling drinking water is a safeguard against polluted streams, because it destroys whatever there may be in the water, said to produce sickness and disease. it seems reasonable therefore, to believe that a similar safeguard would apply to milk that is boiled, the only difference being that in the case of milk there exists a valuable food which might be injured by boiling, but which does not apply in the case of water in which no food value exists. Boiled milk is said to be bad; but milk heated to a temperature of 140 to 145 degrees for pasteurization is not boiled milk. although it is claimed to effectually destroy all disease-producing germs. Proofs have also been produced showing that pasteurization causes no injurious effect upon the milk, produces no chemical changes, and does not interfere with either the digestibility or nutritive food value of the milk. The difference between pasteurisation and boiled milk is about the same as the difference between a soft boiled egg and a hard boiled egg.

It would appear, according to these statements that our own Peterborough Creamery management should be, not only thanked, but encouraged for the up-hill fight it has had in introducing pasteurized milk in this city. Is has required a great deal of time and money to educate milk consumers to avail themselves of the benefits claimed for the pasteurised milk. Scientists believe that this dreadful disease of infantile paralysis is carried in milk more than in other foods. The process of pasteurising it is claimed destroys the germs of disease and leaves the milk all of its food qualities.

The Peterborough Creamery report a marked increase in the number of consumers on its milk routes within the past three months.

Fortunate is the man who knows how big a fool he can be without trying.

Rusty Rails of Old Cobourg Road On The Way To Scrap Heap

There was nothing summery about this mornings market trip from Gores Landing. It fact it was decidedly cool even cold when Capt. Harris loosed the moorings in the gray dawn.

Up and down the river around the lake resorts the fall visitors are few and only daily transients for the most part.

The "Beaver" transported two scow loads of rails this week from Harwood to Hastings .They are the remains of the old Cobourg railway, on their way to the scrap heap and the melting pot for remoulding. A gang of men are engaged in tearing up the road and are hauling the rails to the Harwood dock.

THE PETERBOROUGH RED CROSS SOCIETY COLUMN

One of the wonders of the war is the development of new methods of treating sickness and wounds! Science, which has been pressed into the service of destruction, has also been the willing handmaid of healing and prevention. We suspect that the story of the sanitation of our armies will one day be written and prove of enthralling interest. We of the Red Cross are more directly interested in the healing of the sick and wounded, but we must not forget that those who labour to prevent disease are also "under the Red Cross."

A recent article by an American writer, reprinted in World Wide from the American Outlook, gives a description of the revolution in nursing caused by the application of a casing of wax, paraffin and resin, called "ambrine," to wounds caused by burning, frost-bite, and gangrene. This wonderful process not only immediately eases pain, but also encourages a new growth of skin by which the disfigurement, which is to a sensitive man, worse than death itself, may be avoided. The limb, when painted or sprayed with this solution, is left to dry and is then swathed in gauze and cotton to keep the wax unbroken. The face is covered with a gauze veil. The name of the French surgeon, who has made this wonderful, yet simple discovery, is not given. Again, in The Lancet the official organ of the British Medical Profession, we read of wounds treated entirely by saline irrigation, or in other words, by a continual stream of salt and water always dropping on the wound. This discovery was made by a distinguished British scientist, Sir Almroth Wright; and the article describes the revolution it has caused in both naval and military hospitals where surgical dressings are becoming out of date, 'except when a wound has to be protected during travelling.

Once again, it is probably well known to most of our readers, that quite early in the war it was discovered that the best healing was obtained for suppurating wounds by exposure to the sun in the open air; rather than by constantly changed dressings.

In the monthly report issued by the "Comite Americain pour les Blesses Francais" in Paris (June, 1916), we read of yet another system employed by the famous French surgeon, Dr. Alexis Carrel, who, after thorough chemical sterilization of the wound, closes it with a zinc oxide adhesive plaster, and foretells a to a day, we are told, when a wound will be completely healed.

We are sure that all Red Cross workers will be interested in these processes and we especially call attention to the fact that none of them call for 'surgical dressings' as we know them.

At a meeting of the Headquarters' Executive Committee of the Canadian Red Cross, held in Toronto, on Wednesday, Sept. 27th, the following notice was issued:

"The Executive Committee of the Canadian Red Cross Society having taken in review the amount of stores in hand in England, France and Canada, and the great demands on the society for its own undertakings and for the assistance of our Allies, assure the women of Canada that although the latest information from France and England states that further supplies of surgical dressings are not needed at present, yet the demand for socks, shirts, pyjamas, dressing-gowns, hospital suits, etc., is urgent, and practically unlimited, and the Executive Committee calls upon all Red Cross branches and auxiliary societies to continue to increase their efforts for the society's work."

Prisoners of War Department.

Extract from Mrs. Rivers-Bulkley's report in September Bulletin:

Our total number of prisoners is now 2,200. Every week therefore, 2,200 bread labels, 1,100 tobacco labels have to be written, in addition to the lists for the Civil Service stores parcels to be despatched. These weekly food parcels now total almost 2,500, as each man is getting a weekly parcel in addition to any extra ones that may be paid for by their battalions. A very large number of men recently captured have sent post card assigning part of their pay for supplying parcels.

We received on one morning alone 1,510 post-cards. This is the most we have received at once but there are always nearly two or three hundred every morning. These have all to be gone through carefully, any wishes or complaints noted, and the address compared with those in the files. They are then put away in filing boxes, each man's in a separate envelope.

We are very grateful to have got the three good rooms we now have for packing. There, people have been busy packing, not only clothing provided for the men, but a parcel for each of them, containing: 2 towels, 2 handkerchiefs, 2 shirts, hair brush and comb, tooth brush, housif.

All these articles are being supplied from the Red Cross warehouse, and are sent down from there, enough for about one hundred men daily.

SEATS NOW SELLING FOR "TWIN BEDS"

The seat sale for the "Twin Beds" at the Grand, Tuesday October 3rd, opened at the box office this morning and met with such an unusually heavy demand throughout the day as to warrant the belief that there won't be a vacant seat when this sensational success comes to town. If your heart is weak, you'd better stay away from this performance. If on the other hand you are strong and able to do your share in shrieking with laughter, on no account miss "Twin Beds." It takes a lot to make some people laugh, but "Twin Beds" is guaranteed to make the sides ache of even a pessimist. To see the first act is to yell with joy; the second and third acts, as well as the first, combine to make it the funniest play that has ever been seen in Peterborough. The situation in "Twin Beds" in many instances, are so surprising that people are thrown in almost paroxysms of laughter, and it can easily be understood how London and New York critics have so universally sung its praises.

OPENING RALLY WAS A SUCCESS

General Secretary Was Welcomed Back —The Programme

Over two hundred were present at the opening rally in the Y.W.C.A., last evening. The rooms were prettily decorated with autumn leaves and flags presented a very cheerful and home-like appearance. The Social committee furnished refreshments after the programme and social hour was spent. Rev. Mr. Peever took charge of the devotional exercises and the following programme was given:

Piano duet—Mrs. Cruickshank and Mrs. McClelland.

Solo—Mr. Staples.

Solo—Mrs. Quartermaine.

Piano solo — Mrs. Porter, Mrs. Buchanan.

A number of gymnasium girls gave a demonstration of their work, which was enjoyed by all.

Miss Dickson, the President gave a welcome to all in a few well chosen words and welcomed back to the work Mrs. Douglas, who was the general secretary last year.

Mrs. Douglas gave an outline of the fall's activities.

EGGS PLENTIFUL ON THE MARKET

The revelery of high prices the farmers have enjoyed on the market of late came to an abrupt termination this morning. Of late the attendance has not been large, a condition that provided an additional bullish sentiment to the general upward tendency of prices. But this morning's market presented an exceptionally numerous representation from the country, with the result that, as eleven o'clock drew near, the Market Hall had a far larger gathering than on recent Saturdays at their busiest periods.

Hence, there were no forty-cent touches for eggs and butter, and it can be safely stated that a number of farmers must have sold down to 35c or less, especially with their eggs, unless they preferred to take them back home. At that hour butter was 37c and 38c, and was fairly plentiful, and eggs were about the same, although they were much weaker than butter. Nearly every farmer's wife and daughter had a basket of eggs. Poultry was rather dear and was in fairly good supply. Potatoes were quoted at $2.50, and a few purchasers fell for it. Ducks were $1.10 and $1.25 a pair, and chickens ranged from 60c a pair up, in some cases away up.

REMEMBER THE CHILDREN'S AID

Among the many claims that come to our attention there is no one more deserving than that of the Children's Aid. The claim is an annual. The Aid is perennial. It is ever here. And will, praise be so long as there are defenceless and poor children to be helped and cared for.

The annual Tag Day will be made on Saturday, October 7th. It is two days before Thanksgiving. So let us show our thanks, if the expression may be allowed, in freely, persistently and most liberally supporting the good people who are in an unselfish way guiding the affairs of the Aid and helping the little ones.

It is a quiet and rather unostentious work. It must needs be so. The sorrows of children to be taken and sheltered are not for the public eye. That they are helped is enough. Wise heads and warm hearts are behind the movement. But the public, whose children are happy and cared for may well spare of its means to assist in succoring others not so fortunately placed.

During the week the Society will make its appeal in the Press. It will be helpful if those who see will read. To read is to be convinced and the next step is to support. Let no man or woman, or youth or girl expect to appear in public untagged. The fee is small. And wearing the tag is that which stands for better objects and nobler ambitions than the Iron Cross. Look out for Tag Day.

Presentation To Mr. G. R. McBrien

Mr. G. R. McBrien, monoline operator at the Times Printing Co., who is leaving for Kitchener to take a position with The Telegraph Printing Co., was yesterday presented with a handsome club bag by the staff and employees of The Times. Mr. B. Moore made the presentation, and Mr. C. R. Wilson read the following address:

Mr. Garnet R. McBrien.

Dear Mac,—It is with deep regret that we have learned that you are about to depart from this city; we thought and hoped that your moving days were over, and that you would find in Peterborough a congenial circle of friends and possibly some other attraction that would weld and tie you to this city.

Such, however, has not been the case and we do regret it. If the inducements offered have not been such that you would stay, then your departure is our loss.

A good friend and comrade, a fellow worker in the trade, a man on whom to rely in all emergencies is difficult to be replaced. During your eight months as an employee on the Peterborough Times staff, we have found you efficient and zealous in your duties, a capable workman, trustworthy, honest and reliable; hence we are unwilling to see you go.

We do not purpose to have you change your resolves, but we hope, trust and know that in your new field of labour you will be appreciated. Your skill and industry is and has been such as to bring to you the respect of both your employer and fellow workmen. We know that you will, in moving to Kitchener, take on large responsibilities, which we are sure you can ably handle.

We wish you every prosperity and distinction in the ranks of the craft and all good wishes for the future.

Accept this slight token, not necessary as expressing the height and depth of our appreciation, but in a small measure, our estimate of your worth as a friend, comrade and workman.

Signed on behalf of the Peterborough Times Staff.

Peterborough, Sept. 29th, 1916.

FIRE IN TERRACE ON PARK STREET

Fire in a terrace on Park Street, between Bolivar and Sherbrooke streets, gave the Fire Department a busy session this morning. The source of the conflagration was located in a house occupied by Mr. Walter Irwin. The fire was confined to some false woodwork which made it more difficult to combat. Neighbours in the nearby houses became alarmed and commenced to pile their household effects on the lawn of the Rev. Dougald Brown. The fire spread to the roofs of two adjoining houses, and for some time the situation looked serious. Mr. Irwin's furniture and that of the adjoining houses was somewhat damaged. The total damage is estimated at $1,000.

MR. BOGUE MUST PAY FOR CULVERT AND "ETC."

"Bogue's siding," as the Council have grown accustomed to terming the stub line Mr. James Bogue seeks to extend across Edinburgh into his property, was given another once over last night by the Committee of the Whole. The by-law authorizing its construction will provide for the construction of an adequate concrete culvert across the street and further preparing of the road with Mr. Bogue on the paving end of these precautions, which also include maintenance and any expense the city may be put to owing to the construction of the siding.

TWO DEGREES BELOW FREEZING

The thermometer last night dropped to two degrees below the freezing point. Mr. Walter Peters states that this is the first time this autumn and is one day later than last year.

More Beautiful Walls at Lower Cost

Paper has been used to cover walls because in the past there was nothing better at prices within reach of the average home.

About 5 years ago, Fresco-Tone, the wall finish satisfying modern ideas of beauty, durability and cleanliness, was perfected. Although far superior to paper, its cost was no greater. Now wall-paper has risen to almost prohibitive prices—but the cost of Fresco-Tone is practically the same as before.

Fresco-Tone is not a kalsomine. It is a durable oil finish, possessing the soft, velvety beauty of water-colors with the tough permanance of high-grade oil paint. It may be applied direct to plaster, or over paper, burlap, or wood; has no porous fibres to catch dirt and germs, and when soiled may be washed with soap and water. Fresco-Tone is made in 20 beautiful shades, is easy to apply, and low in cost as compared to other wall coverings.

Fresco-Tone one or two rooms this Fall and by Spring you will want your whole house decorated in the same delightful way.

P. C. Blade Used His "Bean" Likewise His Legs In This Case

Police Constable Arthur Blade needs no boost in the press. His work speaks for him more loudly than mere words. But when any of Chief Thompson's men perform a neat piece of work it should not go unnoticed, and P. C. Blade's quick thinking in this case seems worthy of a reference. William C. Edwards of Lang, was driving east on Simcoe street last night at 11.15 o'clock, when he collided at the corner of Water street with a car, smashing the head lamp and doing other minor damage to the latter car. Edwards swerved sharply in the collision and turned to such an extent that he found his car facing back west and without any perceptible hesitation continued toward George street. This failure to stop his car and investigate what damage he had done was a breach of the Motor Vehicles Act. Blade witnessed the accident, and when Edwards didnt stop he tried to ascertain his number but failed. On inspiration that he was going around by Hunter street in the direction of East City, P. C. Blade sprinted up to the Hunter street corner on Water street and landed his man as he had hoped.

This morning Edwards was fined $50 in police court.

Mr. J. J. Turner's Complaint Was Smoothed Away

A misunderstanding between Mr. J. J. Turner, Sr., and City Assessor Wm. Henry regarding assessment notices was satisfatcorily and amicably adjusted at last night's meeting of the committee of the Whole Council. Mr. Turner's temper had been ruffled by Mr. Henry's refusal to give him separate notices for the Grand Theatre and the two stores within the building. He wanted the notices in that way for the purpose of presenting an appeal on the stores before the Court of Revision.

Mr. Henry's explanation that individual notices on these three parcels would not aggregate the total presented on the single notice nor could that apparent disparity be avoided. He had discussed Mr. Turner's request with City Solicitor Gordon, who advised that it be refused.

Mr. Turner stated that what he really wanted were copies of the notices delivered to the tenants of the stores. If the original notices had been delivered, he had not seen them.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Ald. McIntyre, that two copies be given to Mr. Turner if City Solicitor Gordon so advised.

"I'm satisfied," concluded Mr. Turner. "That's all I want."

Mr. Turner and Mr. Henry there upon shook hands as an earnest of their resumption of the even tenor that marked their way previous to this rippling difference.

No Funds For Grant To Ont. Fire Victims

A communication from the committee in charge of relief work for the Northern Ontario fire sufferers requesting a grant from Peterborough was "received" by the Finance committee last night. "That's all we can do now," was the positive expression used to cover a negative action.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BASEBALL SLAVERY

It will be thirty-seven years to-day since the shackles were forged for baseball players, reducing them to a condition of abject slavery, which is simply horrible to contemplate. On September 30, 1879, a special meeting of National League magnates was held in Buffalo, and at this session the awful conspiracy against the liberty of the players reached a Satanic conclusion. Calmly and in cold blood, the Simon Legrees of baseball discussed the scheme for robbing the players of their precious heritage of freedom and fastening upon their limbs chains of an egregious serdom.

The upshot of the business was the adoption of what has come to be known as the reserve rule. The magnates attached their signatures to an agreement in which each bound himself not to employ players which other National League clubs wished to retain. Under the terms of this document —which, in keeping with its character, was adopted secretly—each club of the National League was permitted to reserve five men.

Prior to that time a baseball player was a free man, and could look in the face his fellowmen of a liberty-loving land. If he wished, he could make a contract with one club for a year, and go to another team the next. In the National Association days, prior to the launching of the National League in 1876, the players as a rule were not even bound by contract, and could jump at any time to any club that offered better pay. The most notorious example of this practice of "revolving," as it was called, came at the close of the 1875 season, when the original "Big Four" of the diamond—Al Spalding, pitcher; "Deacon" White, catcher; Cal McVey, first baseman, and Ross Barnes, second baseman—jumped the Boston club in a body, and went to Chicago. After that regular contracts were offered to players, and this put an end to the practice of jumping without notice.

But the magnates were not satisfied with a mere contract, because, when it expired, the player was left free to go elsewhere if he pleased. Then some bright genius—old Simon Legree himself, maybe—doped out the reserve rule, the entering wedge in that dreadful regime of slavery by which players have become two-legged chattels, to be bought and sold like cattle.

Oh, the horror of it! Let us weep, brethren, let us weep!

OLD COUNTRY FOOTBALL GOSSIP

Steve Bloomer, the famous English footballer, has broken out in a new place and created a mild sensation by capturing five wickets for 39 runs in a recent cricket match at the interned British prisoners' camp at Ruhleben, Germany, where for the nonce he appeared as a Yorkshireman, and championed the cause of the White Rose against a Lancashire eleven. He has been a good local cricketer for years.

Before the war broke out Bloomer was in Berlin training one of the crack soccer teams, and later was interned along with other British residents in Germany. Recently he has played a lot of soccer in Germany, and has been one of the moving spirits in arranging games among the prisoners of war.

Charlie Thomson.

Charles Thomson, the Supderland captain, has settled at Prestonpans, his native place. The rumour that he has retired from football has again revived.—Athletic News.

During the past 12 or 15 years Charlie Thomson has been one of the outstanding soccer men in the British Isles. He first came to the front as a member of the Heart of Midlothian team, and later moved to Sunderland. When he went to England many critics declared he would never stand the strain of league football across the border, as he had seen his best days. This statement was soon knocked on the head, for he displayed great form for Sunderland, and not only so, but was repeatedly chosen to represent Scotland in the big international events.

Style All His Own.

When Thomson began his career with the Hearts he played as a centre forward and at times as a back, but latterly he settled down as a centre half of rare ability. Thomson was a great player in the best sense of the term. He had a style all his own. At times he would be covering up the backs, and the next minute helping his forwards.

Against England one year at Hampden, Thomson opened the scoring for Scotland following a corner. He just lofted the ball over the heads of the other players and completely deceived Sam Hardy, of the Villa, who was in goal. So pleased was Thomson at his success that he danced around for a few seconds. It was his first and only goal in an international.

The Hearts had a great side indeed when they had men like Charlie Thomson, Bobbie Walker and Geordie Wilson. They formed a fine combine. While Thomson and Wilson went to England later on, Bobbie Walker stuck to the "Hairts." His heart was with the Hearts—his trump card!

Allen Foster Killed.

Among those who have fallen in the great "push" is Allen Foster, the centre forward of Reading.

The mere mention of Reading reminds us that no fewer than seven of their team who surprised Aston Villa in the English Cup in 1912 enlisted early in the war, while altogether this club has had five players killed and eight wounded.

Allen Foster was a native of Rawmarsh, Yorkshire, and played for Parkgate Athletic, Rotherham Town, Bristol City, and Reading.

Jock Lyall Comes Back.

Sheffield Wednesday's chief anxiety in making their arrangements for this season has been in regard to a goalkeeper, but they have settled this satisfactorily, a player who helped them to gain some of their greatest triumphs having promised to assist the old club.

This is Jack Lyall, who kept goal for Wednesday when they won the English Cup for the second time in 1907, and when they carried off the league championship in two successive seasons, 1902-3 and 1903-4.

Lyall is a sapper in the Royal Engineers, in training in the Barnsley district, and has obtained permission from the military authorities to assist his old club on Saturdays.

Lyall is a native of Dundee, but his parents moved to the north of England when he was a lad. He has represented Scotland against England, and there were few better goalkeepers than Lyall in his day.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

The Worcester club led the Eastern league in batting this season, and finished fifth in the league pennant race.

Gladstone Graney and Ty Cobb are battling all the way for the lead among the American league run-getters.

Eleven regulars in the American league and eight in the National league are batting for .300 or better.

Pitcher Boland of Detroit has forced Nick Cullop, the Yankee twirler, out of first place in the list of American league pitchers.

Joe Jackson, third man in the American league batting average, is 20 points ahead of Hal Chase, the National league leader.

Billy Miske, the St. Paul middleweight, will clash with Battling Levinsky at the Clarmont club in Brooklyn on Columbus day.

Charley Barrett, all-American quarterback and star gridder at Cornell last year, has signed with a Pittsburg eleven made up of former college stars.

The Milwaukee Brewers have clinched the cellar championship of the American association all three ways—last in team standing last in team batting and last in team fielding.

William J. L'Heureux of San Francisco, who hold the national amateur heavyweight title, is to enter the professional ranks. He boxes under the name of "Bill Larue."

About the most interesting pugilistic clash in prospect just now is the proposed bout between Champion Freddie Welsh and Johnny Dundee. Welsh has been boss of the lichties for several years now, so perhaps Johnny is hooking up at the right time.

Coach Paul Whittington, assisted by Ed Seney, Dick King and Jack Doherty, is working day and night with the Wisconsin football squad. If being tutored by all-American gridiron kingpoints for anything then the Badgers should come through right side up.

CANNED VEGETABLES SCARCE

Ottawa, Sept. 29.—David Marshall, M.P., of Aylmer, Ont., supervisor of the Dominion Canners, who is here, states that this season's pack, more particularly in regard to vegetables than fruit, will not be more than a third of the average.

LAWN BOWLING.

The regular schedule games of the season are now completed. There may be special contests arranged later.

There is some talk of the married men playing the bachelors. The bachelors may not have the courage to take up the challenge, as they would have a very tough proposition to tackle.

The list of the prize-winners of the regular and jumble tournaments is as follows:

Messrs. Wren, Budd, Taylor, Brightman, Voaden, Wyllie, R. Elliot, Pratt, Parkins, Cairns, Mayneord, Buckham, Grant, Moore, W. Elliot, Metheral, Hammond, Walton, Benore, Read, T. C. Elliot, Dayman, Gould, Fitzgerald, McCusker, McGarrell.

Some of the above names have won two and three prizes. They will be presented on Thursday, Oct. 12, at the annual banquet which will be held at the Empress Hotel.

LIVERPOOL IRISH

personal character. Louis Philippe was dethroned because a Duke who was supposed to have murdered his wife was let down gently. The downfall of Louis Napoleon was accelerated because one of his relatives shot an obscure journalist. It has been just the same with the French Republic; it was shaken to its foundations by the Panama scandal. Boulanger, one of the most empty-headed charlatans that ever deceived a nation, might have been president of the Republic if he had only had the courage to lead his men against the presidential residence on the night of his victorious election by Paris. It is possible that if the war had not come, the murder of M. Calmette by Madam Cailloux might have precipitated a crisis. In short, in France, you never know quite where you are.

THE IRISH PARTY.

At a time when the Irish Party was regarded as one of the most indestructible and impregnable fabrics in public life, I constantly insisted on its likeness to the position of the French Republic. Ireland, like France is a land of surprises and uncertainty. A personal incident or a small event may set with the devasting fires and destructiveness of an earthquake. Parnell realized this situation so completely that even when he was at the height of his power he never allowed any sign of dissension to pass unnoticed. Once at a convention at Tipperary his candidate was rejected in favor of another candidate. By the very next boat and train Parnell was down in the middle of the constituency and got the convention to reverse its verdict. Parnell at a period of his life, became lethargic and was absent from his place in the House of Commons for weeks together; but he read every line in the Irish that gave him any indication of what popular feeling was, and even a small village gathering could not see anything hostile to his policy without attracting his attention. The only thing he neglected was the composition of his own party, and when he had absolutely in his own hands the nomination of every man for every constituency in the country, he allowed a group to gather round Mr. Healy which was afterwards to be the main agency in bringing about his downfall.

UNQUESTIONED POWER.

Even, however, in his days of tremendous and unquestioned power, Parnell was, like all Irish leaders subjected to the surprises and accidents of Irish life. For instance, after his release from Kilmainham, the Phoenix Park assassination put back himself and his cause for ten, if not twenty years. If it had not been for that tragic and disastrous event, Parnell might have been Prime Minister in Ireland twenty years ago.

To understand Irish history for the last 50 years and, for the last few months, it is necessary to go down to one fundamental division of thought and effort that is rooted in Irish history. That contest may roughly be regarded as a contest between a constitutional movement and a physical force movement. The contest took its rise mainly in the fact that for more than 70 years after the destruction of the Irish Parliament in 1800—except during the brief interval of O'Connell's omnipotence—Irish representation in the Imperial Parliament was absolutely futile. Owing to a restricted suffrage, the constituencies were small and many of them corrupt. In my native town of Athlone, which had only between 200 and 300 voters, and the shower of gold which always accompanied it, would relieve them from their embarrassments. The result of it was that the member of Parliament first bought his constituency and then sold himself. The Irish representation was composed of political adventurers of the most sordid and the tariff for the vote reached the large sum of 200 dollars, and men face to face with bankruptcy, kept on their business for months if not longer, in the hope that a contested election open type. When seeking election if they came before a populous constituency, they professed the most loud mouthed and most unselfish patriotism, but after the lapse of a year or two the unselfish patriot found himself a judge in a British colony or some other job of small work and large pay. The result of it was that every attempt to improve the land system and stay the emigration by the hundred thousand yearly which was then going on in Ireland, made no progress, and that Ireland had in the half century after the union one of the worst famines in history, and a larger emigration than that of any other country at any other time.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT.

It was this atmosphere that enabled James Stephens, the Fenian leader to create the Fenian movement and to make most of the earnest and courageous young men of Ireland turn to the gospel of physical force as the only means left for saving the country from apparently inevitable destruction. This movement gained great strength, but when the crisis came and it found itself up against the immeasurable superiority of the British Empire, it collapsed; and some of its members were executed, and others served long terms of penal servitude. It was Isaac Butt who founded on the ashes of the broken Revolution the modern Constitutional movement; but even he found it hard to subdue the disbelief of the Irish people in constitutional agitation, and the still lingering hope of insurrection as the best and indeed the only method of redressing Ireland's grievances.

It was the dominating personality of Parnell and his aggressive and then very successful policy that gave the coup de grace to the revolutionary movement and restored for nearly 40 years the united and unbroken faith of the people of Ireland in a constitutional movement and in the Irish Parliamentary Party as the surest weapon of redressing Ireland's wrongs. Parnell's policy was justified by a transformation of Irish conditions as complete and as beneficent as any reform movement in history.

DISCORDANT ELEMENTS.

Just as an accident brings against the French Republic all the discordant elements of France, so an event like the Sinn Fein rebellion brings into being all the many discordant elements that lie under the surface of Irish life. The war added to these elements of discord. A considerable number of the clergy have resented as much the strong secular legislation of France that their sympathies, if not pro-German, were at least anti-French. Unfortunately, as is so often the case, all these elements found their best allies in the unwise policy of the British Government. When Sir Edward Carson was made a minister there was a general feeling in Ireland that Orangeism had triumphed, and that Ireland was once more under the heel of the old old ascendancy. But even this would have been of little account if it had not been for the folly and almost incredible errors of the War Office. At the beginning of the war and immediately after the speech of Mr. Redmond, there was something approaching enthusiasm on the side of his policy and of the Allies in the war. Recruits were accompanied to bands and by cheering crowds to the railway stations as they departed for their trains. Recruiting speeches were made all over the country by Members of Parliament, by local Nationalist leaders. At one time there was a possibility of the Volunteers that new armed force that had been called into existence by the Orange movement of the north, being created into an army under the control of the War Office. This was the suggestion made by Messrs. Redmond, Dillon and Devlin on the very day after the declaration of war. The three went together to Lord Kitchener, made the suggestion; but he turned on them his basilisk eye and calmly told Mr. Dillon that he knew Ireland well—and illusion which curiously enough Lord Kitchener held almost to the end of his days—and he frankly refused any assistance from the Volunteers. If it had not been for that there probably never would have been a Sinn Fein force or a Sinn Fein insurrection. All kinds of impossible people were sent to preach recruiting—ex-Unionist candidates and ex-Unionist lecturers to intensely Nationalist Catholic districts. Speeches, in which the word "coward" and "slacker" were freely interspersed were made by exuberant ex-soldier speakers. Worse than all, the names of the Irish regiments when they began to take an heroic part in such movements as the retreat from Mons and the landing at Suvla Bay were omitted—apparently by order—from the despatches. The truth has gradually come out that in the War Office there were several men who had encouraged the Curragh Camp insurrection against Home Rule. In Dublin the recruiting committee consisted of unionists; they told Sir Hedley le Bas—an Englishman sent over from the War Office to encourage recruiting among the Nationalists—that they did not want to encourage recruiting among the Nationalists because it might help Home Rule. In short, everything that should have been done to encourage recruiting was done to discourage it.

PHYSICAL FORCE.

Then came the insurrection, and after the insurrection the executions, and for the moment Ireland stands once more in the midst of the old conflict between faith in the Constitutional movement and a Parliamentary Party and a resort to the desperate and hopeless expedient of physical force.

Hence, first it seemed that popular feeling was moving in such hostility against the British authorities that the contest was doubtful in issue. But all Ireland is not insane all the time; and already progress is being made towards those better impulses which so often save Ireland, and which will win it to rest in the end.

HEAVY LOSS FOR EX.-GALWAY MAN

In a letter received from Mr. Charles McMahon, Kinley, Sask., he states that he had his crop completely hailed out in August last. He had 460 acres, which were all in good condition. His loss he estimates at $10,000. Mr. McMahon was a former resident of Galway, but has been in the west for some years. His friends here will regret to hear of his severe loss.

Committee Visited Crawford's Grove

Yesterday's conference of city and North Monaghan representatives at Crawford's Grove served to heighten the impression that the suggestion of laying the sewer to that location would be precluded by the heavy aggregate cost. The site advised by the Provincial Board of Health was also visited, and the ultimate action will likely be the use of this property and adjoining lots for the sewage plant, and porbably for a fair grounds.

MUSICALE DREW ANOTHER CROWD

The second musicale at the Greene Studio, last night, was even more largely attended than last week's, and proved the same delightful evening for those who afforded themselves of this generous invitation on the part of the Greene Music Co. The programme was a most enjoyable one and a promise of what the future musicales will present.

CHILDREN'S DAY IN ANGLICAN CHURCHES

The Rev. R. A. Hiltz will preach with special reference to Sunday Schools at St. Luke's in the morning and at All Saints' in the evening.

In the afternoon at 3.30 a special service will be held in St. John's Church for the members of all the Anglican Sunday Schools in the city, when Mr. Hiltz will address the teachers and scholars. The congregations are asked to attend in large numbers these most important services, so that the message and information which the Secretary brings to them may be of the greatest service.

Education And Publicity

THE FIRST THING to do in helping a poor child is to find out what others are doing for him or her.

If you find that such help is being carefully, thoughtfully and efficiently given, would it not be better that YOUR HELP might meet in the same channel and join in the effort. Divided effort seldom accomplishes best results.

Then why not give your help to the CHILDREN'S AID. There can be no question of unselfish service. No question but that ALL moneys are wisely and, if you will, frugally used. That what money is available shall reach the farthest and do most good.

THE CHILDREN'S AID appeals to you. It makes that appeal a concrete thing on SATURDAY NEXT. Saturday of next week. IT IS TAG DAY. You know the object. You know it deserves help. There is never enough.

The Local Branch has faith in much education and in some publicity. To say why and when. So through the local press (which is ever generous and always helpful), you will be told and urged to contribute. If minded to make a substantial subscription it will be most highly appreciated. If you may not subscribe (for there be many calls), fail not to be tagged. Wearing the tag will be an evidence on the street that you have done "your bit."

SATURDAY TAG DAY OCT. 7

Some other things may be said, later, of this good work. We want you as a stock-holder in the noblest charity that appeals to our people. The succor and care of defenceless children.

Now, this matter, appearing in these columns is just advertising. If that sort of publicity is good for the merchant it can't be astray for the CHILDREN'S AID. It is hoped the results Next Saturday will justify the faith of the friends in publicity.

WEDDING BELLS

CHRISTOPHER—SULLIVAN.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized on Monday morning, September 25th, at 7 o'clock in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Mohawk, N.Y., when Miss Johanna Sullivan, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sullivan, West Main street, was married to Mr. Joseph Christopher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Christopher, Parnell street, Peterborough. After the wedding breakfast was served to relatives and friends at the bride's home, Mr. and Mrs. Christopher left for New York and Philadelphia. The young couple will reside in Eddystone.

LOBB—FAUX.

A very quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized on Tuesday, Sept. 26, 1916, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. Faux, Westwood, when their only daughter, Vida, was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Ross Benjamin Lobb, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Lobb, Westwood. Rev. Mr. Snell, of Hastings, officiated. The bride, attired in a dress of pearl grey Duchess satin trimmed with pearls and lace, wore the customary veil and carried a bouquet of white roses, lily of the valley and ferns, was assisted by Miss Ida King of Norwood, who wore a dress of pink silk draped with ninon, also carried a bouquet of pink roses, lily of the valley and ferns. The groom was assisted by Mr. Will Buck, of Hastings. After the ceremony about fifty guests adjourned to the dining room and partook of a dainty dejeuner. After the signing of the register the bride donned her travelling suit of midnight blue with hat to match. The happy young couple, escorted by a number of their young friends, motored to Norwood, where they took the 3.10 p.m. train for Toronto, Niagara and points west.

The groom's gift to the bride was a necklace set with pearls and amethyst, to the bridesmaid and Miss Margaret Cardwell, who played the wedding march, were pins set with pearls, and to the best man a set of gold cuff links. The bride was the recipient of numerous and costly gifts, among which was a cheque for $100, the gift of the bride's father. Mr. and Mrs. Lobb, on their return, will reside in Peterborough.

LUCAS—PERDUE.

On Tuesday, Sept. 26th, the marriage of Miss Lillie Perdue to Mr. Percy Lucas, was solemnized in St. Luke's church, Downeyville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Galvin, P. P., of Downeyville. Miss Margaret Perdue acted as bride's maid, while Mr. Joseph Lucas performed the duties of best man. Miss Olive Herlihey presided at the organ. Lohengrins wedding march was rendered as the bridal party entered the church and during the ceremony sacred solos were sung by the Misses Olive Herlihey and Ethel Harrington.

At the conclusion of the nuptial mass the bridal party repaired to the home of the bride's parents, Stewart street, Peterborough, where a dainty wedding breakfast was served and a reception held. A large number of friends and relatives were present to extend congratulations and to offer good wishes to the newly-married couple.

That evening Mr. and Mrs. Lucas went on a short trip to Niagara. On their return they will reside in Downeyville.

SUDDEN DEATH OF LORENZO BROOKS

Deceased Was a Brother of Mr. J. M. Brooks of Peterboro'

OSHAWA, Sept. 30.—The death occurred on Monday evening of Mr. Lorenzo Brooks. The circumstances were very tragic. Prior to going up town, as was his custom, Mr. Brooks called upon Miss Butt, who lives next door, to ascertain the number of waggons that would be necessary to convey her furniture to Port Perry whither she purposed moving on Tuesday. While speaking in the hall near the front door about 7 o'clock Mr. Brooks complained of feeling dizzy. Miss Butt started for the kitchen to get him a drink of water. She had hardly turned before he fell to the floor. When she reached him again Mr. Brooks was dead. He had died instantly. The physician says he was dead before he fell, from heart failure.

The late Mr. L. M. Brooks was a son of the late Mr. Michael Brooks, who kept a grocery store, in the '80's in Cedar Dale, and was born in Pickering Township. He kept a livery stable at the Brook House from 1868 to 1900, when he moved it up town. Later he sold the business to Messrs. Brown & Ward, who resold to him after five and a half years' occupancy. Since then Mr. Brooks ran the livery and cartage business himself at the well-known stand near the municipal offices. His brother, Mr. J. M. Brooks of Peterborough, kept the Brook House contemporaneously with Mr. L. M. Brooks' livery business in connection therewith, until he removed to his present place of residence. Altogether, Mr. Brooks owned a livery and cartage business in Oshawa for about twenty-five years, and there was no man better known. Mr. Brooks was in his 62nd year at the time of his death.

Besides his widow, who was a daughter of the late Mr. Edward Whiting, Mr. Brooks leaves of immediate relatives to mourn their loss one brother, Mr. J. M. Brooks of Peterborough, and three sisters, Mrs. Smith of Schenectady, N.Y.; Mrs. Sanford of Richford, N.Y., and Mrs. Pickell of town. Besides the latter, Mrs. Smith, of his sisters, was present at the obsequies.

The late Mr. Brooks was a member of the Oshawa Water Commission in 1912, a member of the Town Council in 1913, and contested the deputy-reeveship with Mr. Regan in the 1913-14 elections. He was an adherent of the Anglican Church, a member of Lebanon Lodge, A. F. & A.A., and a member of the Mystical Shrine of Masonry. He was also a member of Corinthian Lodge, I.O.O. F.

A GOOD TIME AT THE Y. M. C. A.

A very enjoyable time was spent by the Intermediate Leaders' Corps and their lady friends at the Y.M.C.A. last night. A corn roast had been planned, but owing to the weather the programme had to be altered. After a tennis match the boys and their friends returned to the Y.M.C.A. and there enjoyed roasted corn, toasted marshmallows, popcorn and apples, and a game of soft-ball was played.

RUSSIAN TROOPS HAVE CAPTURED 3,000 PRISONERS

Important Pass Is Captured By the Italians

To Try For Constantinople Allies Have Gigantic Plan

Russian Troops Are to Pour Down Through the Dobrudja—From Asia Too, They Will Advance—The Prussian General Staff Realized the Trend of the Allies' Campaign Only When It Was Too Late—German People Deceived.

MAY BE A DECIDING FACTOR

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, October 3.—The Paris correspondent of the Herald cabled as follows:

A mighty drive on Constantinople may bring the decision in the war before the end of the present year. The knowledge that this drive is coming is regarded as the explanation of the alarm felt in Germany, as shown by the refusal of the private bankers and moneyed classes to subscribe to the new loan, and by the speech delivered on Thursday last in the Reichstag by the Chancellor of the Empire, with its appeal for new sacrifices.

Th preparations for the march on the Turkish capital have long been under way, and as there is now no longer any motive for concealment, the subject is being alluded to in rather frank manner in the press of the allies.

The Prussian great general staff realized the trend of the allies' campaign only when it was too late. A desperate effort was made to retrieve the situation when Field Marshal Von Hindenburg was appointed to the supreme command, Field Marshal Von Mackensen being sent to bar the road southward through Bulgaria to the Russians, and for a moment there was concern in the camps of the allies lest he should succeed in creating a situation which would halt for an appreciable time the projected operations of the Russians and Roumanians.

GERMAN PEOPLE DECEIVED.

The false statement which was published in Germany to the effect that Field Marshal Von Mackensen had turned and was rolling up the Russian left, preparatory to the taking of Bucharest, and the treating of Roumania as Serbia has been treated, and to the destruction of the whole Russian army —a statement which has been left without rectification, and which apparently is still believed by the masses in Germany—shows in the plainest way the bewilderment of the military authorities in Berlin, and their anxiety to prevent the public from learning the facts.

All previous information given out regarding the intentions of the allies in the southeastern field was designed to furnish the impression that Niah or Sofia was the objective of the projected Russian movement southward through Roumania. The conquest of either of these cities would be of great importance to the allies, but would be trivial in camparison with that of Constantinople.

The military onlookers in the allied countries express astonishment that the Prussian military chiefs committed the blunder of not appreciating the situation, or at least of not taking into account and making provision for a move of this kind. The operations of the great Russian army under the command of the Grand Duke Nicholas in Armenia, one critic says, would have aroused suspicion in the minds of any enemy leaders who were not blinded by their own theories and principles and their own self-importance.

The Grand Duke's army, using the conquered port of Trebizond as a base, is reported to have a vitally important part in the conquest of Constantinople. Although the plans of the allies are, of course, kept secret, it is regarded as established that the attack against the well-guarded capital of the Ottoman Empire will this time be made simultaneously from the Bosphorus side of the Straits, and from the land side by armies operating through Bulgaria.

MAY LAND IN BULGARIA.

It is believed that the bulk of the Russian army in Asia Minor, composed of hardened veterans, will be landed on the Bulgarian coast to cooperate with the armies moving southward, although it has also been suggested that it may be disembarked at Constantza to aid the combined Russian and Roumanian forces in sweeping aside the present opposing Bulgarian-Turkish-Prussian troops under Field Marshal Von Mackensen.

Time and the exigencies of the situation will decide that point. The real purpose of the Salonika adventure, which for many months was a problem with which the military observers wrestled, is now clearly perceived. With the new light comes a high tribute to the French leaders who were responsible for it.

While General Joffre's part in deciding on the expedition had been well known and much discussed, that of the head of the French Government, Mr. Aristide Briand, was less well known. To Mr. Briand are now being paid compliments of the very highest kind in the press of the allies, and particularly in France, Italy and Russia.

PRAISE FOR BRIAND.

It is known that this far-sighted Statesman had difficulties of all kinds to overcome in convincing others of the accuracy of his judgment regarding the section where a decision could best be sought, and the consequent desirability of building up a great military force at Salonika, and that it was only by tireless insistence that he succeeded in bringing it about. To win the war quickly and decisively, he argued, communications must be opened up with Russia in order that France and Great Britain might supply the great masses of Russian recruits with equipment and with artillery, arms and ammunition. Through the present lines, by Archangel or overland from Siberia, this cannot be satisfactorily done.

"The suggestion that the punishment of Bulgaria is indispensable," says DeLanessan, one time French Minister of Marine, in the Paris Journal, "is, of course, true; but the conquest of Constantinople is urgent. We are already in autumn, winter will soon be here, and during the winter the communications with Russia from Great Britain and France through Archangel will be interrupted.

"Now it is of the highest importance that the present point in the war relations be maintained as close and as frequent as possible between all the nations and all the armies of the entente.

"The taking of Constantinople means the opening of the Dardanelles; it means the condemning of the Turkish army in Asia to death or capitulation, it means Bulgaria at the mercy of the allies; it means for the central empires a defeat forecasting the final collapse."

To show the magnitude of the allied operation referred to in the above despatch, it is only necessary to state that the Russians now fighting their way through Dobrudja (Eastern Roumania) are 300 miles from Constantinople, and the British on the East Salonika front are a like distance from it, as the crow flies. As for Grand Duke Nicholas in Asia Minor, he is between five and six hundred miles from the Turk capital.

FRENCH MONITORS BOMBARD ST. QUENTIN, KEY TO PERONNE

Naval Guns Aiding in Manoeuvres Which Will Shortly Result in Capture of Peronne Itself--Third Cable From Henry Wood Tells of Siege

Special cable by Henry Wood, accredited representative on the Somme front by invitation of the French Government.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES BEFORE PERONNE, October 3.—Naval forces have joined the allies here in the great land battle of the Somme, 70 miles from the sea.

Iron-clad monitors, utilizing France's magnificent network of canals along the Somme, centring at Peronne are participating in the daily bombardment of Mount St. Quentin, which dominates Peronne from the northeast. They advance slowly on the German stronghold, as the land lines creep forward, and have done much effective work.

Mount St. Quentin, constituting the key to the defence of Peronne, is slowly and steadily being encircled by the French in the same manner that preceded the capture of Combles. The position, a strong one, stands at the summit of a hill overlooking Peronne.

Marine gunners, who serve the pieces aboard the monitors, go about their business in the same methodical, clock-work manner as ordinary workmen beginning their day's labour. After their morning plunge in the canal and breakfast, they begin tuning up the guns.

On land, the same mechanical process goes on. The artillerymen "wash up," eat breakfast and then, apparently without the necessity of the officer's presence, begin serving the guns on scheduled time, like so many factory employees beginning work on the whistle. Occasional German shells, falling near, never interrupt for a single instant the routine of their day's labour. Only the lunch hour does that.

TOWN IS ALREADY SMASHED BY GUNFIRE.

From an artillery observation post directly facing Mount St. Quentin, I watched the French's methodical artillery advance, encircling the village of Mount St. Quentin. The town itself already has suffered the same fate as the 40 villages captured to date by the allies. It is completely reduced to heaps of brick bats and protruding tree stumps.

The Germans, however, still retain strongly fortified positions, especially in the cellars. The French artillery was completely encircling the hill of the village for the purpose of interrupting German communication with the rear, while occasional shells were directed at Mount St. Quentin itself, to keep the Germans busy in their dugouts and cellars. Invariably these shells set up great red clouds of brick dust from the pulverized houses. The bulk of the artillery continued its methodical destruction of the German defences which still separate the French first line trenches from the base of the hill.

When the proper time comes, Mount St. Quentin will be taken by the French, and with a minimum loss in men, an artillery officer told me yesterday. In the final assault, the infantry will dash forward, preceded 100 yards by a curtain fire of shells that will not permit the surviving Germans to inflict any serious losses.

COMBLES UNDERWENT MOST TERRIFIC SIEGE IN HISTORY

(By Henry Wood.)

With the French Armies, near Combles.—Horses, lashed into a furious gallop by mad riders, dashing forward over a sunken road with huge quantities of ammunition; aeroplanes, hovering above; vulture-like, awaiting the fall of Combles; men sweating, fighting their way forward in shell-pocketed roads in terrible shell-fire—

These were some of the dramatic scenes that preceded the capture of the strongly fortified village that had blocked the Allied advance north of the Somme.

Fall a Certainty.

Eventual capture of Combles became a certainty on Tuesday morning when French cavalry patrols, advancing northeastward, and English cavalry patrols, thrusting southeastward, met east of Combles. They thus completely encircled the village, cutting off the last communications with the German army in the rear.

On the same morning I approached Combles from the west, starting from Maricourt, the junction point from which the French and English offensive was launched July 1, and traversing each successive step in the advance made in the intervening three months toward the attainment of this first great objective. When we arrived within less than a mile and a quarter of Combles, the town itself was then undergoing the final bombardment and assault.

Siege Methods Employed.

Although Combles was a mere village of 1,000 inhabitants, the Germans had so fortified every house, especially the cellars, where machine guns were installed, that the Allies were forced to employ siege methods. They completely encircled the town with their heavy artillery, which gradually closed in with every advance of the infantry lines.

From the standpoint of the enormous quantity of artillery massed against it, and also from the incalculable number of shells rained into it, Combles can easily boast of having undergone the most terrific siege in the history of the world.

Methodical Progress.

It was only on reaching the most advanced artillery lines before Combles that one could grasp mathematically the methodical progress which had rendered the Allies' new tactics of advancing by heavy artillery absolutely irresistible, though the final artillery lines before Combles consisted of comparatively light batteries. These had been rushed forward during the night over ground rendered impassable by shell holes to everything but foot soldiers.

But while the troops were tugging guns across this ground, a veritable army of soldiers had sunk a tortuous, winding roadway several feet below the surface of the ground, paving it with bricks from nearby houses, wrecked by artillery fire. Over this when we arrived early the next morning, munition caissons, screened from the enemy's observation by the depth of the roadway, drawn by four, six or even eight horses, were dashing along every moment with an incredible number of shells necessary to feed those advance lines of artillery, which could be reached in no other way.

Stream of Munitions.

Back from these advanced lines fed by galloping, careening caissons, were thousands more soldiers, methodically transforming what had been on the preceding days caisson road, into highways capable of sustaining large automobile convoys bringing up heavier munitions for heavier artillery that had supplanted the lighter guns now further advanced during the night. Farther behind these automobile fed artillery lines was still a third army of workmen, steadily constructing railways which were bringing up artillery so gigantic that not only it, but its shells can be transported only on specially constructed railways. These huge pieces were supplanting the more transportable automobile fed pieces already rushed forward.

If Combles fell before a methodical heavy artillery advance and encirclement, it fell equally before the methodical construction of roadways, from the dirt and brick bedded waggon roads to the full gauged rock ballasted steel railways. This method marks the allied advance on the entire 30 mile Somme front.

TO-DAY

his descendant, Mr. J. Cartier of 2912 Clarke Street, Montreal, has been cured of eczema by essences of roots and herbs. These, however, instead of being crude as used by his ancestor, were prepared for modern use and put up in the form of Zam-Buk. Mr. Cartier, who is Justice of the Peace and Assistant Clerk of the Circuit Court of Montreal, says there is nothing that can compare with Zam-Buk for the treatment of skin diseases. He goes on:

"Allow me to express to you my gratitude for the benefit I derived from the use of Zam-Buk. It is the best remedy obtainable for eczema. I always keep it in the house as our family doctor; its healing and curative power is immense. I have no objection to your publishing my letter, as I wish everyone to know the high quality of Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk is best, not only for eczema, but also for ringworm, ulcers, abscesses, running sores, old wounds, blood-poisoning, boils, piles, burns, scalds, cuts and all skin injuries. All druggists or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

GERMANS' CAPTIVES SUFFER

British Prisoners Have Happier Lot in Switzerland, However.

Under the caption "The Cruelties of Rubleben," and "The Paradise of Switzerland" the British official Press Bureau has issued a statement dealing with British war prisoners in Germany and in Switzerland, it says:

"Members of the last monthly batch of British prisoners released from the camp for interned civilians at Rubleben had some terrible stories to tell when they reached London of the unnecessary cruelties inflicted on them by their jailers. They confirmed the statement in Mr. Gerard's last report that the authorities have done nothing, although they have had two years for the effort, to ameliorate the conditions of life in the horse-box dwellings which form the prison. But for the food parcels sent from England many would be starved.

Abraham Johnson, one of the party was carried from the boat to the train on a stretcher. He was in an advanced state of gastric trouble occasioned, he said, by the long regimen of bad food. For the last ten weeks of his stay at Rubleben he was in a hospital, too weak to move. The doctor would not admit that his condition had been aggravated by his 'diet' and he entered him in the records as having a ruptured stomach, caused by a blow.

There are only two medicines now available at Rubleben for every kind of complaint, said Mr. Johnson, and they are salts and aspirin. One man who was brought into my lazarette suffering from nervous gastritis was examined by the doctor, who diagnosed something entirely different, and prescribed a certain medicine. As that particular drug could not be obtained the doctor changed the diagnosis. And this happened three times, the final prescription being 'one ration of oatmeal for breakfast.'

One poor patient, Dr. Hopp, a South African, was suffering from a complaint which only opium could relieve. There was no opium, and in his great agony he complained to the soldier in charge. The soldier reported him to insubordination, and he was promptly sentenced to one month's solitary confinement and locked in a tiny cell adjoining the kitchen.

There is real relief in turning from this picture to that of the happier lot which a certain number of British prisoners of war now enjoy who have been transferred from Germany to Switzerland. These are still interned but they find life at Chateau d'Oex paradise compared with what they have previously endured. About 1,200 British prisoners—practically all wounded or invalids—are now at Chateau d'Oex. When they first arrived not only were they fitted out with new uniforms by the British War Office, but all the men found a parcel of underclothing and other necessaries awaiting them on their arrival, all provided by the British Red Cross; and now they look once more as neat and almost as fresh as soldiers in England.

Some of the officers and men who were on crutches when they arrived, are now either walking with sticks or have artificial limbs. The officers go to Lausanne when necessary, to consult the famous specialist, Professor Cesar Roux, who refuses to take a fee from them. Some of the men who require operations have been sent to Lucerne, where there is a special surgical hospital for interned prisoners of war. The British soldiers are, of course, in a ward by themselves, but for all prisoners of war able to leave their beds, whether German, French or British, a common dining room was provided, the Swiss authorities apparently never realizing what they were doing in allowing such an arrangement. The first day, however, when some of the British soldiers took their places at the table, they noticed some Boches there also. Accordingly they rose and left the room at once, since when they have had their own dining room.

CELLULOID USED IN NEW WOUND DRESSING.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—The substitution of celluloid for lint is a new method of wound dressing which claims to relieve the pain of the suffering soldier when having his wounds attended to.

This method, a hospital surgeon told The American yesterday, "has the advantage over even the perforated oil silk, which gives fairly good results, but has the drawbacks of being very difficult to sterilize and is very perishable. There are two good reasons why the celluloid method of dressing is to be approved, if it fulfills the claims made for it. One is that the healing of a large wound is often retarded by the general state of depression into which the patient falls by the pain caused in the dressing of it. The other is that gauze bandages, when laid directly on a raw wound, must necessarily, in the process of removal, tear away from their site certain of the tiny new cells which are formed by nature in effecting her cure. Every cell thus destroyed has to be remade and so healing is delayed."

Good Old Home-Made Family Cough Remedy

Much Better than the Ready-Made Kind—Simply and Cheaply Prepared.

If you combined the curative properties of every known "ready-made" cough remedy, you would hardly have in them all the curative power that lies in this simple "home-made" cough syrup which takes only a few minutes to prepare.

Get from any druggist 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth), pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. The total cost is about 54 cents and gives you 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50. Tastes pleasant and never spoils.

This Pinex and sugar syrup preparation gets right at the cause of a cough and gives almost immediate relief. It stops the phlegm, stops the nasty throat tickle and heals the sore, irritated membranes that line the throat, lung and bronchial tubes, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. A day's use will usually overcome the ordinary cough and for bronchitis, croup, whooping cough and bronchial asthma, there is nothing better.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol and has been used for generations to break up severe coughs.

To avoid disappointment, be sure to ask your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded, goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Si, the Siwash,

In a Wreck on Puget Sound

By JOHN H. WALSH

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Si is lying on my bunk, wrapped in my Grand Army coat. His name really ain't Si; it's Tom. But I call him Si, which is short for Siwash—a Siwash being a Puget sound Indian.

Si is a Siwash all right, and, though he's only four years old and he's a half breed, he looks like old Chief Seattle. And he treats me as an equal—and he gets away with it, too—though I'm sixty-nine. That shows character.

And Si's had experience!

Take just this collision experience. That won't come to anybody else for ten thousand years, and here Si has had it before he's four.

Why, I have had enough adventures myself, for I've been ship keeper on the U. S. S. Stalwart here at the Sierra navy yard for fifteen and three-quarter years. But Si has me sewed up for plenty on adventure, though I could tell yarns of my own.

But first I'm setting it down about Si, his ma and the collision of the Humahuma and the Stalwart. I'll tell about myself when I've got leisure.

However, I do want to say in passing, while I think of it, that ship keeping is the most exacting work there is. You have to know the name of your ship, and to remember what day is pay day, and when to come off watch, and when to go on, and I tell you it takes brains to keep all those things straight in your mind.

Then once in a year they complicate things by putting your ship in a dry-dock or by changing her anchorage a little, and you have to change your habits, which is hard. And it's because it is such exacting work as I've described that they always keep responsible men like us old soldiers on such jobs.

Of course it's a strain, and I suppose I could not have held the job so long if I didn't have iron nerves.

You see, I know myself that I have iron nerves, because General Thomas told me so when he saw me eating hardtack in a trench during the Chickamauga skirmish. And I've needed my iron nerves in ship keeping, but a lot of people don't understand why.

For example, there is a gentleman in Sierraton who digs clams with a shovel and peddles them with a wheelbarrow, and he said once he thought he'd try ship keeping for a rest.

I laughed at him, and then I warned him he couldn't stand it, which was true, too. However, I'm writing about Si, and I'll write about digging clams when I have time for it, for I'm as good a clam digger as there is on Puget sound, which is saying a lot, for all the smartest men out here were digging clams twenty years ago.

Si's ma used to have an awfully hard time making a living, and from time to time I've helped her a little at it, for I've had $2.20 per day right along, and I'm a bachelor and don't need all that money for myself.

So yesterday, which was pay day, I gave her $5, and I said, "Take Si to Seattle and see the sights." And she did it.

At least she put on her pink waist and her green shawl, and she hauled Si down to the boat by one arm, his feet dragging all the way.

After that I loafed around until evening, when I went to the Stalwart and relieved old man Keller.

After he'd left the ship I walked around and inspected things, as I always do, and I decided, as I've decided every day for ten years, that the Stalwart is still a mighty fine ship.

Pretty soon I moved around a little, and when I got aft and was looking over the rail under the stern light I could see young smelts in the still, oily water, and they looked like shreds cut out with a knife from a silver bar. And, oh, how solemn and still it was!

You could hear a gasoline boat two miles away thumping, missing strokes, stopping and then thumping again, and you could hear oarlocks squeaking their course across the bay.

At first it was clear overhead, and I could see the stars and the lights at the navy yard, and I could hear the sentries hail people in loud, important voices. And then the lights faded and blinked out, one by one, and I knew fog was shutting in on us. And the sounds seemed sort of muffled by the fog.

I went forward, then to the ship's bell under the bridge, and once a minute by watch I'd ring rapidly, and presently Bill Paterson on the Boston would ring, and afterward we'd hear Bixby on the Concord.

Well, I kept on ringing the bell. At first there weren't any steamer whistles sounding, but after a time I commenced to hear a dull, thrilling ooo-h, oo-h, from far away down the Narrows.

I knew at once that this was the Interboat from the city, the Humahuma, and that she was navigating by echoes, as they always do in fogs on this sound.

And then I got a feeling that Si and his ma would be on the boat, so I rang the bell faster and faster, for I didn't want the Humahuma to go colliding with the Stalwart and smashing Si and me up.

But the Humahuma's whistle got louder and louder until it sounded almost on top of us.

I was frantically disturbed, for I wasn't used to having ships come so close, and I rang the bell as though I were being paid a dollar a stroke—but no effect!

It got so I could hear the engines thump, thump, and hear the water turn off from the cutwater with a continuous, moist, rustling sound.

Then suddenly the whole Humahuma leaped out of the fog, coming straight at me, every light burning, coming full speed, right on top of me!

I stopped ringing and jumped to the rail, and during two seconds I swore and roared and pulled my beard, and then she hit us right amidships, and the shock sprawled me on the deck on my back and knocked the wind out of me.

The Humahuma had hit the Stalwart square, and she had cut us half in two. But she backed out so quickly that before I could get to my feet she was driving both engines astern, and she was already clear of us.

Just a moment later she disappeared in the fog, but I saw, nevertheless, that her bow was stove in and ruptured and that on deck there was a barndoor of a woman's figure which had in its arms a child.

I felt sure from their shapes that the woman and child would be Mrs. Siddons and Si.

Would the Humahuma sink?

I was sure she would, from what I had seen. And then I noticed that my own ship, the old Stalwart, was sinking too. What to do?

I ran to the splintered hole, and I heard the water whistling as it rushed in, like wind in the treetops, only in sharper notes.

What to do?

I jumped and rang the alarm call on the bell, and the ships ahead passed it along. I rang it again and again, and then a frail skiff with a half grown boy in it appeared alongside out of the fog.

"I'll take you off, uncle!" said the boy.

I told him not to be familiar, that I wasn't his uncle at all and that as for going off with him in his skiff I couldn't.

"I'm sort of captain," said I, "and I can't leave. You knew yourself a ship keeper can't go without being relieved, his job is to stay with his ship. But I'm much obliged to you, and I'd appreciate it more yet if you'd run down to the Humahuma and pick up some friends of mine."

The boy bellered. "Aw, come on, you nutty old devil, she's sinkin'!"

But I said: "No, I'm staying, though I'd like well to see how Si and his ma are getting along, and I wish you'd go down for me and see."

But just then another skiff came out of the silvery fog, and it carried the long old admiral himself, going in a wherry, with two bluejackets h'isting him along.

"Ogre!" he cried, abreast the gangway, and then he called to me: "Why don't you get off the ship? She's sinking."

I saluted him just as I'd saluted Thomas at Chickamauga and says:

"Can't till I'm relieved."

And do you know he seemed to get real mad. He says:

"You're relieved now. Haven't you got any sense in your head? Get out of that into the skiff! Give way, lads!"

"All right, sir," says I. "If she's orders she goes, and I'm much obliged to you."

And I jumped into the skiff with the boy, and we followed the admiral's boat through the fog toward where we could hear muffled shouts and cries.

The Humahuma sank before we arrived, and we were soon in the midst of floating buckets, boards and articles of clothing. But there were a good many shore boats already there, and the survivors were all picked up so far as could be seen.

So we stuffed looking in the various boats for Si and his ma, but we couldn't find them, though we rowed around and around and around.

Finally the other boats commenced to go in shore, one by one, but we kept on rowing until no one was there except the pale faced boy and me.

We'd row a few strokes, then stop to listen and see if the heavy, leaden, foggy silence wouldn't be broken.

Finally the silence was broken. A faint moaning noise came from out in the white fog some place.

We pulled for it; then we paused and listened, hoping to hear it again.

When we did hear it again I climbed to the bow, and we pulled and paused and pulled and paused.

"Way 'nuff!" I cried. "Give me an oar. I'll paddle."

And so I came to the shadow, gently and carefully, and it was Si and his ma that had made the shadow. Si was all right.

He was wrapped in a life preserver, and he was unharmed, except that his back was wet and that he was hungry and sleepy. But his ma lay face downward, dead—drowned in some mysterious fashion by the very buoyancy of the life preserver she wore.

I called loudly, and some boats came out and helped me with Mrs. Siddons' body. But I took Si myself.

I wrapped him up in my new Grand Army coat, and I took him straight home, and, though some women came in, I fixed for his comfort myself.

I gave him some milk and a teaspoonful of brandy, and then I wrapped him in my army coat again, and he went to sleep chewing his knuckle, which shows that he was perfectly satisfied.

And I hereby state that Si's title to that Grand Army coat is good. I'm taking care of Si, and I guess iron nerve will help in that just as it does in everything else.

800,000 PRISONERS TILL RUSSIA'S FARMS

Petrograd, Sept. 30. —Orders have recently been issued by the Minister for Agriculture to include German and Hungarian prisoners of war along with the Austrian prisoners, who are now employed in the Russian factories and in farm work. There are no less than 400,000 Austrian war prisoners who are working under the control of the Department of Agriculture. The new German and Hungarian prisoners, who have been sent to work along with their Austrian allies in the fields, bring the total up to 800,000. It is further estimated that all the enemy war prisoners now in Russia, except those invalided, are engaged in some useful employment for the good of the State.

AGAIN REFUSES TO DISCHARGE MEN IN SPANKING EPISODE

London, Sept. 30.—Although their discharge from the C.E.F. has been recommended by Lieut.-Colonel Geo. C. Royce, brigade commander of the 9th (Western Ontario) Brigade at Camp Borden, and has been requested by Major E. M. McLean, acting commander of the 142nd, Ptes. Lucien Belanger and Renton, two of the three principals in the famous "spanking" episode at the camp, that is expected to cost Temporary Lt.-Col. C. M. R. Graham his commission, they are still in uniform and still members of the 142nd.

Instructions to discharge Ptes. Renton and Belanger have been received at local headquarters from Major E. M. McLean, at present in command of London's Own. The instructions were not acted on but a wire was sent in reply asking the acting O. C. to quote headquarters authority.

In the meantime the two privates have been given an extension of their leave.

REFUSES TO TALK.

Private Renton, seen by a reporter, refused oifwyort porter from the Advertiser re the affair. He stated that he had been ordered to "say nothing," and he further proved that he was an adept at obeying orders by complying strictly.

No instructions were received at headquarters regarding the case of Lieut.-Col. C. M. R. Graham. This was not unexpected as the case is outside the province of No. 1 military district.

This is the second time the discharge of men has been ordered and the second time it has been refused by local headquarters until such time as proper cause is given for it.

SIGNIFICANT STATEMENT.

It might be considered the only new development in the case. However the fact that Major-Gen. Gwatkin, Chief of the Canadian general staff, has been reported to have said that nothing but dismissal of the acting colonel would meet the requirements of the case, is considered significant here.

If headquarters at Camp Borden has ordered the discharge of the soldier who was "spanked" and of the soldier who "spanked" him, the obvious fate of the officer held responsible seems assured, according to the local militia officers.

STRIPS HIM OF RANK.

The acceptance of the resignation that Lt.-Colonel Graham was asked to place in the hands of Major-General W. A. Logie, when the case was first reported to the camp commandant at Borden would automatically strip him of his present rank. Col. Graham was selected to serve as commander of the 142nd from civilian life and his appointment was a temporary one, being granted specifically "while in command of the 142nd Overseas Battalion." His dismissal from that command would mean the termination of his military connection and his retirement to civil life without the title of lieutenant-colonel.

SAYS 23,000 SAVED PARIS.

M. Rouquette Asserts Briand's Idea of Taxicab Army Foiled von Kluck.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—M. Louis Rouquette, special envoy to the United States from the French Ministry of Commerce, speaking before the Alliance Francaise in Carnegie Hall, said that France owed to Aristide Briand, now the Premier, the idea of rushing her troops in taxicabs against the Germans sweeping upon Paris at the beginning of the war.

M. Briand has not received the full measure of credit heretofore for his idea" said M. Rouquette, "The phantom army which turned von Kluck's right flank was made up of only 23,000 men, carried to the battlefields in 3,000 taxis. This number was sufficiently large to deceive the Germans, who thought it was even greater, and the day was saved."

"The genius of the French, reunited to that of the Anglo-Saxon," said M. Rouquette, "has made possible a resistance against the organized cunning of the Germans. That the Germans are weakening is shown by the fact that the prisoners whom we now take at the front are young boys, fresh from the schools and shops, who have had little training in warfare and whose spirit is easily broken by the horrors of the battlefield."

Turn over a new leaf

Now that the warm days are here leave the heavy, overheating foods for something lighter and easily digested. EASE FOR THE FARMER.

To Provide It Is Aim of Many Modern Inventions.

Modern inventions are making life easy for the agriculturist. Some time ago it was complained that the farmer would no longer buy an implement that was not provided with a seat. This requirement has been filled in the majority of farm machines, but the new gasoline tractor for use in gardens, etc., does not as yet come up to this specification. A modification relieving the chauffeur of fatigue while enabling him to keep its nose pointed at mankind's inveterate enemy, weeds, would make it a great agricultural hit of the age.

A weed has been defined as a plant growing where it is not wanted. Cynics have alleged it the only growth not affected by disease or an insect pest. They have gone further in their pessimism and declared that, as soon as human ingenuity has found a use for a weed it immediately develops a susceptibility to those foes. Doubtless the enemy was there, but overlooked.

The weed has always been the farmer's most persistent adversary, being regarded as part of the pritual curse which has produced so much perspiration. Uprooted, it re-establishes itself; destroyed, it leaves its roots and seeds as a legacy. The late Charles Dudley Warner waxed pathetic over the vices of that ornery weed called "pusley." No one knows how many might-have-been farmers have been sent to city machine shops through a pronounced aversion to spending Saturday afternoons pulling weeds instead of going fishing, nor how many lads, sore at a stern father whose preferences were for industry rather than recreation, have resolved that a son of theirs should not be thus broken in back and will. Sugar beet culture succeeded in Michigan only after foreign families had been imported to do the weeding, while the American should be doing it he is trying to invent a machine to do it for him.

"Great weeds do grow apace," according to Shakespeare, and if rank growth indicates soil fertility, certain vacant lots in town have great but dormant capabilities as gardens which are now, to our shame be it said, given over to burdock, pigweed, Canada thistles and other weeds, each of which is well provided with means of perpetuation which make them a menace to the neighbours.—Detroit Free Press.

Mink, a fur that is beautiful or ugly, according to the age of the lit tle animal that wore it first, is coming in again.

SOCIETY "BAD-MEN"

(By Herbert Kaufman)

You know men with the morals of a hyena; vote them in your clubs, laugh at their rancid anecdotes, listen to their tawdry adventures, realize what blighters they are, and yet expose your friends and family to the peril of their acquaintanceship.

Husbands, brothers and fathers are too often responsible for the slanders which smirch their homes.

They either tolerate and condone the "wrong sins" or flatter themselves that nothing out of the way can possibly happen to their particular women.

The old frontiers were fag safes for girls than modern communities. Desperadoes at least possessed a certain sense of chivalry.

But cities are filled with society "bad-men"—the sneak with a "hundred notches" on his tongue—every time he shoots his mouth, some woman's reputation dies.

If you don't respect and protect your own wives and sisters, you can not expect a cur to honour them.

Choice Recipes

VEGETABLE MARROW PUFFLETS

Take some neat pieces of boiled vegetable marrow, salt and pepper them and, if liked, sprinkle with grated cheese. Encase in pastry. Moisten the edges and press together, bake and serve hot.

CURRY PUFFS.

Take the remains of some curry and rice and mince it finely and use to fill some finger shaped or triangular puffs. These make a good breakfast or luncheon dish. Indeed, any well flavored fine mince can be successfully re-served in this famous and as only about one teaspoonful is needed for each puff a very little meat goes a long way.

BACON AND EGG PUFFS

Take some scrambled egg and minced cooked bacon (if you are short of eggs add some very fine breadcrumbs when making the scrambled egg—their presence can scarcely be detected) and use it as a filling for puffs.

MUSHROOM PUFFS.

Take some stewed mushrooms and cut them into medium sized pieces. Add some cooked peas or dice of bacon.

SARDINE PUFFS

Skin and bone the sardines and enclose them in fingers of the puff pastry. Serve hot or cold.

MINCEMEAT FINGERS

As a change from the ordinary mince pie use the mince meat filling for puff pastry fingers. Serve hot or cold.

COTTAGE CHEESE.

The milk for cottage cheese should be just freshly thickened so as not to be too sour. Heat to 100 degrees either by setting direct on the stove or in a pan of boiling water, stirring all the time to ensure even heating. An easier way is to pour into the milk nearly an equal amount of boiling water, stirring the milk as you pour. Drain out all the whey, a three-cornered bag is best, then moisten with sweet cream and season with salt and pepper. Melted butter may be used instead of cream if necessary. If the milk is heated too much the curd will be tough and indigestible.

Hang your clothes out with the opening toward the wind; they will dry much more quickly.

If both countries began working at the Channel tunnel in real earnest to-morrow it is estimated that the average boring would be 120 yards a day, and that in July, 1921, the whole would be complete for traffic between, say, Aberdeen and Marseilles.—M. Yves Guoyet.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

News of the most recent happenings in the world of fashion is given in the accompanying illustration. It tells that the over blouse or jumper effect in dresses for fall will be held in high favor. The designer struck midway between the dashing and conservative, giving a model that no one can deny is smart and graceful.

The separate guimpe in plain material has its collar carried over the shoulders of the jumper and edged with a bias strip of the plaided fabric, and the sleeve is finished with a very attractive cuff. The plainness of the jumper, which is just gathered at the waistline where it is joined to the skirt, is a marked fashion feature.

The skirt is cut in two gores and has for novelty an apron front of the plaided material, with the side sections of plain fabric laid in plaits. From waistline to hip buttons trim the skirt at the side and a long sash of the plain fabric is arranged about the waistline and draped prettily by just eyes in front. In the way of embellishment tassels are the latest and may be added to the sash ends if one like. The garment closes at the left side. Serge and plaided silk is but one combination for a dress of this design.

The pattern, No. 7,945, is cut in sizes 36 and 40. To make it size 36 will require 3 yards of 36 inch plain material and 3¼ yards plaided.

You may obtain this pattern by sending [illegible] to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents; or 5 for 50 cents.

BRITISH POST OFFICE VS. HUN SMUGGLERS

Why Neutral Mails Must Be Searched —Ingenious Tricks To Deceive Are Many

The War Museum in the British Postal Censor's office contains thousands of queer things extracted from letters intended to be sent abroad. It resembles a German jumble sale. There are tables loaded with an extraordinary variety of small articles, such as the British blockade makes it difficult for the Germans to get. The rubber exhibits are the best illustration of German efficiency in finding a loophole in the blockade. There are some neat packages of pure rubber addressed to Hamburg. They are samples of some three thousand similar packages taken from registered letter bags and addressed to a complacent neutral for forwarding to Germany. A favorite dodge is to make up a package that looks like a magazine roll, but which, when examined, is found to contain rubber in sheet form. One of the cleverest ideas that originated in America was to make rubber in the form of a popular brand of golf ball, the appearance of which would deceive the most expert golfer, until he tried to make it bounce.

Rubber in Letters

It occurred to one manufacturer to put a thin slip of rubber into a letter and there were more than three thousand of these letters in one single mail bag. Many parcels have been found to have double covers. When the outer cover is removed another is found inside addressed to some German firm and fully stamped with stamps of the neutral country to which the outside cover was addressed. The most common form of bogus letter parcel is the bundle of newspapers. These bundles look quite innocent, but the two ends are plugs of newspapers and between them is a long calico bag which may contain rice, tea, coffee, oatmeal or any other kind of food that will keep sufficiently long.

Coffee and Bacon!

Two pounds of coffee have been found in what looked like a roll of German-American newspapers. The prize exhibit in this line is a twelve pound piece of bacon, or rather its wrapping, for the bacon itself was in a state of decay when found. Had it reached Germany in eatable condition its value would have been at least $7. Large packages of coffee, trying to look like printed matter, were plastered with stamps. Inside corrugated cardboard supposed to contain photographs have been found bars of nickel and even platinum.

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally If You Eat Meat Regularly

No man or woman who eats meat regularly can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Meat forms uric acid which clogs the kidney pores so they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood, then you get sick. Nearly all rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to neutralize the acids in urine so it no longer causes irritation, thus ending bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which all regular meat eaters should take now and then to keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby avoiding serious kidney complications.

There is nothing more indigestible than bread that is not baked thoroughly.

MINISTER OFFICER LEAVING REGIMENT

Minister Who Enlisted for Fighting Cannot Pass.

WOODSTOCK, Ont., Oct. 2.—Capt. J. M. Warner has withdrawn from the 168th Battalion owing to physical unfitness. Capt. Wagner was Minister of the First Baptist Church here until January when he resigned to enter the army with a provisional captaincy. It is likely that he will resume his pastorate here.

A New Blood-Food Has Been Discovered That Works Wonders

SAID TO PUT NEW LIFE INTO PEOPLE THAT ARE RUN-DOWN.

For years doctors have been searching for a combination that would enable them to inject into thin blood the elements it lacked. This can now be done, and any weak-blooded person can quickly be made strong and well.

Already a small army of ailing people has proved the merit of taking after each meal with a sip or two of water, two chocolate-coated Ferrozone Tablets. This is easily done, and even one week's use of this wonderful blood-food will prove how nourishing and strengthening and flesh-building the treatment is.

Just think of it—Ferrozone uplifts the entire nervous system, removes the blood, makes it rich and red — gives the sort of aid that's needed in throwing off weakness and langour.

Tens of thousands enjoy the advantages of renewed health through Ferrozone;—if you'll only use it, you'll surely grow strong too; its beneficial action is noticed even in a week. You see it goes right to work, removes the causes of the trouble and then quickly makes a cure.

For those who sleep poorly and have nervous apprehensions, Ferrozone is a boon; it is a specialist in such cases.

Where there is paleness, poor appetite and langour, Ferrozone makes the patient feel like new in a few days.

In tiredness, nerve exhaustion, spring fever and debility, the power of Ferrozone is known from coast to coast and universally used with grand results.

Let Ferrozone build you up, let it win you back to robust health,—it will do so quickly if you give it the chance. Sold by all dealers. 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50. Remember the name Ferrozone.

FUNNY FACES AND ARABS

Antics Get Food for English Prisoners Africa

Captain Gwatkin-Williams has published an interesting account of the nineteen weeks spent by him and the survivors of his crew as prisoners of the Senussi in the Libyan desert after his ship was torpedoed by a German submarine in the Mediterranean. "Racial expression," he says, "appears to be very limited among the Arabs and I soon fell into the spirit of the game by doing my 'tricks,' which generally got us a more liberal supply of food, the tricks being no more than assuming an expression of hauteur, superciliousness, contempt or vanity. These caused unfailing yells of laughter and had to be many times repeated, and after displaying my gold tooth, tattoos, medal ribbon, and diary, the show was considered finished, and we were generally rewarded with dates and milk."

In another place he says the Arabs disdained removing his head as the best way of getting the gold tooth. "Civilised dental treatment always arouses great interest in this land of perfect teeth, and I well remember an occasion when Lieutenant Tanner put the whole of our guards to flight by opening his mouth and letting fall his upper plate of false teeth."

Austria's Old Bells

The famous bells of the Cathedral of Salzburg are no longer in existence. Like those of many other churches they have become victims of the war. Recently they were smashed up in the belfry by a crew of workingmen. The pieces were sent to different munition factories where they have been used for the manufacture of shells for Austria. The bells were more than three centuries old and the largest one weighed more than three tons.

Fights Against Britain

Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein, who is fighting in Germany, is a grandson of Queen Victoria. Before the war he was a prominent figure in London. He is the ultimate heir to the titles and estates of the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein-Augustenburg. His brother, Prince Christian Victor, died in the South African War.

LIKE BATTLING OF GODS

Describing a voyage over enemy lines in France with a British airman a newspaper correspondent writes: "One thing which it taught me was the joy of fight. My trip was only a trivial incident. But it has increased tenfold my great admiration for the men who handle these machines, as my pilot handled mine, who take them up to three and four times the height to which I went, not staying on this side of that dreadful line of desolation, but piercing it, and patrolling, day by day, those upper regions of the enemy's country, to find him when he rises there above the clouds, and beat him down to earth again. War nowadays, in most of its aspects is a terribly sordid thing. But this fighting of the airmen is more than the fighting of our ancient heroes, and comes nearer to the battling of the old gods than anything that men have done or dreamed."

SERBIA SAVES HER SOUL

Little Nation That Sacrifices But Cannot Be Killed

An Englishman writes: One hundred and fifty thousand Serbians were collected here at Corfu, restored to health, supplied with ammunition, and, later, taken to Salonika, once again to fight for their land. A nation which has almost literally risen from the dead in this manner may well be looked to as the possessor of a powerful spiritual personality. If there was ever any doubt about this, Father Velimirovitch, a Serbian priest and theologian, has certainly dispelled it. In a little book entitled The Soul of Serbia we seem to catch the explanation of the enormous vital force which enabled that little country to put up its magnificent resistance to overwhelming odds. Perhaps the biggest thing in his book may be expressed in the shortest way by the quotation of a few words. Father Velimirovitch represents Serbia as saying, "I am dying for the cause for which England has been living. That cause comprehends the Christian ideals of freedom and of humane civilization. But my Soul cannot die, my Day will come. . . . I did my duty —I saved my soul." Extravagant words they may perhaps seem when cut away from their context. But the striking thing about them is that they do not seem at all high-falutin' in their place, because they are the sincere and genuine expression of a nation's individuality.

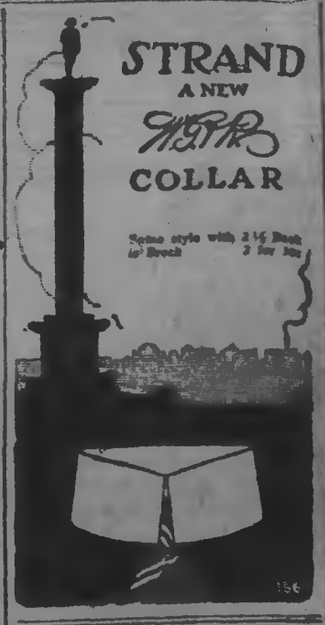
FIERCE RUSSIAN BIRD

Flier Drops Bombs as Deadly as 42-Centimetre Shells

A new system of air tactics has been worked out for Russian big aeroplanes. The giant Ilya Muromets, the aeroplane in question, has at last come into its own. As a result of an improvement in phototechnique, the airmen even when travelling at full speed, can drop bombs with amazing accuracy. This solves the problem of bombing trenches. Manned by four men, the Ilya Murometses can carry bombs nearly as heavy and deadly as the Krupp 42-centimetre mortars can shoot. They drop these bombs. It is claimed more accurately than the Krupp guns, and they are infinitely more mobile. High spouts of flame can be seen rising from the enemy's lines, and the explosions are so terrific that when the enemy's trenches are close Russians have to crouch and stop their ears against the effects of the concussion.

If Food Disagrees Drink Hot Water

When food lies like lead in the stomach and you have that uncomfortable, distended feeling, it is because of insufficient blood supply to the stomach, combined with acid and food fermentation. In such cases try the plan now followed in many hospitals and advised my many eminent physicians of taking a teaspoonful of pure bisurated magnesia in half a glass of water as hot as you can comfortably drink it. The hot water draws the blood to the stomach and the bisurated magnesia, as any physician can tell you, instantly neutralizes the acid and stops the food fermentation. Try this simple plan and you will be astonished at the immediate feeling of relief and comfort that always follows the restoration of the normal process of digestion. People who find it inconvenient at times to secure hot water and travelers who are frequently obliged to take hasty meals poorly prepared, should always take [illegible] or three five-grain tablets of Bisurated Magnesia after meals to prevent fermentation and neutralize the acid in their stomach.



Munitions Factories Forge Marriage Ties

And London Has Been Turned Into a City of Honeymoons, Says Cable.

New York, Oct. 2.—A London cable to the Tribune says:

Munitions and war have converted London into a city of honeymoons. At first it was the khaki-clad soldiers, encouraged by the government's promise to provide for the bride while he was away at the war who caused the increase in the marriage rate. Then the munition workers, as prosperous in dollars as he had been in pennies, decided to marry. Clerks who had yawned over marriage license books in the dull months that preceded the war suddenly discovered they were overworked. Cherry ribbons and glossy top hats appeared in ever-increasing lines at the wedding offices until the assistants made a pitiful appeal to the mayor for help. During 1915 more than 5,000 marriages were registered in the city, and, although the rate has decreased somewhat this summer, love is gaining again with the advent of autumn. It is believed 1916 will make a record in the number of brides.

The Official Story of Canadian Gallantry

SERBS CONTINUE VICTORIOUS ADVANCE

THE CANADIANS HAVE AGAIN BEEN IN THE THICK OF THE FIGHTING

Have Been Hotly Engaged Since Friday Last in the Somme Battle---Casualties Comparatively Light in View of the Importance of the Operations---Russians Take 5000 Prisoners in Repulsing German Attacks---Hot Fighting on Eastern Front.

A TEMPORARY LULL IN THE WEST

OTTAWA, October 3.—Cabled advices to Ottawa received this morning are to the effect that the Canadians have been in the thick of the fighting on the Somme since Friday last. Though the cable does not specify the point at which the Canadians have been engaged, it is presumed here that it is in the neighbourhood of Thiepval, Courcelette and the Hessian redoubt. This morning's cable states that the Canadian casualties have been comparatively light in the fighting, having regard to the importance of operations. Efficient support by the guns is said to be largely responsible for this. It is stated here that the recent heavy lists of casualties published in Canada include losses sustained as far back as the beginning of September. The given out casualties over the week-end totalled 994, but only a portion of those were incurred in the most recent fighting.

French Stop The German Attempts

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official Communique), October 3.—A German attempt against the French positions east of Combles was quickly repulsed by the French last night, it was officially announced to-day. Elsewhere with the exception of a rather violent artillery duel in the region of Rancourt the night passed quietly on the Somme front. The Germans attempted to debouch from St. Pierre Vaast Woods, but were caught by the French artillery and mitrailleuse fire and thrown back to their starting point. The French took some prisoners.

Serbs Continue Their Successful Advance

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, October 3.—Continuing their advance northeast of Florina the Serbs yesterday captured first line trenches on the heights of Stakoggrab, it was officially announced to-day. The Bulgars twice counter-attacked against the position won by the British on the east bank of the Struma, but were repulsed suffering heavy losses.

No Fighting On British Somme Front

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 3.—No fighting occurred on the British sector of the Somme front last night, General Haig reported this afternoon. South of Loos the British made successful raids on an enemy trench.

Japanese Cabinet Resigned To-day

Special to The Examiner:

TOKIO, Japan, October 3.—The Cabinet headed by Marquis Okuma resigned to-day. It is believed here Okuma's resignation resulted from the fact that he had ceased to have a controlling voice in the affairs of the Japanese Government. The Cabinet which he heads is a coalition cabinet, and he has not had a majority of supporters in it.

KAISER APPEALED TO PRESIDENT WILSON

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ROME, October 3.—A Zurich despatch to-day asserted that the Kaiser had personally appealed to President Wilson to end the war, but that the President had refused to intervene at this time.

Amazing Feat of A Canadian Corporal

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, October 2.—How a corporal of an Eastern Ontario battalion of the Canadian forces in France single-handed charged a party of Germans, consisting of two officers and about 20 men who were advancing to the attack, and accomplished the wonderful feat of making casualties of all excepting one, whom he took prisoner, is related in the report of the Canadian "eye-witness" in his communique covering the severe fighting from September 20th to 27th. The despatch follows:

"The case of a corporal of an Eastern Ontario battalion is one of the most extraordinary ever recorded. The battalion had successfully captured a line of German trenches, when a party of the enemy, consisting of two officers and about 20 men, began a counter-attack. The corporal advanced alone against the whole party, emptied his revolver, picked up one and then another German rifle, each of which he emptied, accounting for the two officers and 16 of the men. While he was shooting, one of the officers attacked him with a bayonet and pierced him in the leg below the knee, but the corporal shot him dead. The rest of the enemy attempted to escape. The corporal shot four of them and made the fifty a prisoner. Although wounded in two places, he remained in the trenches until his battalion was relieved."

CONFIRMED FROM OTHER SOURCES.

LONDON, October 2.—Phillip Gibbs sends to the Chronicle the following story of the Canadian corporal's wonderful feat:

"In Hessian Trench, or in a twist of craterland, it was two German officers and twenty-two men who came down across the holes and were bet by a private soldier, who was surprised to see them. He emptied his revolver at them, shooting two of them. Then he picked up a German rifle, fired that and killed another. A second time he stopped, grasped a German rifle at his feet, and killed fourth man. The other ran, and the one man after them. It was a chase along a dirty ditch which had once been a trench, and the hunter was a dead shot, with abandoned rifles all along the way. At the end of the hunt there was only one German unwounded, and he was brought back as a prisoner.

"It sounds like a lie, preposterous in the numbers given, but the German prisoner tells the same tale, the other men watched the hunt at different stages—this fearful man-hunt down the bloody ditch. Things happen like that in this present fighting, worse than that in human anguish and better than that in courage."

GROCERS' BY-LAW WILL TAKE EFFECT NEXT TUESDAY

Measure Was Passed at Last Night's Meeting of the City Council—New By-law Will Compel Grocers to Close Not Later Than Seven O'clock Each Evening

THE DISCUSSION

A by-law compelling occupiers of grocery stores to close their premises each evening not later than seven o'clock, and remain closed until five o'clock next morning, except on Saturday evening or on the night preceding a holiday, and four successive nights before Christmas, was passed at last night's meeting of the City Council. There was no opposition with the possible exception of Ald. Duncan, who ventured to remark that the by-law might be an injustice to some of the grocers who depend largely upon the night trade for their livelihood. Mr. S. Mitchell, who was among the representation of grocers present in support of the by-law, drew Ald. Duncan's attention to the fact that the Council had no other alternative but to pass the measure as the petition asking for the preparation of a by-law had been properly and adequately signed according to the requirements of legislation enacted by the Provincial government.

Could Sell Fruit.

Mr. D. M. Minicola, 410 1-2 George street, who handles both fruit and groceries, and remains open each evening after seven o'clock, wanted to know how he would be effected by the new by-law. Mr. Mitchell suggested that he cover up his grocery stock each evening and then continue to sell fruit as usual. If he continued to sell groceries after the hour prescribed in the by-law, a complaint would inevitably follow and Mr. Minicola might leave himself open to a charge of violating the grocers' by-law. Mr. R. C. Braund said that he sold hardware, dry goods, etc., in addition to groceries, yet he had always refused to sell any goods such as hardware, dry goods, etc., the sale of which after certain hours, was prohibited by existing by-law. He merely sold groceries and in this way did not infringe upon the rights of other trades.

Mr. Mitchell favoured the meeting with Daniel Webster's definition of a grocer, which scarcely identifies the trade as it exists to-day.

Elastic Term.

"Good common sense is necessary in the application of the Grocers' By-law," said Mr. Mitchell. The term "to close" seems to be an elastic one. The Barbers will serve all who are in their shop before the closing hour. The grocers may serve all in their store who were in before 7 o'clock, while the store is closed to any one coming in after then.

That, however, did not apply to a liquor dealer, who was obliged to empty his place, for if he continued to serve those who were in, they would keep him going all night.

In the case of fruit dealers, if they sold canned goods, pickles, olives, catsup, etc., after 7 o'clock, a magistrate would likely take the view that while not being grocers they would be infringing on the Grocers' By-law, on the same principle that if a grocer put a chair in his store, and should do barbering after 8 o'clock he would be guilty of an offence against the barbers' early closing by-law.

If the fruit dealer were to cover these things which might be construed as groceries and stick to the sale of fruit and refuse to sell any of the other lines, where would not be much room for protest from any responsible recognized grocer.

The by-law will become effective one week from to-day, or on October 10th

WARDENS ST. JOHN'S SPEAK ON BEHALF OF CHAPLAIN DAVIDSON

Explanations Given in Connection With Certain Statements Prominently Printed in the Review Newspaper.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—In the issue of the Review of last Friday, great prominence was given to certain statements concerning Major Davidson and the severance of his relations with the 93rd Battalion as Chaplain.

As he is 3,000 miles from here and consequently can know nothing of the attack made upon himself and therefore cannot immediately reply to it we have in the short time at our disposal made an effort to ascertain the real facts of this matter and so far as we can at present learn they are as follows.

There are no chaplains for individual Canadian regiments held in England for training or other purposes, much less for a regiment broken up as the 93rd has been. The military regulations and practice there allow only one chaplain to a brigade. The only instances (if any) in which a chaplain is allowed to stay with his original regiment is in the case of a regiment being transferred immediately or very shortly after its arrival in England with or to its division in France.

Further, we understand that all chaplains on arrival in England come under the jurisdiction of either the Chaplain General or a Board of Chaplains, and have to go and do where and what they are ordered like every other military man, no matter what their own personal desires or inclinations may be, and it is owing to this practice and these regulations that Major Davidson is where he is, viz., at the Ontario Military Hospital, Orpington, and not with the 93rd, and for no other reason, and most decidedly not for any such improper motives as are imputed to him in the Review article.

Further, it is the fact that it is against Major Davidson's personal wishes that he is at the Orpington Hospital and not with the 93rd boys at the front, but being a good soldier he obeys without question, the orders given him by the proper authority.

Further, Major Davidson's one wish, one aim and one object so far as it is known to his family or to ourselves, is and always has been, to be with the men on active service and to be of service to the men in every possible way, and letters have been seen by us from the men which show that Major Davidson has certainly not failed in this respect and from letters received from the Major himself we gather that his one desire is to be sent to the front, there to be of such service as he may be to our brave fellows.

Major Davidson has been a citizen of this city for over 25 years, occupying a very public position, through which he has been brought into contact with thousands of our citizens of every class and creed, and his reputation can safely be left in their hands in the absolute assurance that, whatever his shortcomings in other respects may be, lack of love for men and a sincere desire on all possible occasions to be of help and service to them is not one that can be laid to his charge.

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

District 4—Montreal, J. H. Sherr, ar, Montreal.

District 3—Kingston, Lieut. W. N. Bowen, Lansdowne.

The Director-General announced that a conference of all the directors of National Service will be held here as soon as arrangements will permit, when measures to carry out the duties of the directors will be discussed.

It is explained that these duties which will be directed, supervised and co-ordinated by the Director-General in "taking of expedient measures to have Ottawa, include, among other things, the all available labour utilized to the greatest advantage, for the purpose of maintaining and carrying on important industries and of affording to the greatest possible number of men the opportunity of military service, and with this in view to make an estimate of such available labour. For the purpose previously mentioned, the directors of national service are to arrange for the employment of women in work within their capacity wherever additional labour is necessary.

The directors of national service, subject to appeal to the Director-General are also charged with the duty of determing whether the services of men are of more value to the state in the employment in which they are engaged than if they are enlisted for military service, and in this and other matters they are to co-operate with and afford all possible information to the recruiting authorities.

Much preliminary work has already been done by Sir Thomas Tait. For example, the work of formulating a scheme by which an inventory of the labour of the Dominion may be made

Canadians Make A Splendid Advance

In Recent Fighting Around Courcelette Dominion's Troops Push Their Lines Forward Over Half a Mile on a Front of Two Miles—38 Officers and 1610 Men Prisoners Taken.

ARTILLERY MAGNIFICENT

(By the Canadian Eye-Witness.)

Canadian Corps Headquarters in France, via London, Oct. 2.—As a result of further severe fighting the Canadians have captured several important German positions, and have advanced their own line upon a frontage of nearly two miles to a maximum depth of 200 yards.

The total number of prisoners in their hands since the beginning of their great offensive now amounts to 38 officers and 1,610 other ranks. They have also captured about 25 machine guns, 11 trench mortars and a great quantity of ammunition of all sorts, and other war materials.

The Germans have fought hard and their resistance has been formidable. To minimize this fact would be to minimise the gallantry and persistence with which the Canadians have attacked. We have, in this fighting, advanced in close co-operation and sympathy with the British troops on either flanks. Despite the enemy's resistance we have, except for temporary and local setbacks, secured in succession all of our objectives, and by every account received we have inflicted severe losses upon the Germans.

Artillery Magnificent.

Our artillery support has been magnificent, and by the sheer weight of metal which the gunners have hurled upon the German lines they have made it humanly possible for the infantry to come into close contact with the enemy. When this has occurred there has never been any question of the result. Time and time again our bayonet men have rushed an enemy trench and have killed or captured the entire garrison.

After the taking of Courcelette several minor but important operations had to be undertaken in preparation for a further advance. Under the conditions of ordinary trench warfare any one of these would have been an enterprise of the first magnitude. To-day they are shadowed by the greater operations.

Thus, on September 22nd an Ontario regiment attacked the mass of trenches situated to the east of Courcelette. This was a most difficult undertaking. The storming parties were met with heavy machine-gun and rifle fire and an intense bombardment by the hostile artillery. Although many of our men were cut down, the remainder poured over the German trenches and secured the whole of the battalion's objective. More than 60 corpses of the enemy were counted in one part of the position alone, and one officer and 27 other ranks were made prisoners. One machine gun was captured.

Ejected From the Trenches.

One night the enemy attacked the north-eastern corner of Courcelette in considerable number, and succeeded in entering our trenches on a front of over 50 yards. Later the same night a determined counter-attack was made by a Central Ontario battalion and the whole position recaptured. Early the next morning the Germans again attacked along the whole frontage of the battalion, but were severely repulsed by Lewis machine-gun fire and by bombs.

An hour later elements from an Ontario and a Winnipeg battalion attacked an important German line to the north and northwest of Cource-

LIBERALS IN COUNCIL.

Liberalism in Canada has more work to do; urgently important work to do; and mobilization of its forces are in order. In this view importance attaches to the forthcoming gathering of Liberals to be held in London, Ont., on Oct 11—the annual meeting of the Ontario Federation of Liberal Clubs. Among the many that will be present are the Liberal Chieftain, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, and Hon. Mr. Norris, Premier of Manitoba. Mr. Brewster, the newly elected Premier-designate of British Columbia, cannot come. This is in one sense, unfortunate, for he represents the latest success of the principles for which true Liberals are striving. He represents the latest popular and electoral revolt against corruption, graft and dishonest dealing, in relation to the administration of public interests, his triumph completing the solid West for Liberalism and the principles it stands for. It is not altogether a partisan gathering—only in personal—for the results which the gathering will naturally celebrate—the success in by- and general elections—have been achieved by the help of Conservatives, who are tired of the political methods that have conduced to the distavour in which strongly supported governments have come to be regarded by the electorate.

Among the speakers will, of course, be Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and Mr. Rowell, and the subjects to be discussed will be "Lawless Legislation"; "The Public Attitude Towards Graft," and "Canada's Duty to her Soldiers." We know that there has been extensive practice of indirect robbery of the people, ephemistically, and, at the same time, forcibly, designated "graft." This has been made more easily possible by the prostitution of the "patronage system" to party advantage at the public expense—the expense of public interests and the degradation of public service. This feature of our national administration will be dealt with; and, also the most presently important matter of all will also be taken into consideration—"Canada's Duty to her Soldiers." This is a subject that lends itself to general sympathy; and no doubt the discussion at the coming meeting will consist largely in the consideration of the duty, wisdom, and necessity of both parties and all Canadians uniting their counsel and efforts to give adequate care and attention to the returned soldier, and practical and adequate recognition of the splendid services he has given to Canada and the Empire. To help him on his return from his glorious campaign to lay aside the arms he has so gallantly wielded, and take his place again, under the best conditions, in the ranks of the citizenship he has so magnificently served and honoured. The soldier has served us all: he has not fought for a party, but for the state. Both parties, all the people, owe him as much as he has given; and in that view of the mutual relations and obligations established, we home-staying Canadians will have our work cut out for us. The partial compensation of the returned soldiers for the work he has done for us, for the sacrifices he has made—partial, for adequate compensation is not in our power for the debt he has placed Canada under is overwhelming—will task the best abilities and the highest spirit of the public men of both parties. If the returned soldier is in any sense or to any degree, made the object of the ungenerous ingratitude of governments, or a general party is determined to withhold any blame attachable to it, in respect of such a condition, shall [illegible] discovered insofar as ability of [illegible] cannot implement intention [illegible].

WANTED—Man, good pay, steady work. Apply The Quaker Oats Company.

THE REASON WHY.

The meeting of the Speakers' Patriotic League to be held in the recruiting grooms to-night, indicates something wrong. The meeting is to select a delegate to attend an interprovincial meeting of Patriotic Leagues to promote better feeling between between Ontario and Quebec.

Why should there be anything but good feeling between the two provinces? Why should there be feeling in Quebec, preventive, if not antagonistic, to, recruiting? It is simply because of a continued repetition, in certain journals, of perpetual pin pricks such as that given by a local newspaper to the French Canadian element of our Peterborough population.

It tells of a young man in a factory who wanted to resign a good position, to enlist in the 247th, but changed his mind when he saw that his place was to be taken by another man—

"A recent arrival from Quebec, and of French descent, one of scores who have come to Peterborough, to watch for just such opportunities."

Why withhold comment on conditions that have existed for months and months? Why come down on a French-Canadian when there have been others and others, in scores, of all nationalities, including Ontario Canadians, "who have been watching for just such opportunities." The young man cited was not animated by the highest motives when he drew back from doing his duty because somebody else did not, to his view, do his duty. This shows that slight things will turn even ultra loyal Ontario young men from their duty; as a continuous course of villainous treatment has antagonized French-Canadians.

Recruiting may be slow in Nationalist-poisoned Quebec, but the slur of the newspaper referred to does not apply to the French element in Peterborough, to whom it is an insulting injustice. The French-Canadian element in Peterborough has perhaps given more men to the colours, in proportion to numbers, than any other national element of our population. Many of them were the first to enlist to take an active part in forming artillery units; and several of our French-Canadians have been on the firing line, and some of them continuously in the trenches, since the Canadians reached France. These home French-Canadians, who are included in the omnibus disparagement of all French-Canadians, are of better stuff than the young man who drew back; who, as the journal excused, had not "reached the high standard of human nature" to "do his duty regardless of others."

Such pin-pricking, practical persecution, of our French-Canadian compatriots, is responsible for the necessity of having international conferences to promote better feeling between Quebec and Ontario, destroyed by the continuous sneers, innuendoes and insults of such firebrands as the local journal and the Toronto News. The News has almost every day conspicuously placarded in its editorial columns the incendiary cry and treasonant lie—

"A vote for Laurier is a vote for Bourassa."

Bourassa, the arch Nationalist, who helped the Conservative party to power in 1911, and spoke from their platforms, and had his Quebec candidates, financed by Conservative funds, spoke to an immense crowd at Nicolet county, Yamaska, Quebec, on Oct 1st, and made the first theme of his anti-British harrange a vehement and virulent assault on Sir Wilfrid Laurier; calling him "one of the nefarious men of Canada," and denouncing his advocacy of Canada's fighting for the Empire. This is the man that the News declares, is hand and glove with Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Why is there bad feeling, leading to retarded recruiting, between Quebec and Ontario? It is because Bourassa and Nationalism have poisoned Quebec public opinion. Nationalism, which owes its organic existence and systematized malevolence to everything British and Imperial, to Conservative help—not popular help, but the officially prostituted help of the government. Nationalism has been a malignant element in our national politics for years. As part of the price of Nationalist support Mr. Borden killed the Laurier Naval Act, in effect: and, as the rest of the price he took three anti-British Bourassa Nationalists into his cabinet and has kept them there. Any child can tell us why recruiting is slow in Quebec, and slow in Ontario, too. The government that makes the seditious Bourassa and his fellow anti-British Nationalists its cabinet bed-fellows, and its prime objects of favour, does not inspire recruiting anywhere.

CHAPLAIN MAJOR DAVIDSON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS TO THE 93rd

On the Occasion of His Transfer By the Military Authorities to Orpington Hospital

In view of approaching removal from you as your Chaplain I take this means of saying a few farewell words on important matters, which come straight from my heart and which will, I hope, reach yours.

As soldiers we loyally, though regret fully accept calls which seem likely to break up for the present our close comradeship as fellow members of the 93rd, the distinctive Regiment of our beloved home city of Peterborough. We have given ourselves up to serve the Empire and we therefore give unquestioning obedience to all orders considered necessary to promote its welfare. But, remember, that wherever we may be we shall still be representative Peterborough men and Canadians with the honour of our home and country to maintain and the support of our home people behind us. Let us see to it that up to the very end of the campaign we all measure up to these and other responsibilities.

This calls not only for efficiency in drill and musketry, but quite as much for the systematic practical application of Religion for the healthy development of our character and manhood.

The new and great experiences through which we are passing will tend to degrade and brutalise us unless we set ourselves steadily to live God's kind of life and to be Christians and gentlemen. We are called out as 20th Century Knights, not only to fight well, but also to live clean, healthy, self-respecting lives.

To this end make a strong determined stand against three sins by which Satan would enfeeble and destroy the bodies, minds and souls of soldiers—Impurity, Drunkenness and Profanity. Do not laugh at or speak lightly of these degrading and defiling habits through which the deluded victims become coarse and are apt gradually to lose their health, manhood and Religion. If men could see the real nature and terrible results of these sins, especially immorality, they would shrink from them with horror and loathing.

This ought not to be hard for you members of the 93rd after the splendid start which you have made as upright, sober and moral men. Remember your mothers, your sisters, your wifes and your home! In the face of far stronger temptations now than have ever threatened you before prove your manhood and your Religion. Whatever others may do, keep yourself up and stand for the right so that you may return made and not barred by this campaign.

And there may be times when you ought good humouredly but firmly to object to the thoughtless defiling of the atmosphere of your tent by filth or profanity. You have the right to decent surroundings and should stand up for it as an act of duty—to others as well as to yourself. All Officers and N.C.O's have a great responsibility here.

But religion does not only deal with healthful warnings and prohibitions, but also with privileged duties towards God and man. From your life and actions you testify that you are a loyal soldier of the King. Is there anything distinctive about you showing that you are also a loyal soldier of God? Are you obeying His orders and in any kind of daily communion with Him.

Face this great matter and think out for yourself how you can get His forgiving love and use His Divine power which are surely necessary in this strange, rough life of ours in camp and field. Get in your prayers sometime and somewhere each day. Read even a few verses from your New Testament, as many of you pledged yourself to do.

Throw your hearts into all Services and especially into the Saviour's own Service of Holy Communion which you can do very simply, just because the Lord asks you and all men to remember Him in this way. Even if you have not done this before, do it now, at this crisis in your life.

We may try to put away thoughts of the future, but there it is, daily coming nearer. In that time of strain and stress little will be possible. Now is the precious opportunity for some sane preparation. To "get right with God" and be ready for Him either in His Communion Service and life here or in the next world (into which we may step so suddenly), three great central things are necessary—Repentance and Faith towards God, and forgiving Love towards man. Get yourself now into these lines of life, with desires set towards God, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. It will perhaps be easier to think of, and speak to, the Saviour Jesus Christ, Who is "the Way, the Truth and the Life." Get His blessed Form before you, dying on the Cross and now living in glory. Tell Him of your desires and your gratitude for His love. Simply believe that His saving power is being brought to bear upon you, and in that power step out in faith to live better His kind of life, yielding yourself up to Him who has bought you with His own Blood and has a rightful claim on your loyal, loving allegiance.

These are great Life-subjects, and perhaps you will look over them again at your leisure and see to what extent you can practically apply them.

In conclusion, I would urge you to cultivate personal relations with Chaplains, either your own or any who may be near you. Take them into your confidence. Use their services. Tell them about yourself, and give them a chance to help you. A doctor has little chance to cure the bodies of his patients unless they inform him of their symptoms.

Be sure to write home, if only a card, at least once a week, and sometimes to your own clergyman. Have you made a Will? This sensible provision won't make you die any sooner.

I look forward to some future opportunity of meeting you again, and would be thankful if you would take the trouble to write to me or otherwise let me know your opinion concerning the subjects dealt with in this letter.

Hoping that, though separated, we shall still think often of one another as comrades and friends, and assuring you of my unfailing interest in your welfare.

Yours faithfully,

J. C. DAVIDSON.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lines. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

A JUVENILE FIRST AID

WE HAVE OUR Humane Societies, Helpful Boards, House of Refuge Committees, Protestant Home Boards, and also, and rightly too—the Children's Aid Society.

This latter is A JUVENILE FIRST AID. Exactly. An emergency ration, so to speak, that can and will act in any given need and opportunity. Think of the relief and satisfaction it is to the public to know that there is one institution whose doors swing easily, to admit the friendless and unfortunate child.

YOU ARE ASKED TO SUPPORT THIS FIRST AID. If your means will let you subscribe, do so—a generous and helpful act. But there is a way we can all assist, PUSH ON AND TAKE AN ACTIVE INTEREST IN TAG DAY, Saturday, Oct. 7th.

Defenceless children are taken in, cheered, comforted, clad, fed, warmed and mothered in the only public way that is available. The Society assumes and performs a duty that is really a part of yours, only we all are willing that others may assume the responsibility for us. Let us then support what others are doing. We can at least do so much. Do it cheerfully and DO IT NOW.

Here is a wise man's view of the child that has been rescued:—

"You have heard that child laughing, you think he's all fun,
But the angels laugh too at the good that's been done,
The children laugh loud as they troop to his call,
But the poor man that knows him laughs loudest of all".

—O. W. Holmes.

Alderman A. H. Stratton Acquires Controlling Interest and Assumes the Management

The Peterborough Review Printing Company, publishers of the Peterborough Review came under new ownership and management on Saturday its interests having been acquired by Ald. A. H. Stratton and Mr. T. L. Matthews at the Liquidator's sale, held last week.

In the new organization Ald. Stratton holds the controlling interest and will be the manager of the paper in future.

Ald. Stratton has been a life-time resident of the city. He successfully conducted the Peterborough Bookstore, which he sold to the present owners, Messrs. Tisbilcock Bros. about seven years ago. After leaving the bookstore business, he was appointed by the Liberal Government as postmaster of the City of Peterborough and was succeeded by the present Postmaster, Mr. Jas. Edgar, a short time after the return of the present government to power. On retiring from the Post Office he took over the Peterborough Planing Mill, but after a year's operation, disposed of it to Mr. H. Baker. Subsequently he conducted the Stock Broker business of Paul Lambert and Company for upwards of a year and a half. Ald. Stratton is the present chairman of the Finance Committee of the city council.

In an interview he states he will conduct the Review as the organ of the Conservative party of this riding.

FUNERAL OF MRS. ELLEN O'BRIEN

The funeral of the late Ellen O'Brien, relict of the late Alexander O'Brien, took place yesterday from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Patrick Lynch, Wescott street. Interment took place at the Roman Catholic cemetery after service at Sacred Heart Church.

The late Mrs. O'Brien was in her 90th year, and of a family of eleven there still survive her four sons and five daughters. The sons are John of Douro, Alexander and Michael of Peterborough, and James of Mount Pleasant. The daughters: Mrs. Sullivan and Mrs Cavanah of Douro, Mrs. Clancy of Toronto, Mrs Lynch of Peterborough, and Mrs. Crough of Smith.

She resided in Otonabee where she was born, all her life until about 18 years ago, when she removed to Peterborough to reside with her sons and daughters in the city and townships.

Mrs. O'Brien will be missed by those who knew her, as she was active and bright up to the time of her death.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My boy, Frank, caused much alarm and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Kingston, Man. "He became quite sick and did not seem to breathe right until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and found it was exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

First Regular Meeting Otonabee Chapter I.O.D.E.

The first regular meeting of the Otonabee Chapter, I.O.D.E., will be held on Thursday evening, October 5th, at 8 o'clock in the green room of the Young Women's Christian Association.

As this is the first meeting of the season it is hoped that all the members will make an effort to be present, as the work for the coming year will be decided upon, and other important business transacted. 3d

TWO LEAN DOGS ARE DUG OUT OF DRAIN; MISSING FIVE DAYS

Lost on Coon Hunt—Crawl Two Miles Through Tile.

AYLMER, Oct. 3.—While some parties were coon hunting north of this place Monday evening last they lost their two dogs, one a hound and the other a collie.

On Thursday night, Marley Cattel went after the cows on his father's farm, and when crossing a field heard a strange noise from almost under his feet. He looked about him but could not see anything, and decided to investigate. He got a spade and dug down to the tile drain known as the Argyle drain, and removing one of the 14-inch tile saw a dog in it.

Thinking it might be a mad dog he put the tile in again and did not let him out, but went home and told what he found. The next morning Cattel and a neighbour, John Skinner, went to the spot and let out the two lost dogs.

They had travelled up the 14-inch tile for a distance of about two miles, and could not proceed further on account of the tile in the balance of the drain being 12-inch, and too small for them to pass through.

The dogs belonged to Geo. Wall, and were pretty gaunt when removed, being from Monday night to Friday morning.

Heavy Fighting On The Russian Front

PETROGRAD, October 3.—Massing considerable reserves the Teutons hurled large forces against the Russians along the River Geniuyka and the heights on the right bank of the Zlota Lipa, but were beaten back with heavy losses, it was officially announced to-day. In this region alone the Slavs have taken 5,000 prisoners in the last three days. Heavy fighting has developed at several sections of the Russian front. East of Novo Alexanderovsk dense German columns attempted to advance yesterday after heavily bombarding the Russian trenches, but were driven back by machine gun fire. On the Sereth River sector the Teutons made a midnight attack near Krinkiostassin following a bombardment, but were repulsed. In the regions of Zaturtay, Vola Sadovskaia and Shelvov, stubborn fighting is going on. The Russians have captured portions of enemy positions, but are meeting with stubborn resistance.

Von Tirpitz Party Will Be Defeated

BERLIN, October 3.—The efforts of the Von Tirpitz party to force the resumption of the submarine warfare will be defeated as a result of a conference now being held in secret sessions of the Reichstag committee, it is now generally believed.

The Tirpitzites, however, hope to force public discussion of the whole when the Reichstag reconvenes on Thursday.

Roumanian Fortresses Evacuated By Foe

LONDON, October 3.—Petrograd reports that Field Marshal Mackensen ordered the evacution of the Dobrudja fortress of Silictra and Tutrakan after the Roumanians crossed the Danube.

British Aeroplanes Raid Airship Sheds

LONDON, October 3.—British aeroplanes raided a German airship shed near Brussels yesterday, the Admiralty announced to-day. One of the raiding fleet failed to return.

Paint Up While It Is Fine

Lieut. Worth In Hospital at Rowen Slight Jaundice

Mr. J. W. Worth received to-day the following cable from his brother, Lieut. W. G. Worth of the 93rd Battalion:

"Arrived at Rouen (France) Sept. 24. Admitted to hospital same day, slight jaundice. Letter sent Sept. 25th. Join battalion soon."

This cable was despatched to-day, October 3rd.

Writing on Sept. 18th, Lieut. Worth says: "When we got back from Hythe on Friday, where we were completing our shooting, we were informed that five more lieutenants were wanted for France and this time I was in the list. The others are Hatton, McNabb, Stevenson and Might. We were given leave until Sunday and went up to London on Friday afternoon. When we got back to camp on Monday we were held up at the gates by a sentry who said the camp was under quarantine for spinal meningitis. We were given leave until Wednesday, but not caring to remain at Folkestone, and not having time to go north, we went into the camp. There are three cases under observation. Stevenson and I are slated for the 19th Battalion from Toronto, I think. I have spoken with fellows who have been over and they all seem to like it. They stated that there was a good chance of coming through unless a real hot position was struck. I don't think it is going to last much longer by reports we get here, but I joined up and am ready to do my bit, and find it the best to let things take their course.

A later post card arrived from Southampton dated Sept. 22nd, previous to Lieut. Worth's embarkation for France.

Dandruffy Heads Become Hairless

If you want plenty fo thick beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.

HARVEST FESTIVAL SERVICES AT ST. GEORGE'S ANGLICAN CHURCH

The services of Thanksgiving for an abundant harvest, which were commenced at the Anglican church dedicated to St. George, in South Peterborough were continued last Sunday evening. A devout and hearty congregation filled the little church.

As usual the service was fully choral, the harmonised confessions being especially well sung.

Mr. Turner, the choirmaster, presided at the organ, and the efforts of his choir clearly showed that he had done his level best to train them efficiently. It is really a somewhat difficult matter to decide which was the most hearty in the singing, whether the choir or the congregation.

The special lessons for Evensong were read by Mr. Frank Russell. The rector, the Rev. Jas. Price, preached a forceful sermon on the text "Give us day by day our daily bread". He pointed out how thankful we all ought to be for an abundant harvest; rich and poor alike. He showed how that the petition in Our Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread" was not merely the poor man's text but that the petition was quite as necessary to the rich. From statistics he showed that should the harvest fail, through any dispensation of the Almighty, all over the world on one year that before three months were passed we should all be dead from starvation. Of what use then would be the rich man's money? His wealth could not buy him the means of subsistence, for there would be nothing to buy. Therefore the petition in question was just as much for the man of means as for his poorer brother. The sermon was listened to with wrapt attention on the part of the congregation.

At the close an anthem suitable to the occasion was sung very well by the choir, a treble solo being well taken by Miss May Cole, who possesses a very bright, clean soprano voice.

The recessional hymn "Now thank we all Our God" as well known to most of our readers concluded one of these hearty, joyous services for which the church of Saint George is so justly famed.

SHOUTING AUDIENCE WINS ADMIRATION OF BILLY SUNDAY

Plea Made for Single Standards of Morality—Liquor Traffic Flayed.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 3.—Between 25,000 and 30,000 men of every class and description, composing what the evangelist congratulated himself on as the "most appreciative audience I ever had in my life," heard Billy Sunday in one of his celebrated sermons, entitled "The Devil's Boomerang," or "Hot Cakes off the Griddle."

In his sermons, which were punctuated by applause and outbursts of laughter, when he made some exceptionally pungent remark, the famous preacher flayed the liquor traffic, and dilated at length on the evils attendant on liquor indulgence, quoting statistics from numerous medical and government authorities.

His sermon was also a strenuous plea for single standards of morality, and when at the climax of one of his more forceful utterances, he literally shouted "The virtue of womanhood is the rampart wall of civilization," he was compelled to stop while his audience cheered.

Sin is Sexless.

"I would spit on a society that makes a distinction between the morality of men and women. Sin is sexless," exclaimed the evangelist. "It is all the same whether a woman wears a coat or a petticoat. The question of purity is not merely a moral question. It is a question in which the very self-preservation of the race is involved. The downfall of Rome, the downfall of Greece, were brought about by the violation of the law of chastity, and woe be to America, God pity America, if the youth of our land is permitted to run headlong into the cataclysms which destroyed those great nations of old."

Applause Heard a Block.

Seldom has his audience been so appreciative as it was this afternoon. On numerous occasions the evangelist carried his audience with him in the intensity of his feeling, and when his voice rang through the huge tabernacle with the words, "After 1,900 years of beer-wrecking, wine-wrecking, whiskey-wrecking, it is high time the dirty, low gang were sent to hell," there was a storm of applause which could be heard a block away.

One of the more dramatic moments in the afternoon sermon which called forth a tumultuous demonstration, and scores of men cried out, "Amen, amen," was when the evangelist, leaping to a chair on the platform, said:

"You say you cannot prohibit men from drinking. But the law can be enforced against whisky just the same as it can be enforced against anything else, if you have honest officials to enforce it."

WHAT HAD SHE DONE?

A certain society lady who, delighted with a purchase of flowers which she had made at the fountain in Piccadilly Circus, promised the old flower-seller that she would come again the following Wednesday and buy ten shillings' worth of flowers, because, she explained, her daughter was coming out on that day. "Oh, bless 'er," said the old dame, "she shall 'ave the very best booking that money can buy. Might I ask what she is in for?"

SHOOTING AT CAMBRAY

LINDSAY, Oct. 3.—A strange shooting accident took place on the farm of Mr. Joseph Daniels, near Cambray, Sunday afternoon, when his oldest son, Joseph Daniels, was shot in the hands by some unknown person.

It appears that the young fellow, who is about 14 years of age, was opening a gate when he was suddenly shot. He does not know where the shot came from, or who fired the gun, although it is surmised that it was a stray shot from a nearby woods. Three fingers of the left hand were shot clean off and the right hand was also painfully wounded. Young Daniels was brought to the Ross Hospital where he is receiving every attention.

CHARGE OF MURDER AGAINST TWO WESTWOOD GIRLS HEARD TO-DAY

Annie Douglas Told Inspector Miller She Had Given New-born Babe Half a Teaspoonful of Turpentine—It Died Three Hours Later.

Annie and Alice Douglas of Westwood appeared before County Magistrate Langley this morning, on a charge of the murder of an infant which, it was shown, was born to Annie Douglas, on July 4th, last, and died on the following morning. It was exhumed on July 12th by Constable Lynch of Hastings in the woodshed of the Douglas home, and in the presence of John Miller, Provincial Inspector of Police.

Dr. Eastwood and Dr. McCulloch, who performed a postmortem examination on the body of the infant for the inquest before Coroner Greer, were first called. On account of the decomposition of the body they could not determine what had been the cause of death.

Dr. Huycke of Hastings testified that he had been called to the Douglas home on July 4th, when the baby was delivered and on the following morning returned and found the baby dead. He had never prescribed turpentine for a human being and regarded it as a dangerous drug. It was sometimes given to children for worms, but otherwise was administered only to horses and cattle.

Margaret Drope, a trained nurse, said she had spent several hours at the Douglas home on July 4th, and, on leaving Alice Douglas said she would try to look after the baby. Witness returned next morning and found the infant on a bed in a bedroom downstairs. She noticed an oder of turpentine about its neck, and also a dark colour of the baby that was not a normal condition.

Miss Drope thereupon left the house to call up Dr. Huycke and upon her return, an hour later, the baby was dead.

Inspector Miller.

Inspector John Miller of Toronto, arriving from the 11.40 a.m. train, just as court adjourned, said he had investigated the "Douglas baby" case at Westwood, July 12th.

"I saw Alice and Annie Douglas at their home. I asked Annie if it was true she had given birth to a baby. She said it was. I asked her where it was. She said she couldn't tell me that. She intimated that she thought Alice could tell me that. I asked her if there was any truth in the report the child had received turpentine. She told me her sister Alice got her a bottle of turpentine and she had given the baby about half a spoonful. She said that Alice had disposed of the baby. We dug it up in the woodshed. Alice Douglas had pointed the location out to me and Constable Lynch of Hastings. The baby was in a little square pine box. I brought it in and placed it in the custody of Mr. Comstock. I never saw the contents of the box."

To Mr. O'Connell, witness said he had warned Annie Douglas, before questioning her, the usual notification that she did not have to make a statement.

Mr. O'Connel previously entered a formal objection to the evidence of Inspector Miller.

Edward Lynch, police constable of Hastings, related the exuming of the box which he had taken to Hastings, and locked up in his shop three hours. He was sure it was the same box he had handed over to Inspector Miller.

Alice Douglas was then arraigned on a similar charge of murder.

Inspector Miller was recalled and repeated the facts of his 12th of July trip to Westwood. Of an interview with Alice Douglas, he said he asked her if her sister Annie had given birth to a baby. She said it was true. I asked here where the baby was. She said she had buried it. I asked her how it had come to die. She said she had taken a bottle of turpentine to her sister at her request. She did not know what had happened. The baby died three hours after. She had not seen the turpentine administered, but she said Annie had told her she had given the baby half a teaspoonful of turpentine.

Alice said the baby was born on July 4th, and died the following morning.

Mr. Daniel O'Connell is appearing for the defence and Mr. Hatton is conducting the prosecution. At 2 o'clock the argument was begun.

Purse of Gold For Father Ferguson

Remembered By Lindsay Parish on Eve of Departure for Warkworth

Last Friday St. Mary's Parish Hall, Lindsay was crowded with friends of Rev. Fr. Ferguson, who assembled for the purpose of paying a tribute of respect to the very popular curate who is about to leave for Warkworth, where he will take charge of that and two more parishes.

Mayor Kylie opened the meeting, and told of its object afterwards in a short eulogy of the curate, who was about to leave; he spoke most commendably of his work while in Lindsay and how he had endeared himself to the people of the town.

This was followed by a short address delivered by Mons. Casey.

Rev. Fr. Guiry followed in a eulogistic strain, as did Fr. Hayes, Thos. Brady, Senator McHugh, P. J. Breen, John Rogers, P. J. Clancy and Jos. Meehan.

PRESENTATION

The presentation, which consisted of a well filled purse of gold, amounting to $400, was made by Mr. B. J. Gough, who in a few well timed remarks handed it to the reverend gentleman.

A reply, which spoke of the many kindnesses and favours received by the receiver of the gift showed the love he had for the good people of Lindsay, whom he had learned to admire more and more the longer he was amongst them.

After many fond good-byes the meeting dispersed, Rev. Fr. Ferguson leaving this morning to take charge of his new parish.

and a basis for its use to the greatest advantage is already in hand.

No up-to-date inventory of this sort exists at present in regard to Canadian labour. The Dominion census returned even if they were sufficiently modern would not give all the information required, and these returns are now five years old. During that period there has been a widespread shift of population due to the raising of the expeditionary force and the establishment of new industries. It is pointed out that the data which would be obtained by such an inventory would be of use, not only for that purpose, but might be of great value in dealing with industrial conditions after the war.

The work of the national service is separate and distinct from that of recruiting. There have been heretofore local recruiting officers in charge in many of the military districts. This is to be general. The supervision of recruiting in each military district rests with a district recruiting officer under the district commander, and it is his duty to co-ordinate the work of of all agencies, civil and military, connected with recruiting. It is also his duty to make himself acquainted with the number of men of military age fit for military service and to take all expedient measures for the purpose of recruiting within his district, and to co-operate with the directors of national service in his district. The work of the district recruiting officer is supervised and co-ordinated by the Adjutant-General.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

This Important Question Will be Discussed by a Committee of the Whole Council

A communication from the Hamilton City Council asks that Peterborough Council co-operate with Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and other Canadian cities in protesting to the Dominion Government against the high cost of living. And requesting that municipalities be permitted to borrow money with which to establish such places as are necessary for the retailing of coal and provisions at a reasonable price.

The matter will be taken up by a committee of the Whole Council at a meeting to be held in the near future.

BY-LAW PASSED.

CAPT. WILSON IS QUARTERMASTER

KINGSTON, Oct. 3.—The surplus officers of the 136th Battalion reported in Kingston on Monday, but only one (Captain Wilson) could be placed at the present time. Capt. Wilson has secured the appointment as quartermaster of the new battalion being organized at Lindsay.

The remaining thirteen disappointed officers will be placed as soon as opportunity offers; meanwhile they have returned to their homes. They still retain their connection and rank in the Canadian Expeditionary Force, but without pay, and are liable to be called upon at any time.

POSED AS NIECE OF SIR SAM HUGHES

CANADIANS MAKE SPLENDID ADVANCE

line, called the Zollern Graben. The attack was carried forward with the greatest determination in the face of a heavy fire, but only portions of the objective were reached. The enemy at once bombarded those positions with great intensity and under cover of a smoke barrage counter-attacked, and despite a tenacious resistance drove our men back into their original trenches.

East of Courcelette another night the enemy attempted to counter-attack, after his usual artillery preparation, one of our more advanced positions, but was completely repulsed.

During all this time our trenches were gradually being advanced on all fronts and forward posts were linked up by new lines. This was done by hard physical labour under heavy artillery fire.

By Tuesday, September 26 all preparations had been completed. A long-continued bombardment of the German positions had reduced the infantry resistance to a minimum. About noon the great attack was launched on a frontage of nearly two miles, Battalions from Vancouver, Calgary, Montreal, Toronto, Saskatchewan and Winnipeg participated. Preceded by a barrage of exceptional intensity, the long waves of our men advanced steadily over the uneven ground. The whole length of the Zollern Graben was seized and occupied, and without a pause the assaulting waves pressed beyond, and mounting towards the crest of the high ground north of Courcelette they carried their second objective, the Hessian Kenora trenches.

Some of our men even pushed beyond their objective and entered the Regina trench, where a few prisoners were actually secured. However, we did not attempt to occupy this line. One battalion in the right sector met with particularly heavy machine gun fire, and could not progress. On this limited front alone our attack failed to complete its course.

Two further attacks were made by us against this position. The first was entirely repulsed. Finally, on September 27, a third attack secured the remaining portion of his body contested position.

Work of Vancouver Men.

On the extreme left of the original objective the enemy was found to remain in possession of about 100 yards of trench. A Vancouver battalion attacked and drove them out with heavy losses. A few hours later, the Germans having been strongly reinforced, counter-attacked the whole line of the Hessian trench. They were repulsed at all points except in the 100-yard trench on the left. This portion, however, we again attacked and once more drove the enemy out.

In the course of all this desperate fighting there have been innumerable instances of the most courageous and devoted actions, impossible at present to detail.

DON'T FORGET SATURDAY IS TAG DAY FOR THE CHILDREN'S AID SOCIETY

Big Preparations Are Being Made by the Ladies for Annual Event---Volunteers Are Wanted to Sell Tags ---A Worthy Object

It was a busy scene at the rooms over the Bank of Montreal yesterday afternoon. A large committee of ladies, zealous to help in the preparations for Tag Day of the Children's Aid were at work. The table was piled with grey coloured ribbons and fixings and the making of rosettes and such decorations went on rapidly. These decorations will be parted with at something more than the regular tag. Better be decorated with one.

The list of team captains is not as yet completed. It will be announced on Wednesday. Volunteerse are wanted to assist in the sale of tags. Who will help? Names might be sent in to Mrs. Knox, who is looking after that detail. The larger the corps of sales ladies the more people will be tagged. The act of tagging is really a pleasant performance and not severely expensive. In fact it is so inexpensive that everybody had better be tagged twice. Possibly it would be a good thing to get up a sort of Honour Roll, that would bring distinction to the citizen wearing the largest number of tags. Think it over,

It is just as well, in considering what is done by the efforts of the society to know that in the year past over twenty thousand children were directly influenced by the Society through its seventy branches, and of this number over one thousand were made wards of the Society by judicial order. An immense amount of work has been done. In the local society large good has been accomplished. One significant result has been, all over the country that the crime of the abuse and neglect of children, is on the whole, on the decrease.

THE OUTSTANDING PUBLIC MAN IS SIR WILFRID

Independent Ottawa Paper Pays Strong Tribute to Ex-Premier

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

OTTAWA, Oct. 3.—Declaring that he stands above all other Canadian statesmen in the esteem and respect of the Canadian people, the Ottawa Morning Citizen (Independent) this morning warmly praises Sir Wilfrid Laurier and belittles those who criticize him for partisan reasons. The Citizen says: "Sir Wilfrid Laurier possibly never stood stronger in the public esteem than at the present time. He would seem to tower above the mere party leaders and reflect the national opinion. He is attacked by Mr. Henri Bourassa, the Quebec Nationalist leader, and by the purple-faced press of Ontario at the same time. The partisan organs in Ontario, representing the mediocrity on Parliament Hill, devote more space to misrepresenting Sir Wilfrid Laurier than to any serious criticism of the incompetence of their own leaders.

"Sir Wilfrid sees Ontario and Quebec as provinces of Canada, but he also sees Canada as a nation bigger than any one province. For this breadth of vision Sir Wilfrid is the outstanding public man in Canada and the constant object of attack from the Provincials."

A JOYFUL RE-UNION

Lance Corporal Fred. Long Home After Arduous Experience

There was a joyful re-union at the Grand Trunk Station on the arrival of the 5.35 train last night, when Lance-Corp. Fred. Long, the first Peterborough boy to return from a German prison camp, reached home. He was met at the station by his mother, sisters, and other relatives, and the meeting was a happy one indeed. The city was represented by Ald. F. H. Dobbin, chairman of the Reception Committee, and City Clerk Armstrong, and they took Lance-Corp. Long to his home in a motor car.

The wounded hero, although he has lost a leg and is wearing an artificial limb, looked to be in good health and spirits.

Lance-Corp. Long enlisted in Vancouver with a Western Scottish regiment in the first contingent, and went overseas as a signaller. At Langemarck he was wounded, and after a terrible experience was picked up by the Germans. It was found necessary to amputate his leg, and afterwards Lance-Corp. Long was exchanged by the Germans.

Large Deputation Wait Upon Council

Cheaper Method of Collecting Refuse is Desired by Majority of Ratepayers

The matter of reporting on and formulating a cheaper means of collecting night soil has again been delegated to the Property Committee of the City Council. A deputation that filled the Council Chamber to overflowing and occupied a portion of the Council Chamber, besides the Council [illegible] and by 10 o'clock had [illegible] that a schedule had been [illegible] Council a month rate [illegible] Aldermen [illegible] letting the present [illegible] the end of the year and invite next year's Council to [illegible] something better.

Mr. George Ball said that it was the intention of the city to handle something in the interest of the people they should be in a position to do it better than the people could.

Produce a Profit.

"To-day," said Mr. Ball, "we are living in an advanced age. We can do this work so that it will produce a profit instead of being a burden on the people. They do it in other cities. I would like the privilege of meeting the Council, or a committee and explain how this work can be made to produce a revenue. As an old alderman I always endeavoured to legislate in the interests of the taxpayers, and I think that is the duty of all members of the City Council," concluded Mr. Ball.

Mr. John Carlyle spoke at considerable length concerning the difficulties in connection with the matter, while another member of the deputation read a carefully prepared document which, among other things, intimated that the interests of the ratepayers would be served if fewer property owners and more workingmen found themselves on the Council.

[illegible] assured the deputation that it was the intention of the Council to take the matter up at a later date, and in the meantime we would ask the ratepayers to bear with the existing legislation.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that the matter of providing a remedy should not be delayed but should be taken up at once. He had favoured a cheaper rate when the present by-law was prepared. Ald. McIntyre took a similar stand.

Ald. Edgar admitted that he had supported the present by-law and its high rate of forty cents. After hearing the discussion, he wondered that the measure ever passed through the Council. He shouldered the blame on former Inspector Spence, who, Ald. Edgar claims, once remarked that he would not go around collecting fifteen cent pieces. It was then decided to adopt a higher rate so as to avoid the possibility of a deficit.

Mr. R. C. Braund favoured a collection three or four times a year, instead of every month.

On motion of Aldermen Stratton and McIntyre, the matter was left in the hands of the Property Committee to see what can be done to lower the present cost of collecting night soil.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

THIS DAY IN SPORT

This year's race in the big leagues has been characterized by a close and thrilling chase for the old gonfalon, but, when it comes to real excitement, it hasn't anything on the glorious year of 1908. That was some annum for the fans, believe me, and it is probable that half a century hence gray and grizzled grand-pops will be taking their children on their knees and telling them of those exciting days "back in 1908."

Yesterday was the anniversary of one of the greatest of the games played during those stirring closing days of the 1908 chase. On October 2 the White Sox led by Fielder Jones and the Naps of Napoleon Lajoie mingled on the Cleveland lot. The American League race had narrowed down to Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit, although St. Louis had been a dark horse almost up to that time. In th crucial game in the Sixth City Ed Walsh worked for the White Sox and Allie Joss was on the slab for the Naps. Walsh fanned fifteen Naps in eight innings. Of course he won? No. Geraldine, he did not win. The game was grabbed by Cleveland by a score of 1 to 0. Joe Birmingham making the lone tally. Cleveland held the lead by an eyelash up to the closing days of the struggle, but on the day prior to the end of the season the Naps lost to the Browns. On the wind-up day the White Sox and the Tigers met to decide the championship. Wild Bill Donovan went on the rubber for the Jennings bunch, and Doc White started for Chicago. The Tigers won easily 7 to 0.

In the National League the finish was just as close, the Cubs, Giants and Pirates all having a chance up to October 4th. On that date the Buccaneers played the Bruins in Chicago. A victory for Clarke's crew meant a pennant for the Pirate craft, but, alas, she was not to be Pittsburg lost 5 to 2, and it was up to Chicago and New York to fight it out. The Cubs and Giants were tied for first place. Fred Merkle's failure to touch second in an earlier game had resulted in a wrangle and the directors ordered the game to be played over on the day following the close of the season. Quite a few people went to the Polo grounds that day, and the game caused quite a bit of talk and newspaper comment. In fact, if it had been the end of the world that was to be pulled off, instead of a ball game, there probably wouldn't have been any more said about it. Pfiester started for the Cubs and Mathewson was up for the Giants. It wasn't Jack's day, and Chance yanked him after he had walked a couple of Giants and hit another. Old Mortified Three-Finger Brown was sent to the rescue. The Giants had got one run off Pfiester, and they managed to get one more off Brown. In the meantime the Bruins put across four tallies. As for what happened in Chicago when the news of the Cub victory was flashed over the wires—well, one might say that "pandemonium broke loose," but that would be too mild. One must needs fall back on that other old bromide—"the scene beggared description."

Eddie Murphy, one of Connie Mack's rah-rah boys, will celebrate his twenty-fifth birthday yesterday. Eddie was sold to Comiskey in the middle of the 1915 season, the Old Roman paying the Tall Tutor something like $15,000 for him, 'twas said. Murphy has not been worth much to the White Sox, and has been used in only a few games this year, his batting eye having failed him. Murphy was born in Hancock, N.Y., and was a Villanova student when Connie first lamped him. He got his professional seasoning with Wilmington, Scranton and Baltimore.

OLD COUNTRY FOOTBALL GOSSIP

In the Old Country games both the Celtics and Rangers had a close call in the Scottish League, scoring a goal each against nothing by their opponents, Hearts and St. Mirren. All the games in the Scottish League were fairly close, and the margins one or two goals.

In the Lancashire section Blackburn Rovers ran up a big score on Rochdale, while Manchester City and Everton played a tie. Southport defeated the famous Bolton Wanderers by a score of 3 to 0.

Notts Forest and Barnsley were the big scorers in the Midland section, the former defeating Sheffield by a score of 5 to 1, while Barnsley won from Lincoln City by 6 to 1. Notts County defeated Bradford by 2 to 1, after an exciting contest.

Queen's Park Rangers and Clapton played a scoreless draw in the London section, while Crystal Palace defeated Reading by 5 to 3. Millwall Athletic put over a surprise when they won from Tottenham Hotspurs by 4 to 1. The scores:

PTE. R. L. BUTCHER.

Pte. R. L. Butcher, son of Mr. Robert H. Butcher, 494 Bonacord Street, is officially reported wounded. Pte. Butcher is a Peterborough boy, but enlisted in an outside unit.

Pte. H. P. Laing, of Clarady, has been wounded in the recent fighting. His relatives received word to that effect yesterday.

Mr. Wm. Thompson, of South Monaghan, has received word that his son, Russell, who went overseas with the 21st Battalion, has been wounded in the leg, arm and lung. Mr. Thompson's home is on the Otonabee River, just this side of Jubilee Point.

Keene, Sept. 31.—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Fletcher received word on Thursday last their son, Albert Bishop Fletcher, has been wounded on active service. He enlisted in Peterborough in October 1914, with the 21st Kingston Battalion. Two brothers, Alfred and William, enlisted at the same time, the three being in the same battalion. Alfred and William were sent home a year ago, having contracted inflammatory rheumatism while in training for active service. John, a fourth son of the family, is at present overseas with the 93rd Battalion. Albert has been in France for over a year, having gone through the battles of St. Eloi, Zillebeke, and the heavy fighting now in progress on the Somme front, where he received his wounds. He was an active member of the Keene Methodist church and Sunday school, and his many friends will be pleased to learn that though his wounds are serious he is progressing well. Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher are also glad to hear from England eight years ago, residing at Keene.

In the list cabled from England yesterday of Canadian officers who have gone to France, appears the names of Lieuts. E. R. Hughes and W. G. Worth of the 93rd Battalion. Lieut. Worth is a member of the Bonnet-Worth firm, and was a lieutenant in the 46th Regiment. He was a platoon commander in D company of the 93rd. Lieut. Hughes was an officer in the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons and was in charge of the Apsley Police. C Company, 93rd.

Mr. Fitzgerald, 430 Sherbrian street has received word from her son, Lieut. Lorne Fitzgerald, that the 238th Forestry Battalion has safely arrived in England. They are encamped about thirty miles from London.

Mr. Stuart, Homewood Avenue, is in receipt of a letter from his son, Lieut. L. J. Stuart of the 93rd, who is now in France, in which Lieut. Stuart states that just before he left for the front, he met Lieut. T. D. Johnston, of the Mounted Rifles, and son of Col. Johnston of the 247th Battalion. Lieut. Johnston had been invalided to England from the front.

A consignment of 300 outfits for the 247th Battalion has arrived at the Armouries. Col. Johnston will now be able to issue uniforms to his recruits and this work will be done as soon as possible.

A card from Rev. J. G. Foster today gives some particulars about the wounding of his son, Lance-Corp. Grant Foster. The card is as follows: Cable from London, England, received to-day, states: "Your son is in New End Hospital, Hampstead, England; is bright and cheerful, and making satisfactory progress." The shell that burst in the dug-out, as he was delivering a letter to the night cook, killed five men on his left hand, took off his leg below the knee (afterwards amputated above case), and wounded twelve others.

Letters from Gunners Robert Thompson and Sydney Armstrong, local boys who went overseas with the Canadian Heavy Battery, and who have been attached to the 105th Canadian Siege Battery, Canadian Garrison Artillery, in order to get to the firing line as soon as possible, indicate that they are now "Somewhere in France." In a letter from Gunner Thompson to a friend, written September 26th, he says in part: "We are leaving for the front to-morrow at 8 o'clock. We expected to leave to-night, but they had some trouble getting a train. We go by Dover to Folkestone and across from there. Our guns and the rest of our stores are over there now. I will drop you a card from France just as soon as I get a chance. Don't know where they are going to send us. We are brigaded with three English Batteries and very likely will go down on the Somme some place. Remember me to all the people at home and do not forget to write soon and often. My address will be 105th Canadian Siege Battery, R.G.A., B.E.F., France care Army Post Office, London, England, and the same old number."

Mr. Fred. Cressman, who some time ago qualified as an aviator, has received word to report at Ottawa on October 16, to go overseas as a member of the Royal Naval Air Service.

Private Arthur Peters, son of Mr. Charles Peters, sends the following card from No. 1 Australian General Hospital, where he is wounded:

"I have been wounded in the back of my head, also under the right arm and in the side of the body from shrapnel. It's a bad wound, but not serious. I was hit down at the Somme. Perhaps you have heard of the charge we made there on the 16th of September."

LONDON, October 4.—Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, who is now with the French armies, sends a despatch analyzing Germany's man power. He says: "Of the 198 infantry divisions composing the present German army 117 consist of only three regiments of three battalions each instead of four regiments of three battalions. The proof that the Germans have now no strategic reserve is shown by the manner in which divisions are moved from one battlefield to another without rest or reorganization."

Among other instances, he says: "The forty-third reserve division was taken from Verdun on June 10, and on June 24 it was discovered in front of Lutsk. Of ten divisions taken from the Somme front between Sept. 2 and 9 for a rest, four have already been employed to relieve others in Artois. On the occasion of the attack of the allies on Sept. 12 to 15, a division, already entrained and well on the way to Russia, had to be brought back hastily to the Somme.

ONLY THREE DIVISIONS.

"It is perfectly clear from an examination of prisoners, from the reports of deserters, and from identifying the dead on the different fronts that Germany and Austria each has now actually in reserve but three divisions, when, at the commencement of the attack on Verdun, after the concentrating on the Avocourt-Fresnes front of sixteen divisions, the General Staff had still in reserve on the western front eight divisions; four in the north, one in Champagne and three in the east.

"In regard to their reserves of men, the figures are even more significant. Of the 1916 class it is certain that all have been incorporated in the ranks except the weaklings who have been put back. By July 15 among the fifteen divisions on the Verdun front the average was 25 per cent. of the 1916 class. In ten other divisions the figures reached 50 per cent. on the same date.

WHOLE 1916 CLASS UTILIZED.

"On the Somme front by August 15 the average of the 1916 class was 22 per cent. among thirty-two regiments. Thus it can only be concluded that practically the whole of the 1916 class has been utilized. The calling up of the 1916 class commenced in December, 1915. At the present time at least 25 per cent. of this class are incorporated into fighting units and already at the front, whilst the remaining 75 per cent. are in various stages of training behind the lines. The calling up of the 1916 class commenced in June and July, 1916, and is being spread over a period of time."

The Cattle Market.

Union Stock Yards— Receipts, 71 cars, with 994 cattle, 181 calves, 1,119 hogs, and 1,199 sheep and lambs.

The market appears this week to be overrun with too many cattle of medium quality not exactly common grade, but a poor medium. Prices in this class are anywhere from 25 to 50 cents lower than a week ago, and many farmers who have plenty of feed on hand are said to be losing a good opportunity to buy these medium steers at prices that would make them good money later on. While the medium cattle and light stockers are lower, good butcher are holding quite steady at around $7.25 to $7.50.

Lambs and sheep steady.

Hogs steady.

GERMANY ADMITS THAT THE BRITISH FLEET CANNOT BE DESTROYED

LONDON, October 4.—A remarkable and interesting admission is made in a book by the German novelist, Anton Fendrich, advance copies of which have just reached Berne, that the public has grave doubts about the genuineness of the Prussian naval "victory" of Jutland.

The book is an account of conversations which the author had recently with Prince Henry, the Kaiser's brother; Admiral von Scheer, the chief of the High Seas Fleet; his Excellency the Governor of Heligoland, an unnamed chief of the Admiralty General Staff, and other naval chiefs.

Hatred of England, writes a correspondent, who has read the book, is the principal characteristic of these conversations.

Prince Henry was travelling on the special Admiralty train, which carried Herr Fendrich to Williamshaven, and the author was presented to him by a high naval officer. "So you want to see our ships?" said the Kaiser's brother, lighting a cigarette.

PRAISES FLEET'S EFFICIENCY.

"I can tell you," he went on, "that no one realizes the pitch of efficiency which our fleet has reached. An extraordinary high standard of technique had to be achieved to overcome all our difficulties. Everything is on a magnificent scale, as you shall see. We are always ready, but 'they' won't come out."

Two conversations with Admiral Von Scheer are recorded, one before and one immediately after the battle of Jutland. On the first occasion the Admiral pointed with his finger to the inevitable map, and said, "Don't you see that England lies like a barrier before us in the North Sea? We've had some luck over Heligoland. That is the barrier which we put against theirs. At least we can go and look for the English, whereas they must sit tight and wait. But the barrier is there, and the fellow does not dare to come out. The English have not got a war fleet; theirs is an insurance navy."

In the course of the conversation three days after the battle of Jutland Admiral Von Scheer said:

"No one needs to be told that I am overjoyed at the display just made by our fleet. I am a Protestant parson's son, and know in this battle I was guided by Him who reigns above. You understand what I say. Admiral Jellicoe had the opportunity of doing what England, its press, Parliament, and Government had threatened to do for years—to destroy us. And what has actually happened? We have given them one between the teeth, and they've had enough for the present.

"We cannot destroy the English fleet, nor was it ever our aim to do so. Our aim, as I see it, is to punish the English so severely, as in the North Sea battle, that they will leave us in peace. In this task help from above will not be wanting."

BERLIN HAS DOUBTS.

After the Jutland battle Herr Fendrich rushed off to Wilhelmshaven to congratulate his highly placed acquaintance. He then returned to Berlin. "The first question put to me by friends in this flabby capital," he says, "was, 'Who really won in the North Sea—we or the English?' It was another example of the old spirit of cynicism, and I answered with a curse. Two days later came the second report of the Admiralty Staff, in which the loss of the Lutzow and the Rostock was announced. 'So, you see,' people said to me, 'something was being kept back. Evidently the English were right in saying we abandoned the field of battle.'"

TANKS' SIZE EXAGGERATED.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—According to a British naval officer, who arrived here from England on the White Star liner Baltic, the armoured tractors, or "tanks," on the western front are being manned by officers, artificers, and men from the naval dockyards, where the machines were fitted up. The size had been very much exaggerated in the press the officer said. They were not more than 25 feet long, 10 feet wide and 12 feet high.

"The weight of these 'tanks'" he continued, "is from 30,000 to 60,000 pounds, including guns and ammunition. There is nothing so wonderful in their jumping over the German trenches, because the latter are nearly all constructed with narrow openings. The broad flat wheels from five to seven feet long, are strengthened with the finest steel springs."

The new British "tanks" or armoured tractors used successfully in the recent fighting on the Somme front are manned by sailors, and are considered an arm of the British navy, according to the Lord Bishop of Worcester who arrived on the Baltic.

"My eldest son, who is a naval officer, has command of one of these tanks, 100 of which have been sent to aid the Russians in their offensive," said the Bishop.

Prohibition Good For Northern Country

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Oct. 4.—J. E. Rogers, Superintendent of the Provincial Police, reports wonderful results from prohibition in the north country.

Drink Glass of Water Before Breakfast to Wash Out Poisons.

To see the fine healthy bloom in your face, to your skin get clearer and clearer wake up without a headache, coated tongue or a nasty breath, in fact to feel your best, day in and day out, just try inside-bathing every morning for one week.

Before breakfast each day drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it as a harmless way of washing from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile, toxins; thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on empty stomach is wonderfully inviting. It clears out all the fermentations, gases and acidity and you enjoy a splendid appetite for breakfast.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate will cost little at the drug store but is quite sufficient to demonstrate that just hot water and hot water cleanses, sweetens and freshens the entire system, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the blood and internal organs. Those who are subject to constipation, biliousness attacks, acid stomach, rheumatism twinges, also those whose skin is sallow and complexion pale are assured that one week of inside-bathing will have them both looking and feeling better in every way.

Winning Friends by Telephone

"I HAVE never met that young man face to face," said a business man recently, as he hung up his receiver after a telephone conversation; "but the way he talks over the telephone is typical of the whole organization of that house. They always answer every question in a polite and courteous manner. They never keep you waiting unnecessarily. They all seem to take a personal interest in what you have to say, and you can be sure that your telephone requests will have the most careful attention."

Isn't such an endorsement of your house by those who deal with you by telephone a valuable business asset?

It is well worth while to make sure every employee in your organization appreciates the value to himself and to your house of telephone courtesy.

HUMOR OF TRENCHES APPROVED IN PRINT

Cheeriness of "The Growler," Organ Of Montreal Soldiers, Delights the Brooklyn Eagle

The columns of The Growler, are meant for Tommies only. Yet, it is a by no means uninteresting paper for civilians, even if they are distant neutrals. It is issued by the 14th Canadians, stationed "somewhere in Flanders," consists of 12 pages, edited by a regular editorial staff of officers of the regiment. It is full of the atmosphere of the trenches, in which its editorial office is located. Volume I., Number 1, reached Brooklyn, New York, and is reviewed at some length by The Brooklyn Eagle. This paper quotes a few of the editorial notes from The Growler as follows: Of necessity, our humor must be blunt—to appeal to men spending their days and nights in wet and muddy trenches, dodging shells, and cursing the weather, the Huns, the quartermaster, the transport officer, and anything else that occurs to them. As the name will suggest, our columns are open to every grouch in the battalion, and a growl on any subject, whether the grievance be either real or fancied, will be joyfully received and have immediate insertion.

Much Growled At

Statements derogatory to the characters of the adjutant transport officer or the quartermaster are especially welcome, and three months' free subscription is given where the said statements can be proved. Untrue statements regarding the above will also be inserted, in so far as those do not involve the editorial staff in suits for libel where the punishment would be imprisonment—no fear of a monetary fine will have any weight, as you cannot get blood out of a stone, and we are "Stony."

But if we can manage to take their (the men's) minds off the unpleasant surroundings for an hour every two weeks, we will feel that we have achieved our aim.

"Mock Chicken Soup"

There follow satirical articles, atrocious puns, epigrams of service and peace. There are even recipes, such as the following for "Mock Chicken Soup." Take a piece of white paper and a lead pencil and draw from memory the outline of a hen. Then carefully remove the feathers. Pour one gallon of boiling water into a saucepan and sprinkle a pinch of salt on the hen's tail. Now let it simmer. If the soup has blood appearance, stir it with a lead pencil, which will make it more of a brunette. Let it boil two hours. Then cook the hen away from the saucepan and serve the soup hot, with a glass of ice water on the side.

Enemy of Britain

The Duke of Cumberland is a grandson of the 5th son of George III., who became King of Hanover on the death of William IV., and son of the last King of Hanover, who was dethroned for siding with Austria against Prussia. He was born in England in 1845, and married Princess Thyra of Denmark, a sister of Queen Alexandra. His son, the Duke of Brunswick, is married to the Kaiser's only daughter. The Duke of Cumberland has been twice under restraint, and, like his son, is said to have been driven mad by the war.

Honor For Von Tirpitz

Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, who was forced into retirement by the U-boat controversy, is still the idol of all classes in Germany. This is proven by thousands of letters received by him from every part of the empire and his election to honorary membership of the Society of Mine Owners and Mining Engineers of Rhenish-Prussia. Only once before in the whole history of the society has this honor been bestowed upon a man who was not a mining expert. In 1873 the society elected Prince Bismarck, the Iron Chancellor, to membership.

MOBILIZE BY RAILWAY

Methods By Which France Drilled Herself For Crisis

A review of the military operations beginning with the mobilization shows that the railroads of France have accomplished everything that was expected of them, contrary to the expectations of 1870. The first consideration in developing the efficiency of the military railroad is the maximum number of trains that can be run one after another within a given time. Consequently all military trains are utilized to run at the same reduced speed, following each other at very close intervals under the block system, without risk of accident, the continuous movement accomplishes more than would be done by high speed which would necessarily involve increased spaces between trains.

In preparation for this intense movement necessitated by the mobilization, the officers of the railway service of the French army met every year under the direction of the general staff, to study the problems involved, each officer being placed on the spot where in time of war he would be called upon to exercise his functions. The last drill of this kind was in April, 1914, when the manoeuvres undertaken supposed the grouping of two armies face to face. Orders for the operations had been established, taking into account the vicissitudes of battle and all the needs of the army, so far as possible bringing their men face to face with problems, incidents and accidents and consequent necessity for immediate decisions such as they would have to make in time of war. That was how the men charged with the transportation of troops prepared themselves for the mobilization and the intensive movement of military trains that has continued ever since.

INDIANS GOOD SOLDIERS

Camp Life And Soldiering Appealed To Canadian Braves

A correspondent wrote from Camp Borden, as follows: Many tribes of fighting Indians, ancient rivals, are represented in the 114th Battalion. The Delawares, the Iroquois, Hurons, Abenakis and others are among them, but the Indians are united in a common cause. Outside of their training, they are now chiefly concerned with their sports. They play the original Indian game of lacrosse, and the team representing the Brock Rangers is able to hold its own with practically all teams at camp. They also have a crack baseball team in which there are several players of the Bender and Meyer type. The battalion has a band which is made up almost entirely of Indians. The Indians have proved themselves agile and quick at learning because they have officers whom they know and respect. They like to handle weapons and they have taken a liking to modern methods of warfare as practised at Camp Borden. Many of them are crack shots and clever scouts. It is also natural that they should like camp life and activities in the open country.

There are five ministers of the gospel among the members of the Brock Rangers of Haldimand County, Ontario, which is officially the 114th overseas battalion.

Deadly Machine Guns

The machine guns of the Royal Canadian Regiment inflicted fearful mortality at Zillebeke. Between them and the Princess Patricia's was a gap fifty yards wide, into which the Germans poured on finding it undefended, and were smashed on both flanks, and mowed down by scores. On their arrival at the "Appendix," only forty yards from the enemy's front trenches, they were met with a withering fire which almost obliterated them.

Plea For Harmony

The Ottawa Citizen says: Let us, for the sake of our common Canadian manhood, cease accusing everyone who differs from us politically of being a potential traitor to the cause, or of being lukewarm or indifferent to the outcome of the struggle now going on overseas and in which so many Canadians of all races and tongues, of all faiths and all shades of political belief are fighting side by side.

"TRAQUIL" ARTILLERY

Amusing Time-Table of Canadian Gunner—Reminded Of Home

Interesting references to life with the Canadian artillery at the front are contained in letters received by Mr. Chas. P. Ludington, Hull, from Gunner K. P. Ludington, in Flanders. "We went to bed last night at 10.30," says one letter. "We were called at 11.30 to lay the gun; retired again at 12.30; awakened at 1.45 to carry ammunition; bed at 2.30; called to action at 4 o'clock a.m. and have been at it since up till an hour or so ago. During a lull this morning at 5 o'clock, I made a fire in a brazier and mixed the soup. It tasted good. The fellows say that nothing ever went so well as that did. I am very glad to get the tobacco, too. You can't imagine how in a further letter he says: "I have rank the English tobacco is!" not written because we have been taking up new positions on the line, working from dawn until midnight. Last night we worked up till 1 o'clock in the morning. At 2.30 a.m. I went on guard and had to pace the lonely beat until 4.30 a.m. I slept then till 8.30, when action was called. We were in action for the rest of the day and I am now in the gun pit taking it easy for a few minutes. We have a little brook running by our dugouts and at nights when everything is quiet it fairly lulls on ete sleep. Sometimes I can almost imagine it is Kazubazun creek, but not for long because we fall asleep as soon as we 'hit' the bed—or rather bunks."

ALLY AND DAUGHTER

Sir George Foster's Bold Spirit Approved In London

All through Sir George Foster's addresses there runs the vein of an intense Canadian nationalism, the pride of a young nation which has grown up to manhood and feels its strength and knows its capacity, says a London, Eng., writer. There is no mistaking the tone and, for our part, we welcome it most heartily. Canada joined in this war as a free nation, holding the same ideals as Great Britain. It was her war just as much as it was England's war. She came as an Ally as well as a daughter, and she is looking forward in the future to a real share "in the direction of the future of the Empire." Those are important words. "If we can found Empires, conquer space, and learn the lessons of self-sacrifice essential to Empire, why not," asked Sir George Foster, "mingle our knowledge and the wisdom we possess in the direction of the future of the Empire?" That is what Australia and New Zealand are also asking, and they certainly will not find the people of Great Britain reluctant to concede to them what they crave.

Capt. Harper's End.

Captain Harper, who hailed from Kamsack, in distant Saskatchewan, was ministering to an officer and three desperately wounded men at Zillebeke. He refused to leave them when the lull came and the Germans were seen advancing, although they urged him to do so. "I said I'd stand by you boys," he said, "and I will." A few minutes later and he, too, was gone.

HUN SPIES AND BOORS

Beautiful Adventuress and Insulting Herr Schmidt at Swiss Ball

Two dramatic incidents marked the great ball and concert given by the American colony in Lausanne on behalf of the fund for the Allied prisoners of war and the invalided Swiss soldiers. In the midst of one of the dances, Swiss detectives entered the Casino and arrested a young and beautiful Spanish woman on a warrant charging her with being a spy in the pay of Germany. The incident created a great sensation, as the prisoner has been for some time a popular and prominent figure in the best society in Switzerland.

The second sensation occurred shortly before midnight, when Herr Schmidt, formerly Austrian Consul at Lausanne, and a director of the Palace Hotel, made insulting references to the Allies, and was promptly knocked down by a well-known Swiss resident. The manager of the Casino summoned the gendarmes, and both Herr Schmidt and his assailant were arrested.

FACED CERTAIN DEFEAT

Lloyd-George's Amazing Statistics for June, 1916, in West

In an interview with a French writer, David Lloyd George makes the amazing statement that the Germans when they were smashing through the Russian lines in Galicia in 1915 could probably have done the same thing against the Allies in the West, if they had tried it. "I will tell you one sensational fact," said the Minister. "Would you like to know the actual amount of ammunition we possessed on June 1, 1915? There were the supplies in the hands of the army and stored at its parks. These are, in case of serious fighting, used up in about a week.

"And what did we have behind those supplies? Merely a reserve supply of 71,000 shells. If a great attack had come, what would have happened to us? If the Germans had thrown against us the hail of shells they then fired at the Russians, I do not see how we should ever have got out of it."

Practical Joke Cures

An Australian soldier struck dumb by shell-shock in France recovered his speech as the result of a further shock—a trick played on him by three other wounded soldiers, with the connivance of a physician. At the hospital in England a hammock had been stretched between two trees on the river bank, and the dumb soldier was persuaded to occupy it. As he was dozing off in the summer sun the rope near his head was suddenly cut, with the result that the occupant turned a somersault and fell into the water. As he clambered to the bank he called out irritably, "Who did that?" The man now talks in a hoarse whisper.

Dislike the Slackers

In parts of Lincolnshire, where it has been customary to employ Irish farm hands, the local laborers refuse to work with the imported men, and farmers are declining to employ them. The English laborers are angry because while young Britishers are in Ireland as soldiers receiving 25 cents a day, the Irish laborers take their places here at $1.87 and $1.75 a day. Local shopkeepers and innkeepers decline to accommodate the Irishmen or have anything to do with them.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favourite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

Both will discard modern clothing, cooking and eating utensils, and live in the Adirondack woods, like prehistoric man and woman.

After a few days Miss Hammerstein (clad in the skins of animals she two will kill) and learned in the art of lighting a fire by rubbing sticks, and building her own shelter, will leave Knowles and strike out in the woods for herself.

She expects to return to modern life in 30 days, clad in a costume made entirely by herself.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Minstrel

A Medieval Story of the Rhine

By P. A. MITCHEL.

Not far from Ehrenbreitstein, on the Rhine and on the same side of the river, is a castle, or, rather, the ruin of a castle, which looms up against the sky when seen from the stream below by the thousands of tourists who pass in the Rhine boat. Light clouds sail above it, winds circle about it, as when it was a fortress and the banner of its possessor floated above its highest tower. On looking up at it from the steamer's deck one may fancy its drawbridge let down to the distant rattle of chains, its portcullis raised and the baron himself at the head of a body of his retainers emerge and ride proudly down the declivity.

At any rate, such were my flights of fancy as I watched it while passing up the river and saw it appear faint as mist ahead, reveal itself as we steamed by, then recede and finally disappear in the distance behind.

I asked a gentleman who was gazing upon it as intently as I if he could tell me anything about it when it was in its prime. He proved to be a student of the history of the castles of the Rhine and gave me an incident pertaining to this particular one that I afterward wrote out as follows:

During the seventeenth century a family known by the name of Wrentheim occupied the castle, the last possessor of that name being Baron Caspar Wrentheim. This nobleman had no sons, his only child being a daughter, Bertha. Since this girl would inherit all her father's possessions at his death, besides being a very attractive woman, there were many suitors for her hand. Among them was Count Carl Kellerman, the possessor of an estate lying a few leagues from the river and not far from Wrentheim castle. He was a commoner who had grown rich in trade and had purchased his title. Very ambitious, he made up his mind that he would marry Bertha, thereby becoming the possessor of a castle and a feudal lord.

One morning when Bertha was walking on the battlements of her father's castle she saw a cavalcade approaching. Seeing that it would enter the inclosure, she went to a room overlooking the courtyard. There she saw Count Carl Kellerman dismount from his horse and enter the living apartments of the castle.

Kellerman was fifty years old and extremely ill favored. He was bent in the back and bald, and his face indicated a grasping disposition. Bertha took a great dislike to him even at seeing him. He had not been in the castle long before her father came to her and informed her that the count had come to propose for her hand. The baron had replied that he would refer the matter to his daughter. Bertha sent back a refusal. The count left the castle showing his spleen at being refused, and the baron knew that he would find some pretext for a quarrel. This he dreaded, for, though the count was not a fugwain—that is, a feudal lord—he was rich and could hire men to fight for him.

Not long after Kellerman's refusal some of the baron's retainers while crossing territory owned by the latter were attacked by him and his hirelings, who were far more numerous, overpowered and taken prisoners. Kellerman sent Wrentheim word that his men had been trespassing on his property. He would release them if the baron would give him his daughter to wife; if not he would put out their eyes and send them back to him. He gave the baron a week to consider his proposition.

Both father and daughter were much beloved by their retainers because of their kindness and affection for all who were in any way dependent on their bounty. This offer placed them in a desperate position. Either Bertha must marry the hated Kellerman or the captives, some of whom were the fathers of families, while others were dear either as brothers or lovers, would be blinded for the rest of their lives.

Bertha secretly resolved that she would save the prisoners, but before a marriage with the detestable man who had made such an inhuman proposition would take her own life.

One evening when the baron and his daughter were sitting together bemoaning the misfortune that had befallen them a servant announced that a minstrel was without who would, if permitted, afford entertainment. The baron was about to direct that the man be sent away when Bertha interposed, saying that the music might serve to draw their minds from their trouble. The baron assented, and the minstrel was admitted.

Wilhelm—the only name the young man gave himself—was tall and straight as an arrow. He unslung his harp as easily as if it had been a crossbow and was about to begin a song when the baron said to him:

"I wonder that one should devote himself to the harp whose arm seems far more fitted to wield the battleax."

"If you prefer military service to song I will give it," replied the minstrel.

"Would that you could serve us in that way, but it is impossible."

"Why so?"

The baron gave an account of the application of Count Kellerman for Bertha's hand and of the means he had taken to force the alliance. When he had finished the minstrel asked at what time the terms must be accepted or rejected and was informed that only three days remained for a decision.

"Since you require military service of me," said Wilhelm, "I will not waste time in song. Adieu. Perhaps I shall soon see you again." And the harpist took his departure.

He was not seen after that for some hours. Baron Wrentheim attached no importance to his coming and was not impressed by his going. Not so Bertha. She had listened with rapt attention to his music and when he had gone said to her father that something told her the young man would bring them deliverance. But the baron was despondent, and she failed to arouse hope in him.

The next day the minstrel returned and asked to see the baron. When the latter appeared Wilhelm said to him:

"I have been to the home of Count Kellerman, where I offered to sing for him. He listened to my song, in which I predicted that he would marry a beautiful woman and become a feudal lord. He was so pleased that he gave orders that I be well treated. I learned where the prisoners were kept and during the night made an inspection of the building. Give me a force of picked men, and tonight I will liberate them. They are guarded by a hundred hirelings, who, if surprised, may be put to flight by half their number of real men at arms."

The baron, inspired by hope, at once gave orders for the selection of the men required. He longed to head the expedition himself, but this would not be just to Wilhelm. Besides, the baron was too deeply interested to retain that coolness which was required. At nightfall fifty of the best men among the baron's retainers were gathered in the courtyard of the castle, and the minstrel, who now carried a sword instead of a harp, after telling them that they were to go to rescue their comrades and save the Countess Bertha from marriage with a villain, gave them their instructions. They were to go separately and by different routes to a wood near Count Kellerman's estate, where they would lie concealed till the minstrel appeared to lead them to the rescue. They would hear the castle clock strike the hour of midnight and must then be ready for what was to follow.

As soon as the men had received these instructions they began to leave the castle, some in groups of two or three. But most of them singly. It was an hour before the last man, the minstrel himself, left. Before going Bertha pressed his hand and bade him godspeed. Then he struck out by the shortest route to his destination, reaching the rendezvous just as the castle clock in the distance could be faintly heard striking the hour of midnight.

Kellerman's precautions against a rescue had been fairly well taken. He had put out a picket on the road by which a force might approach from the castle, but he had relied upon this and a guard of 200 men to protect the building containing the prisoners, dividing it into reliefs, so that half the guard would be always under arms. The rescuing party not having gone to the attack in a body and not in any case by the road, the count's guards were ignorant of the few but resolute men in the wood not half a league distant from them.

Wilhelm led his men crouching among the bushes toward their goal till but a few hundred yards remained to be traversed. Six men carried a log, with which they were to batter down the doors of the prison and release the prisoners. When a signal—two shots from an arquebus—was given the attacking party were to engage the guards while the six men used the battering ram.

Suddenly two shots rang out on the still air and were followed by terrific yells. The guards on duty sprang to arms, but had not time to form before a wedge shaped body of men split them in two parts, driving them from the building they were charged with protecting. Then commenced a series of loud thuds on the prison door. In a few minutes it yielded, and the prisoners poured forth, each man being handed arms as he appeared.

Meanwhile the hundred men of the guard who were sleeping were aroused. Those who were engaged were rallied, and an overwhelming force was ready to repel the enemy. Too late. A shrill whistle gave the signal for retreat, and Wilhelm, in command of a rear guard, enraged Kellerman's men, while the advance, in which were the released prisoners, made their way back in the direction of the castle. Shortly before dawn all passed over the drawbridge in no haste, for the count, having lost his prisoners, had withdrawn his men.

The courtyard was ablaze with torches; all the inmates were present to welcome their returned victorious comrades and the rescued prisoners. The old pile rang with acclamations. The baron, with Bertha, stepped forth to thank the minstrel, and, after doing so, the baron said:

"What can I bestow upon you for this great service?"

"Nothing, except what I came for. I am Wilhelm Ballenstein, the son and heir of Baron Ballenstein, whose castle stands near the confluence of the Rhine and the Moselle. Hearing of the Lady Bertha, I came in the guise of a minstrel to satisfy myself as to the truth of reports of her beauty and good qualities before asking to be honored with her hand. I am more than satisfied and beg to be entered on the list of her many suitors."

The victory was followed by a wedding, and in time the groom drove Count Kellerman out of the country.

FELL IN A FAINT.

DOGS OF FRANCE.

SEATTLE, Wash., Oct. 3. — The S.S. Victoria arrived recently from Nome, with more than $1,000,000 of new gold. F. Smith and wife of the Koyouka district, near the mouth of the Yukon, brought more than $200,000 of gold dust. B. Blanker and wife, from the new district at Marshall, on the Lower Yukon, brought $48,000 in dust.

On the Victoria were 24 Siberian wolf dogs and malamutes, each travelling on a passenger ticket. Some of the dogs will go to France for service with the mountain armies.

FOUR WEEKS IN HOSPITAL

Mrs. Brown Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio.—"For years I suffered so sometimes it seemed as though I could not stand it any longer. It was all in my lower organs. At times I could hardly walk, for if I stepped on a little stone I would almost faint. One day I did faint and my husband was sent for and the doctor came. I was taken to the hospital and stayed four weeks but when I came home I would faint just the same and had the same pains.

A friend who is a nurse said for me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I began taking it that very day for I was suffering a great deal. It has already done me more good than the hospital. To anyone who is suffering as I was my advice is to stop in the first drug-store and get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before you go home."—Mrs. W. C. CONFESSIONS OF A CENSOR

A Certain Postal Station in an Allied Country. — One of the oddest things about censoring is the easy way in which one takes to reading other people's private correspondence. Shades of the past, when one averted an honorable eye from the letter lying half open on a friend's (or even an enemy's) desk! And here I sit, because it is war time, before a large table covered with serried rows of letters, with instructions to open them all, and search diligently therein for first, information likely to be useful to the enemy; second, anything likely to discourage recruiting; and, third, false information likely to alarm or depress a credulous public.

After one uneasy day I take to it as a duck to water, and the qualms of a lifetime vanish. My inquisitive nose goes impartially into business letters, family letters, love letters and letters simply written to pass away the time. There are more family letters and love letters than any other kind though I suspect that they are also partly the result of idleness and the franking system.

SUFFERING PASSED OVER.

The little room in which we sit is a cell in the large hive of a hospital in the war zone, and the writers of these letters are either sick or wounded, and their first thought is to write of their safety and welfare. This does not take the form of long descriptions of illness or wounds. The great majority of the men linger long and lovingly over the hospital menu, with its four meals a day, and make a grateful reference to the kindness of doctors and nurses; but the cause of their being in hospital is dismissed as a "septic wound," or "that ferocious trouble" the foe of the British soldier, called dysentry. Suffering is rarely mentioned, but most writers seem to prefer sounds to dysentry.

'ONLY AN 'OPPERISHON.'

Among many Spartans one, however, stands out, who wrote that, barring pneumonia, and a coming "'eq perishon" on his "thum" he feels well in himself. Very little comment is made on the country and surroundings, though the writers are probably out of England for the first time. For one reason the patients are carried from ship to bed in a closed ambulance, but even to those allowed in the grounds the only subjects worthy of mention are the perpetual sun, "the same as we call in England hot," says one cautious writer, and the "antiques" of the night gowned inhabitants, which in this sense does not mean antiquities. Only a budding Marie Lloyd, with the willing assistance of idle friends in the ward, occasionally undertakes to comment on the customs of the country to some credulous friend in an English hamlet. On the other hand the sight of electric trams is greeted with delight in scores of letters, and commented on with loving detail.

TYPICAL LETTERS.

There are several things which make reading these letters easier than at first seems possible, when one is incensed by the sight of hundreds of pencil-scrawled pages. To begin with, few letters are very long, with the exception of a percentage of rambling love letters, and the formula of beginning and end takes up a certain amount of space. "I write these few lines, hoping to find you in the best of health. As I am glad to say I am in the Pink. (The fact of being in the hospital is not allowed to interfere with purity of style.) Right back soon. From your loving soldier husband to my dearest loving wife and darling children," or "Fondest love from yours ever-loving," is the usual beginning and end, with a suitable arrangement of crosses for kisses.

Crosses occur in all the letters except the business ones, and are bestowed on men friends and also on young ladies to whom the writer signs himself "Yours truly."

Between these formulas the censor's eye travels rapidly over a glancing reference to health, a description of the day's routine, with careful analysis of the food, a request for parcels, and a lament for those which have never arrived. Messages to friends and inquiries about the children, and the letter is read. There is another type of letter that is infinitely more trouble. It is well written, in a very small hand, and very long. The writer does not feel in the Pink, nor are kisses included. He thinks and comments on what he sees, and speculates (generally wrong) and gives names, and altogether the censor cures his power of skating on thin ice of what may not be said.

THE LOVE LETTERS.

As for the love letters you may think that knowing they are to be read by the censor reduces them to letters unworthy of the name, missives of an early Victorian propriety. The married man, writing a devoted, affectionate letter to his wife upon family matters is far more disturbed at the idea of the censoring to follow than the ardent lover, who lavishes kisses and endearments brazenly throughout the letter. He even writes S.W.A.K. (sealed with a kiss) across the open flap of the envelope cheerfully unconscious that the censor, who does not include kisses in his war work, performs the office with some mechanical device, or simpler still, a damp rag.

LESSONS FROM CANADA

Our Troop Movements Superior To American, Is Admission

The Dominion, even less military than ourselves, and without the pretentious permanent efficiency claimed by Washington bureaucrats, adopted a business-like method of transporting its volunteers across the continent an equal distance. Ottawa simply included in the contract for troop movement everything that went with it. The railroad companies not only were required to furnish proper cars on which the men could sleep in comfort, instead of the three-to-two-seats-in-day-coaches methods on this side, but by the contract were bound to furnish the travelling troops with three hot meals a day. And the men got them. Why could not this have been done in this country? If the job had been left to the railroads, as in Canada, it might have been accomplished with more credit to the Government and more comfort to the soldiers.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

SCORES RECRUITING

Newfoundland's Youths Compared With England's. By Church Paper

"I may say that the information I have from our Marine department is that not a single sailor has refused to sign on because of the perils of the sea." In that brief statement in the British House of Commons, Mr. Walter Runciman gave a record of British tars that deserve to be written in letters of gold and preserved to the end of the ages, says the Methodist Monthly Greetings of Newfoundland. The waters around Great Britain are strewn with deadly mines, and pirate submarines are on the watch for the peaceful merchant ship, but British tars go straight on, nothing daunted, as if all were calm and safe. There is not a shirker, not a craven coward, amongst them. Every man a hero, doing his duty bravely and saying nothing about it. That is the type of man that built up the British nation and will keep the old flag flying, despite all the attacks of dastardly Teutons. We need more of that stock in Newfoundland. Some of the outports are cutting a poor figure in this war, whether from lack of information or from lack of manliness may be an open question. But this much remains. While in the Old Country married men up to 45 years of age are marching to the colors, in Newfoundland hundreds of young men are content to stay at home and see their comrades attempt to do double duty, because they fail to respond to the call for King and Country.

Are you Bilious?

Don't let it run too long. It will lead to chronic indigestion. In the meanwhile you suffer from miserable, sick headaches, nervousness, depression and sallow complexion. Try CHAMBERLAIN'S TABLETS. They relieve fermentation, indigestion — gently but surely cleanse the system and bring other organs and tissue in perfect functionation.

A WAITING EXPLOSION

Little Anxieties of Life Among Canadian Big Guns

A Canadian artilleryman writes as follows describing his living quarters: "We have the happiest little home imaginable here in Belgium. Everything is fixed up fine as regards living quarters. We sit around, smoking, singing and telling stories till all hours of the night. Sandwiched in between are frequent calls to action and you ought to see us jump when the signal is given.

"Last night just after supper we heard the familiar whizz of a 'Fritz' shell and waited for it to land—which it did about one hundred and fifty yards away. It was followed by three others in quick succession. And then all was still except the roaring of the stove. 'Just a little salute to let us know they are on the job,' remarked Sergt. (Tommy) Williams, as he rolled another cigaret. 'We should worry,' said Bill-Hawkins, the biggest man in our 'sub,' about six feet two, and the finest old scout in the world. And we settled back in our bunks again as unconcerned as possible."

"We keep quite fashionable hours here," says another passage, "as we do not have to get up generally until somebody goes and gets the breakfast and then of course we DO scramble out. Our parade is at 9.30, for which we have to be shaved, blankets rolled up, huts cleaned, and 'Old Lizzie,' our gun, nicely polished up, too. After inspection we 'stand down.' As we have everything about the guns in first class order there is nothing for us to do but saw wood for the fire and lay around, always, of course, being on the alert for action."

THE BRAVE LADS OF THE 93RD BATTALION.

A soldier lad went overseas
With the 93rd Battalion,
And e'er he was there a month,
He heard his wife had died and left him.
Her little children are all alone
At the mercy of strangers,
For their aunts and cousins,
Grandmothers and all,
Are overseas with their daddy.

The father sits and mourns for them,
At evening, by the camp fire,
Wishing he would of stayed at home
With his wife and little children;
For then, he says, she might of lived;
I feel pretty sure of it;
For she needed a protection by her side,
Instead of total strangers.

One month has passed;
Then he hears from his lass,
The oldest of all the family;
She is but a lass, not out of her teens;
But she has to act the mother
To her little brothers and sisters.
So thus it is that many a home
Has been broken up by this cruel war.

Oh, I wonder if the Kaiser knew
Of the hearts that he was going to break,
And of the sleepless nights the soldiers have,
Trying to win their country's honour,
Surely he didn't think England
Would give in to his burly commands,
When he thought he would take France,
And rule it to suit himself.

But I guess now that he wishes
He would never have started to fight
With countries better fitted;
To fight and conquer with all their might.
For the ninety-third is an army,
That are noted for their strength and vim;
And I guess when the Kaiser
Sees them coming his way,
He will run for all that's in him.

For the men of the different battalions
Will make him suffer
More than he realized,
When he started to bully the French;
But he will get all that is coming,
And, maybe, more than he expects,
For he thought he could grasp victory
As soon as he started to fight.
So now we will leave all our heroes
Who weren't afraid to join,
To fight for his king and country,
Although he left his loved ones behind;
So let us see in the future,
How many lurkers we have,
For they generally run when they see
A recruiting officer around.

I guess they're afraid he will grab them,
And take them where his companions are;
For I guess they dread the noise of the cannons,
That are fired by the brave lads.
So if there are any shirkers
Afraid of his country's call,
Just give him a place in the kitchen
Where he can hide at a moment's call.

If all men were like the cowards in hiding,
I wonder if the Kaiser would win.
I guess he would walk through our country
And slay all the babes in his path.
So now let the men fight bravely,
And don't hide any more,
For the man that is a coward
Should bury himself in the ground.

GINGER PUNCH.

To one-third of a pound of preserved ginger add one quart of water and one cupful of sugar, and boil the mixture for fifteen minutes. Let it cool, then add one-half a cupful of lemon juice and strain the syrup through a jelly bag.

TIRED OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses in eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort but by awakening the action of the liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

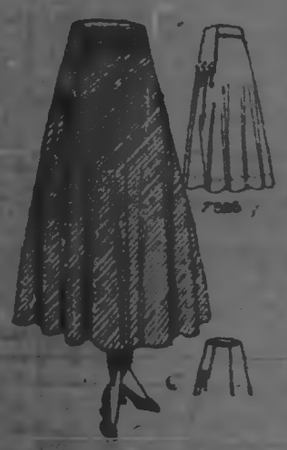
EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S THREE-GORE SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.



7236

Fashion has offered this skirt in three gores as the type that will enjoy popularity all through the fall, so if you have been waiting until the advanced season would show the really accepted styles you will give this design your attention. It has the side yoke effect for variation.

The gores are gathered at the side seams where the yokes join; fashion has dictated a reduction in the width of skirts, so there is but a modish fullness noticeable in this model—the lower edge flares prettily and has a width of 2½ yards in size 24.

The right front gore laps the left in closing, and buttons show how strong their influence is by successfully giving the decorative or finishing touch to the garment.

The design may be used for gabardine, silk, gabardine, the wool mixtures, plaided and checked material. A slightly raised waistline is used and a belt of material tacked to the back, the ends being inserted with the side seams of the skirt.

The pattern, No. 7,236, is cut in sizes 22 to 30 inches waist measure. To make in size 26 will require 6¼ yards of 36 inch material.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 20 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age if a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 15 cents.

EAUCOURT L'ABBAYE TAKEN BY BRITISH

Three Peterboro Soldiers Lose Their Lives

Eaucourt L'Abbaye Completeiy Occupied By The British Troops

General Haig's Troops Have Cleared the Enemy Out of the Village Which is Only Three Miles From Bapaume ---French Capture German Trench and 200 Prisoners ---Preparations Are Being Made For Another Big Advance Although Heavy Rains Are Again Interfering.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, October 4.—The village of Eaucaurt L'Abbaye, three miles from Bapaume, was completely occupied by the British last night in a resumption of the Somme offensive, General Haig reported this afternoon. The British lines were pushed forward into the village several days ago, but the Germans clung tenaciously to several houses. These were cleared of the enemy in last night's fighting.

After a slight intermission, the heavy downpour of rain was resumed on the Somme front yesterday afternoon interfering with infantry operations. There was considerable artillerying south of the Ancre, however.

Allies Widen the Breach on Somme

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES ON THE SOMME, October 4. — The Allies have now widened their breach in the German lines on the Somme front of about 25 miles to a maximum depth of about 8¼ miles. In the early days of the offensive the Allied attacks were delivered on a front extending from a point north of the Albert-Bapaume highway to a point south of Chaulnes. The capture last week of Thiepval extended the British attack almost to the Ancre Brook. The French reached south of Chaulnes and captured the village of Chilly. A heavy rain that hindered operations for two days ceased falling yesterday noon, and the artillery began tuning up, particularly south of the river, preparatory to another big infantry advance by the Allies.

North of the Somme the French last night completed the conquest of a German trench between Morval and St. Pierre Vaast Wood, taking two hundred prisoners. South of the river, there was a violent bombardment in the region of Belloy-en-Santerre, but no important infantry fighting.

A Summary of British Successes

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 4. — Regarding the capture of villages including Combles, Guendecourt and Thiepval, an official statement to-day says: "These victories brought our front line at more than one point within a mile of the German fourth position west of the Bapaume-Transloy road." At the end of September the situation may be summarized as follows: Since the opening of the battle on July 1 we have taken 26,735 prisoners and engaged 38 German divisions of which 29 (about 350,000 men) have been withdrawn, exhausted or broken. We hold the half moon upland south of [illegible] occupy [illegible] heights of importance, and so have direct observation ground to the east and northeast. The enemy has fallen back upon the fourth line behind a low ridge just west of the Bapaume-Transloy road. The importance of the three months' offensive must be looked for in effect upon the enemy's strength in numbers, material and morale. The enemy has used up his reserves in repeated costly and unsuccessful counter attacks without causing our Allies or ourselves to relax our steady methodical pressure. The Germans vainly threw seven new divisions into action to check the British advance.

Gunboats Co-operating With Allies On Danube

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, October 4.—Russian gunboats have steamed down the Danube River and are bombarding the Bulgarian left flank near Rasova in Dobrudja, it was officially announced to-day. The Russian warships are co-operating with the Russo-Roumanian forces now attacking Field Marshall Mackensen's army south of the Constanza railway. The battle is going on along the line extending from Rasova through Kabaden to Pervell. On the Austro-German front stubborn battles are going on in the region of Bulnov, near Chelvov, and near Korytnica. The enemy is retaining his positions along the River Cenlowica, near the source of the Zlota Lipa with the greatest stubbornness.

Roumanians Defeated Says Sofia Report

Special to The Examiner:

SOFIA, October 4.—Bulgarian forces have occupied the Roumanian town of Malaikalafat, near the Danube. The War Office admitted at the same time that "considerable units" of Roumanians crossed the Danube and invaded Bulgaria. The river was bridged by Roumanians near Riahovo.

BERLIN, October 4.—Sofia reports to-day that the Roumanian force that crossed the Danube and invaded Bulgaria, has been forced to withdraw in hasty flight, when attacked on three sides by German and Bulgarian troops, and threatened with envelopment.

Special to Examiner:

LONDON, October 4.—King George to-day conferred the distinguished service order on Sub-Lieutenants Fred Sowrey and Arthur Brandon, of the Royal Flying Corps, for bringing down Zeppelins in the recent raids.

Red Cross Ship Is Badly Damaged

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, October 4.—A Paris despatch says the British Red Cross ship Rednor was seriously damaged by an explosion Sunday in the Straits of Dover. Details of damage and loss of life, if any, are not yet to hand.

Three More Local Soldiers Give Their Lives For Empire

Lieut. F. W. Morris Dies of Wounds and Sergt. Clarence Smith and Gunner Norman Barrie Are Killed in Action --Lieut. Milburn of the 93rd Battalion Has Gone to France---To-day's General Military News.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Sergt. Clarence Smith, Mounted Rifles, son of Mrs. Wm. Smith, 30 Aberdeen Avenue.

Gunner Norman Barrie, Canadian Artillery, 9 Park Street.

DIED OF WOUNDS.

Lieut. F. W. Morris, son of Mr. W. R. Morris, chartered accountant.

WOUNDED.

Sergt. Edward Downes, Coldstream Guards, 335 Patterson Street.

Corporal Maynard Brown, Canadian Infantry, 202 Rubidge Street.

Three more Peterborough boys have given their lives for the Empire. To-day's casualty list brings tragic news to a number of Peterborough homes as a result of the recent fighting in France.

LIEUT. F. W. MORRIS.

Lieut. Frank William Morris, son of Mr. W. R. Morris, chartered accountant, has laid down his life for the cause of liberty. His parents have received an official message from Ottawa to the effect that Lieut. Morris died of wounds on September 30th. Mr. and Mrs. Morris will have the deep and sincere sympathy of the citizens generally in the loss of their only son. The young officer was one of three Peterborough boys who graduated from Royal Military College, Kingston, in the spring of last year, and who were granted commissions. Lieut. Morris went overseas with a Western artillery brigade in company with Lieut. Harold Smith, of Peterborough, and has been at the front for some time. He was born in Canada and was educated at the Grove School, Lakefield, the local Collegiate Institute, Trinity College School, Port Hope, and Royal Military College. His scholastic career was a successful one, and he also distinguished as an athlete, especially in long distance running, capturing the Inter-Collegiate cross-country championship from a large field in record time. "Bill" Morris, as he was known to his host of friends, was popular wherever he was known, and the news of his death will come as a great shock.

SERGT. CLARENCE SMITH.

"Deeply regret to inform you that No. 108930 Sergt. Clarence Smith, Canadian Mounted Rifles, is officially reported killed in action, September 15th," was the tragic message that told Mrs. W. Smith, 30 Aberdeen Avenue, of the death of her son. Sergt. Clarence Smith was the son of the late Principal of the General School, and was born in Peterborough. He enlisted with a Western Mounted Rifles unit, and has been at the front ever since the 3rd Canadian Division went to France. His mother will have the sympathy of the community in her bereavement. A sister of Sergt. Smith is overseas as a nurse.

GUNNER NORMAN BARRIE.

Mrs. Edith M. Barrie, 9 Park St. North, received a message from Ottawa to-day, informing her that her husband, Gunner Norman Barrie, Canadian Artillery, is officially reported killed in action on September 21st. The news will be received with deep regret in Peterborough. Gunner Barrie was well and favourably known throughout the city. He was a son of Mr. Wm. C. Barrie, 529 Chamberlen Street, and was born in Peterborough. Before the war he was a member of the 30th Field Battery. He enlisted early last year in the 39th Battery, C.F.A., under Major Gerald Hall, of Peterborough, and when overseas with that unit, Gunner Barrie was a moulder by trade. One brother, Frank, is in England on munition work, having answered the call of the British authorities for Canadian mechanics.

SERGT. DOWNES.

Sergt. Edward Downes, of the Coldstream Guards, and a member of the Peterborough Police Department, has been wounded. Sergt. Downes was a reservist, and when war broke out answered the call immediately, leaving Peterborough on August 17. At Levis, where the Canadian reservists were mobilised, Sergt. Downes acted as Sergeant-Major. He rejoined his old unit, the Coldstream Guards, when he reached England, and has been at the front for a long time. He was a member of the championship football team of the Guards. Sergt. Downes' mother resides at 335 Patterson Street. Chief Thompson has received many interesting letters from Sergt. Downes.

CORP. MAYNARD BROWN.

Corp. Maynard Brown, son of Mrs. J. H. Brown, 202 Rubidge Street, has been wounded in the hip and thigh in the recent fighting. Corp. Brown, who was born at Indian River, was educated at the local Collegiate Institute. He enlisted in Montreal with the 60th Battalion.

BUSY PREPARATIONS ARE BEING MADE FOR THE TAG DAY

List of the Captains, Conveners and Districts For Saturday's Big Effort on Behalf of the Children's Aid Society

TO-DAY IN THE SCHOOLS

This is a busy week for certain ladies. Not with household affairs, which are relegated to the background while matters of real helpfulness are in hand. The preparations for Tag Day, for the benefit of the Children's Aid, are in progress.

It would seem a trifling chore to say, go around and hand out a bunch of tags here and there, with brief directions how to absorb the money. But things are not ordered so off hand. There is a strict accounting to be done that a balancing up shows that all contributed has been accounted for. So checking is done that things may roll by quite right.

Then there is the clerical chore of [illegible] This could be done by the printer, of course, but it is a long and a tedious job when few hands are at work. So the ladies call in many hands, and among the gathering it is accomplished. The avails hinge on the string. For the dangling tag on the coat of the wearer is the outward and visible sign that he has "coughed up," to use the colloquial phrase. We all do it; willingly and cheerfully.

It is well to mention the ladies who are working so well to further the object. This mention is about all the remuneration, if it so be considered, which is doubtful, for the effort so well made and given. The sense of a duty done is the recompense. That is the inspiring motive in all charitable and helpful work. So it has been formally ordered that Mrs. Knox is the convener, Miss C. Peck, the secretary, and conveners to take charge of the erection of the rosettes that will adorn the horses seen on the streets are Mrs. W. Stocker and Mrs. G Scott. The difficult chore of attending to the preparation and distribution of the tags is in the hands of Mrs. Dunsford and Miss Peck. Owners and drivers of horses, it may be a well to say, are expected to contribute at least 25 cents for the decoration. The horse may be oblivious of what he is wearing, but the owner or driver will be proud. And the fund increased.

It is well to be beforehand. Never neglect opportunities. As the schools close for Thursday and Friday, consequent on the assembling of the Teachers' Convention, the children, or rather pupils, will be caught and tagged on Wednesday. It calls for 3,000 tags to supply the juveniles, allowing that most of the horde contribute. Only a very small sum, per pupil, is expected, but the aggregate will count.

The ladies who will prepare the tags for Saturday's Tag Fest, are asked to meet at Bank of Montreal Chambers on Thursday, at 2 o'clock, to work. The conveners are Mrs. Aylmer and Miss Peck. Any ladies or Four Villages Guarding Monastir Lines Are Occupied— British, French, Serbian and Russian Soldiers All Co-operate.

FLYING CORPS ACTIVE

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The Allies advanced along the whole Macedonian front to-day. A joint assault by French, Serbian and Russian troops north of Florina won for them four villages guarding the Cerna Valley lines before Monastir. King Peter's troops pushed ahead on their own soil, west of the Kaimakalan ridge, while a British bayonet attack on the east bank of the Struma completely routed the enemy. Admission of most of the reverses is made in to-day's official statement from Sofia.

Four Villages Occupied.

An official statement on the operations of the eastern army issued in Paris to-night reads:

"As a result of the vigorous actions fought by the Serbians in the region of Kaimakalan, the Bulgarians have abandoned their positions on Starkof-Grob and the River Road, and appear to be retreating toward the north.

"The Serbians have occupied Flovio, and the French Peporak and Verbeni. On the right wing the British have captured Jenikoi, east of the Vardar."

Following is the British statement: "Yesterday the Bulgarians counter-attacked with three battalions against our new positions on the east bank of the Struma. The attack was broken by our fire. One of our battalions then charged with the bayonet and completely routed the enemy, taking forty prisoners.

The Royal Flying Corps carried out successful bombing attacks on troops in transport in Prosnik and on a railroad train travelling from there to Seres."

What Sofia Admits.

The Bulgarian report follows:

"In the Lake Presba region there was considerable artillery activity without infantry action, at Hill 1,964, south of Kaimakalan. As a consequence of violent artillery fire on the summit, and in order to avoid unnecessary loss, our troops were ordered to withdraw to their main position in the Moglenitia Valley. There was violent reciprocal artillery fire west and east of the Vardar.

"Weak artillery fire took place at the foot of the Belasnitza Mountain. A patrol engagement resulted in our favour near the Poroj station.

"On the Struma front enemy battalions which advanced under the protection of a hurricane of fire succeeded in occupying the villages of Karadpagoi, Jenikoi and Bivolyen. By counter-attacks we drove the enemy from the two last-named villages to their former positions. Fighting near Karadjakoi continues.

"On the Aegean coast the enemy fleet bombarded, without result, a height north of Oragmo."

Annual Meeting Art Association

Last evening members of the Peterborough Art Association held their annual meeting in the basement of the Public Library, with President Mrs. Eastwood in the chair. After routine business, officers were elected as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Mercer.
President—Mrs. Eastwood.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Mowat.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Aylmer.
Cor. Secretary—Mrs. Sherwood.
Asst.—Miss Flora Collins.
Rec. Secretary—Miss Bennett.
Treasurer—Miss Hatton.
Archivist—Miss Rush.

Mr. W. H. Prettie gave a most interesting and instructive address on "Art." The whole foundation of true art is contained in the words "sincerity," "beauty of form," and "idealism." The speaker said that the word "Art" is broader than its usually taken significance. Dante and Shakespeare were artists.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the speaker. The meeting wound up by singing "God Save the King."

Teapoys are designed for rather small piquant faces, just as collier hats are meant for large faced women.

THE PRESENT ISSUE.

A party paper charges Sir Wilfrid Laurier with "Drawing a red herring across the trail" in an attempt to ... public attention from his record while in office. It seems to the ordinary citizen that the issue in an election when it comes will not be the leader's record, but the record of the leader and party that has held power for the past five years. The red herring seems to consist in an attempt to draw public attention from the record of the Borden government. It will be on trial in a month's more or less and it cannot escape discussion of the grounds upon which it merits the consideration which so many of its new friends consider is due it, and ... LAW AND JUSTICE.

Unfortunately law and justice are not synonymous terms. A case in point stems to be the conviction of a grocer, who was fined in the police court yesterday for selling adulterated maple syrup, and sentenced to pay a penalty of $36.00—$25 fine and $11.00 costs. The accused admitted the charge. Of course the magistrate had no other course than to administer the law, for the accused admitted selling the adulterated goods. Was not justice was administered, for the grocer did not know, and the magistrate believed that he did not know, that the syrup was adulterated; and in this view of the case, as a matter of justice, the buyer might as reasonably have been fined, for he was an innocent party as was the retail seller, to an evasion of the law. The government inspector who laid the charge, said that the retailers are not consciously guilty; "it is the manufacturer we want to get at." In that case it seems that inspection should do its work before the syrup or other adulterated goods reaches the retailer. There is little or no preventive virtue in pouncing upon a comparatively obscure dealer who innocently vends adulterated goods and is punished for the crime of another. A fine in such a case is worse than useless; it is a gross injustice. If he is fined today for selling goods he does not and cannot, in practice get to know, are adulterated, he may when he is ignorant and innocent of a breach of the law, commit the same offence tomorrow and lay himself liable to the same penalty. The administration of the law should get at the real offender—it should remove causes, not expend its chief energy in dealing with results with no good effect, but on the contrary, the bad effect of perpetrating injustice and bringing hardship to innocent persons.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

It is not mentioned as a reproach, or complaint, but as a matter of fact, that recruiting is at present dormant all over Canada. We may try to account for it in various ways, and after all not reach the real causes; some of us may blame the government and the government may not be all, or even very little to blame. This will apply to the Dominion outside of Quebec, but not at all to that province. There, where recently recruiting has been regrettably slow, the government can reasonably be charged with the chief blame, present and past. The direct cause of comparative failure of recruiting in Quebec is the Nationalist agitation, which has been working for years, virtually under government protection. "Nationalism" is in essence and expression violently anti-British and anti-Imperial, more rampant and asserted with more malignant directness to-day than heretofore. As an enemy to, and a discouragement of, recruiting, Bourassa, the head of Nationalism, is at his best or his worst, at the present, both personally and through his journal, Le Devoir. He and his cult have been killing the recruiting spirit in Quebec for months, but never so effectively and viciously as now. Why is he allowed to preach sedition, sow disloyal and seditious sentiments broadcast? Why is he allowed to inflame the spirit that is behind the anti-recruiting rioting in Montreal yesterday? What would be the attitude of the government and the military authorities if some Ontario man of great ability should make public speeches to-day and publish articles against recruiting, in Peterborough or Ontario; in practice of the example of Bourassa? Wouldn't he in the one case be brought up with a round turn and silenced; and on the other case would not the censor get busy? It is "up to" the government to do something, for it is largely responsible for the actions and the impudent activity he is showing in these days. The government patted him on the back, and a few years ago played him into loyal Ontario with brass bands, announced him from Conservative platforms as "one of our leaders," such service was to rehabilitate the government by the nose in the formation of the cabinet and has led it by the nose ever since, and seems to be leading it by the nose to-day. We may be puzzled to place the blame for slow recruiting in Canada, but we can have no doubt in placing the blame in the province of Quebec either past or present. Aren't national and imperial interests a shade more important than party interests?

ROCKWELL PROMOTED JUST BEFORE HE FELL

Paris, Sept. 26.—The aerial fight in which Sergt. Hilton Rockwell, of Atlanta, Ga., was mortally wounded yesterday morning by a German airman, took place over the town of Thiaucourt. The body of the American aviator fell in reconquered territory in Alsace, near the spot where Rockwell shot down his first adversary five months ago.

Rockwell was serving as a volunteer in the Franco-American Flying Corps on the Verdun front. A few hours previous to his fatal encounter he had been promoted to the rank of Second Lieutenant, but he died without knowing of the new honor. He already had received the military cross for shooting down a German two-seater near Hartmannsweiler-Kopf. He had bombed down another before Verdun and had participated in a thrilling combat in which the American flotilla were engaged with a strong German force. He was wounded in that fight by a fragment of a shell [illegible]

Sergt. Rockwell was one of the first American volunteers to join the Foreign Legion. He was grievously wounded in a bayonet attack at Artois in May, 1915, before being transferred to the flying corps. He was regarded in the French aviation service as an "ace," a name given to the most skilful and daring pilots. Lt. William Thaw of Pittsburgh before he was wounded, and Rockwell made a formidable fighting pair. They frequently were in the air together, and always chasing an adversary.

Rockwell had fought 36 air battles since recovering from his last wound, [illegible] When he met his death he was returning from a reconnoitring expedition in which he was [illegible] fighting machines that [illegible] the escort.

Halbet is one of the most common fish on the market here, [illegible] the whole of Britain.

Mr. Rowell Speaks At Woodstock, On Subject, "Dominions and the War"

Special to the Examiner.

WOODSTOCK, Oct. 4.—Inspiring advice which he heard in Europe both from Australians and New Zealanders as to the gallantry of Canadian soldiers and the standard for fighting, they had set for the other Dominions, was a message delivered by Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., in his speech on "The Dominions and the War", at the public meeting of the Woodstock Canadian Club here Thursday evening. Mr. Rowell told of his visits to the South African, Australian and New Zealand troops as well as describing again his visit to the Canadian front.

With reference to the South Africans, whom he saw first, Mr. Rowell said: "You will remember that the South African Brigade was in the thick of the early fighting on the Somme. On the ship on which I crossed to France were their re-inforcements on their way to the Somme to take the place of the men who had fallen in the fight. One could not wish to see a finer body of soldiers. Nearly every man was a veteran. Many of them had fought in the Boer War in South Africa; practically all of them had fought under Botha in the German South West African campaign. One could not but feel that a special place of honour should be accorded South Africa, the youngest of the Dominions in this struggle. How grateful we should be that at this critical period in the history of South Africa and the Empire, a man of the outstanding ability, courage and resolution of General Botha was at the head of the government".

As to Australia, Mr. Rowell told of an incident most pleasing to Canadians. When he congratulated one of the Australian officers on the heroism and self-sacrifice of the Australian troops at Gallipoli, the answer was: "It was the work of the Canadians at the second battle of Ypres which set the pace for us. We were then in Egypt and when we read how the Canadians had saved the situation we said to ourselves that Australia could not be behind Canada and that when the time came we would have to acquit ourselves equally well." This officer said the work of Canadians in this battle set the standard for the rest of the overseas Dominions.

"The Australians" continued Mr. Rowell, "are everywhere in evidence. They wear a distinctive hat—a soft felt turned up on one side. It is certainly a great advertisement for the Australian and New Zealand troops in London and in the rest of England."

"Through the kindness of Mr. Fisher, the Australian High Commission, I had the opportunity of visiting the Australians on Salisbury Plains and it so happened that on the day I was there Sir Newton Moore, Camp Commandant, was inspecting some of the Australians who had just arrived from Egypt. They were a very fine body of men, apparently a little taller than our men, though perhaps not quite as stocky. In Gallipoli, Egypt and on the western front the Australians have displayed a courage and dash which have won undying glory for their country.

"Through the kindness of Hon. Thomas McKenzie, the High Commissioner for New Zealand, I also had the opportunity of seeing New Zealand troops in training on Salisbury Plains and of appreciating their fine soldierly qualities. I had the same experience in talking to a New Zealand officer as with the Australian. When I spoke to him of the valour with which the New Zealand troops had fought at Gallipoli, in Egypt and on the Somme, he immediately replied that Canada had set the standard in the second battle of Ypres." In speaking of the Dominions Mr. Rowell reminded his audience we should not overlook the force sent by Newfoundland—"gallant men who are fighting as bravely as the best in the battle on the Somme."

"While the Canadians," continued Mr. Rowell, "at the second battle of Ypres admittedly set the standard for the other Dominions, we must admit that it is they who have set the standard for us in the number of troops called and sent to the front. At the present time we are in urgent need of a larger supply of thoroughly trained re-inforcements. Only those who know the situation could understand how urgent this need is."

Mr. Rowell went on to deal with the more general question of the relations of the Dominions and the Mother Land. "The meeting together" he said "of Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, South Africans and the men of Great Britain and Ireland on the battle front, cannot but help toward a better understanding each of the other. One of the sentiments most frequently expressed was the desire for closer relations between the Dominion and the Mother country. The subject appears to be in everyone's mind. I found members of the Trades Union Congress just as much interested in discussing the question as members of the government. The statement of Mr. Asquith's that after the war the government would call a conference of representatives of the Dominions to consider and pass in review the relations between the Dominions and the Mother Country, met with hearty approval everywhere. While the subject occupies a very much larger place in the public mind in Great Britain than in Canada, one found pretty general agreement that we must see the war through before we enter upon the serious discussion of these grave internal problems, but we would do well to keep in mind that the question will come up for consideration when the war is over.

"Men from various parts of the Empire have touched shoulder to shoulder with each other. They have fought as brothers side by side. They have shed their blood in a common cause. They have struggled back to life and health side by side in the same hospitals. Many of their comrades lie buried in the same grave. Bonds have been created which will never be broken. Henceforth they will pay much less deference to old conventions and customs, to party appeals and party shibboleths. I believe they will return to us stronger Canadians than ever, determined to maintain our freedom and self-government; but they will also return with a consciousness of a larger citizenship in the British Commonwealth.

Summarily Discharged Crew So Strongly Condemned By Jury For Their Inhumanity

LONDON, Oct 3.—Characterising their acts as the most inhuman and incomprehensible that had ever been brought to his attention in his railroad career, General Manager J. E. Richards of the London and Port Stanley Railway has summarily dismissed the three members of the L. and P. S. crew so strongly condemned by a coroner's jury in St. Thomas on Thursday night in connection with the death of Earl Oliver.

The dismissed men are: Motorman Frank Slater, Conductor McGinnis, Trainman Dilts.

The general manager made the announcement of the summary dismissal of the crew yesterday. He had just completed reading the full evidence of the case, and from this and the men's own statements, could, he said, find no explanation for their actions.

According to the evidence of the train crew, Earl Oliver, the dead victim of the trainmen's negligence, boarded their car in an intoxicated condition. He had no ticket and was removed from the car two miles south of White's station. On the return trip the ejected man was run over by the same car.

NO ATTENTION BY CREW.

Trainman Dilts was left with the body, and the remainder of the crew went on to St. Thomas. The injured man was not dead, but no attention was paid to him by the crew. Trainman Dilts swore he heard Oliver mutter, and that the young man flopped himself clear of the rails, but he did not go within 50 feet of him.

After an hour, the conductor returned with a coroner and the injured man was removed to the Amasa Wood Hospital, St. Thomas where he died.

"I can find no explanation for the conduct of the crew in leaving this man in the way they did," declared General Manager Richards. "There is absolutely no excuse for them. In all my years of railway work I have never heard of anything like it. As soon as I completed my own investigation I ordered the men summarily discharged.

"Dilts is the only one who should be let down easy. From the reports made to me, it appears that Dilts did not want to throw the man from the train. He found he had no ticket, but in view of the man's condition, said to McGinnis that he should be allowed to continue to Port Stanley. McGinnis refused, however, and the man was thrown off.

"On the return trip the motorman says he did not see the man lying across the rails in time to stop his car. However, apparently no effort was made to see to what extent he was injured. McGinnis ordered Diltz to stay with the body and Dilts says that although he saw the man move and heard his muttering, he was afraid to go near him.

EXCUSES SUPERINTENDENT

"The delay was caused by McGinnis informing Superintendent Northcott that the man had been cut to pieces. Northcott thereupon instructed him to come to St. Thomas for the coroner. This same report was sent to me as my home by Northcott, and I wish to say that the criticisms of the superintendent are not fair to him. He had only the conductor's report to go on, and this was to the effect that the man had been cut to pieces. Mr. Northcott under no other circumstances would have ordered the crew into St. Thomas for a coroner, and so occasioned a delay of an hour in securing aid for the injured man.

"For what reason I cannot say, it seems apparent that the conductor has been to blame from the start. He has not improved his case by the false statements that he has made.

"It has been a most unfortunate affair from the start. The only action that we could take, in view of the circumstances, was to dismiss the men at once, and this we have done."

The general manager declared that he knew nothing of any counter actions that might be taken against the dismissed employees for their actions.

He was also ignorant of a damage action which it is understood the relatives of the late Earl Oliver will enter against the road for a very large sum.

FISHERMEN BLOWN OUT TO SEA BY A GALE—A sudden gale caught the fishing fleet at Colombo and blew nearly 200 native fishermen out to sea. Many were saved by incoming steamers in addition to those rescued by the tugboats which were sent out the next day. Photo shows them just before they were hauled aboard a rescue ship. The men were badly bruised and could not stand.

SHIP YARDS OF BRITAIN BUSY SCENE

Battleships, Submarines and Light Cruisers Under Hammer and Paint Brush—A Visit to The Water Front.

There is a certain small section of British water-front where more ships are under construction to-day than the entire shipbuilding facilities of any other nation could undertake at one time. They include every type of craft from submarines to battleships and from steam trawlers to Atlantic liners. Most governments lay down their battleships and cruisers singly, and the lesser craft perhaps in pairs, but here battleships loom up as twins, light cruisers by the half dozen, destroyers in rows of ten, with many braces of long submarines, and an occasional monitor.

The war fleet under the hammer and the paint brush here would rank in the naval list above the establishments of several modest maritime powers. It could demolish the two squadrons which fought the battle of Manila Bay with one volley, and then steam against the combined American and Spanish fleets of Santiago with confidence. And the merchant ships in the stocks are as many as the United States mercantile marine has added to its register in several years.

"We have trained crews ready to step on board all these ships as soon as they are fitted," a naval officer remarked.

Under tutelage of Hugh Law, Nationalist member of Parliament for West Donegal, a party of correspondents spent a crowded day on land, on water, and on ships in dock, at this base. They saw some things which they are not permitted to describe in detail, and many things which they cannot describe for lack of technical knowledge; for the ordinary man the visit furnished mostly illumination upon the vast scale on which sea power is arranged, and upon the kind of men who manage it, and their hard but cheerful lives.

Several Miles of Hulls.

The general stage setting for this swift review of the fighting and trading vessels under construction consisted of several miles of water-front lines as thickly as could be crowded with skeletons and hulls. The stocks carried everything of the final type—until next year, or next week, for every naval campaign means new ideas, new designs, new lines of construction. Two years of active service under war conditions have brought a great advance to the British navy, already acknowledged to be leader in most naval matters. Every ship and every detail of a ship, is the last word in its class, according to the war-bought judgment of engineers and fighting officers. In one negotiable detail at least British naval architects appear to have been converted to the principle of one feature of American warships.

The monitors make an appeal to an American because there is a suspicion that other navies were disposed to scoff at them for years. Yet here they are, with all their superficial changes and embellishments a tribute to what the brain of John Ericsson conceived in the sixties. The monitors have been very useful to the British navy in this war. They have been employed in the shallow waters off the coast of Belgium, and even more effectively at Gallipoli. The correspondents there described them fully. Two or three strata of the outlying hull may be penetrated by torpedoes and the monitor can still keep at work with her guns.

Two battleships, almost prepared for the water, according to information rendered, are expected to demonstrate themselves the most efficient machines of their family ever commissioned, and they look it. The battleships standing in the timbers on land with all its lines revealed, showing its adaptability for speed, presents a different picture from the fighting ship seen above water and has a suggestion of a racing yacht. These had been constructed in something like half the time consumed in making a big warship in pre-war days. There were several so-called destroyers certainly as big as many light cruisers of earlier times, ten of them extended side by side in one row, and others elsewhere.

Long Line of Submarines.

Just where the super-dreadnought leaves off and the light cruiser berths is not a matter of length today. Beyond the destroyers was a line of long thin skeletons of submarines, whose size could not be judged at all accurately in a passing view, even if it could be reported. Compared with the new, old-fashioned submarine they are as the Aquitania to the Philadelphia.

Floating alongside a dock was a brand new submarine, painted and polished like a touring car fresh from the shop. Her young commander stood alongside and proudly pointed out some of her attractions. From his transparent enthusiasm she might have been a pleasure yacht instead of the vehicle for the most dangerous form of adventure that fighting men undertake. "Of course we are not in the same class with Horton and Holbrook," he explained, "but I hope you will hear something from X Seventeen," pointing to the number painted on the turret. He observed also that this thing could submerge in twenty seconds.

From this largest shipbuilding station in the world, with its miles of smoking factories, and with its reverberating clangor of thousands of hammers ringing upon steel, the party travelled over night to the most extensive naval base in the world. This was a place where ships run in for repairs, for oil which is almost the only fuel of these days, for ammunition and stores. Here they are replenished, refitted, repainted frequently, and then disappear into the mists of the North Sea, of which a typical one was encountered on the morning of this visit.

The shipbuilding district was a realm of private enterprises, factories and yards where rich firms carry on their own work independently and with no visible traditions of discipline, and no outward signs of professional comradeship, except perhaps in the luxurious offices decorated with models of dead and gone ships dating from eras of wooden and iron hulls, where the directors entertain their friends in peaceful times and now by brief but earnest after lunch speech gave unpeeded assurances they were working as hard as the men who wear gold braid.

Two years ago this was a great naval base, according to reputation, but now its extent and the array of docks and shops and barracks has been so multiplied as to make it a truly vast one.

Wireless a Great Aid.

The force of skilled and common workmen is larger than can be kept at constant employment for they must be able to grapple with emergencies and with quick operations on a big scale. Wireless is a great aid. Every squadron coming into port telegraphs its needs, even the humble submarine does the same. The materials and the men are ready on the docks and in the supply ships when the fighting craft appear. There was an example on view. One of the most massive and swiftest warships in being was aboard up inside a drydock, and that necessarily one of the largest docks constructed, to have her hull scraped. Incidentally advantage was taken of the time, as is customary, for a thorough overhauling of every detail of the ship's machinery from keel to top-masts. Fifteen-inch guns, six-inch guns, turret machinery, every detachable or movable fragment of the whole complex creation was being detached, and inspected, scrutinized, tinkered, polished and oiled. Several hundred workmen were engaged. Miles of wires were strewn above decks and between decks, apparently in hopeless tangles, but the expert workers handling them knew what all the ordered confusion meant. The plain citizen who wrangles to achieve a modest rectification of a telephone wire gone wrong would here find cause for prayerful wonder.

Doubtless all navies do the same thing, but one gathered the impression that it is about the ultimate illustration of efficiency in complicated and concentrated work. Through it all the sailor man displayed his adaptability to sleep in impossible places and positions under impossible circumstances.

The trip included a view of Beatty's battleship squadron. There they were—and that is about all that can be said. They were prepared to steam for action at five minutes' notice, and they did not care to steam for action with a cargo of newspaper men and a Nationalist member of Parliament. These could not decently be thrown overboard and obviously were not worth a moment's delay. One ship carried into the Jutland battle an army officer on leave from France who was calling on a brother on board. He returned, fortunately, published it, as his mature and well considered judgment, that he felt more at home in the trenches. Two destroyers conveyed the visitors around the squadron. There was considerable fresh paint visible in splashes, more on the German officially sunk Warspit than elsewhere, but what that meant in the way of damage was Greek to the outsider. Two facts impressed an American. That the commanders of the larger ships averaged about ten years younger than the commanders of ships of the same class in the American navy, and the number and variety and adaptability of the supply craft, the navy's commissary department.

The only thing approaching leisure discovered was on some of the destroyers. These sea scouts work in shifts. Four day on active duty (a very active duty), four days in port ready to start at the drop of the hat, and four days outfitting with more or less shore leave, is their programme.

The Battle of Jutland.

Some information and scraps of gossip of the battle came out in the course of talk. One item was that Admiral Beatty went through the fight on the bridge and did not take the protection of any of the armoured places which builders make for shelter in battle, and he was under heavy fire. Another, that when the Marlborough was hit by a torpedo, and all believed that she had only a minute or two to live, her commander issued two orders. One was to close the watertight doors that she might float as long as possible, and the other to fire all guns at utmost speed where there was a reasonable target. He wanted her to put in as many blows as she could at the last moment, thinking with all others on board that the last moment had struck. There leaked out a seeming consensus of opinion that a certain high officer is considered just, without bowels of mercy for carelessness or slackers, and yet men like to serve under him.

Then an incidental reminiscence by a surgeon on one of the ships which had the good luck to escape being hit. He was below, of course, waiting for the wounded, and playing the hardest part that can be experienced on a ship in action. Even harder than the engineers and stokers in the depths, who work without seeing or knowing what goes on above, and how goes the battle, because he was neither working nor seeing. The great guns were rocking the ship and none below knew whether it was victory or all to the bottom. One of his men was observed in a novel, paper covered and frayed. Probably where heroic Algernon leaps overboard and rescues blushing Madeline from the jaws of the shark. "I thought, he will never turn over the page," said the young surgeon, a Canadian. "I admit I thought it was a bluff. He did turn the page, and kept on reading and turning them over. I was thinking about home and mother."

On this big ship, as on all the cruisers and destroyers, there was one strong reminder of their work. About all the smaller guns were stacked shells; shells lining the sides like Nanking plates on the walls of a porcelain collector, and shells in boxes, and in baskets. "Shells, and more shells," apparently is the motto of the navy, as it is of the army.

THINKING.

If you think you are beaten, you are;
If you think you dare not, you don't.
If you'd like to win, but you think you can't,
It's almost a cinch you won't.
If you think you'll lose, you're lost;
For out of the world we find Success begins with a fellow's will,
It's all in the state of mind.
If you think you're outclassed, you are;
You've got to think high to rise;
You've got to be sure of yourself before
You can ever win a prize.
Life's battles don't always go
To the stronger or faster man,
But soon or late the man who wins
Is the one who thinks he can.

"ENOCH ARDENS" OF THE BIG WAR MANY IN FRANCE

Proposed Widows Shall Not be Allowed Remarriage Until War Ends.

There is a notable multiplication of domestic dramas of the type familiar to us through Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," and to the French in Balzac's 'Colonel Chabert,' who, lost on a Napoleonic battlefield, returned home to find his wife remarried to a nobleman of the Restoration, says the Paris correspondent of the London Chronicle.

Thus, a Madame D —, of Arras, was informed at the beginning of the war that her husband had been killed. Removing to Paris, she waited some months, and then married her brother-in-law. The household is now expecting a child, and the first husband is on his way back from Germany.

M. Charles le Goffic cites other cases in the Liberte.

"In a small commune near the Channel two soldiers' wives remarried in this way. The death of their first husbands was registered, and all the papers were in order. But these husbands reappeared one fine morning, both of them with amputated limbs.

"More curious is the tale of the Brejon soldier, whose arm, cut off by a shell, was found on the battlefield, while the rest of him had disappeared. As the arm carried the identication plate, the owner was reported dead. The wife received a certificate to this effect, and was permitted to remarry. The first husband, however, proves to be alive, and intends to insist on his rights."

Decided to Remain Dead.

But the most unfortunate of these tragic misadventures was found in Switzerland recently, in one of the parties of seriously wounded soldiers returned from Germany. A French visitor stopped before an unfortunate fellow whose face was so disfigured as to seem no longer human. He asked if he could do anything for the sufferer, if he could seek his family and tell them.

"Useless," was the reply. "He is dead."

The soldier had risen to the heroic delicacy of deciding that, rather than horrify those he loved, he would leave them to believe him dead.

There is a ray of light in this case, for the surgeons hold out hope of a great improvement, and if it is accomplished their patient will give up his name and come to life again. "But, perhaps," adds M. le Goffic, "it may be then too late."

This is no question of a few curious disasters. It is said, with some show of authority, that there are 70,000 French prisoners in Germany who have not been able to communicate with their families. The French law requires ten months of widowhood before remarriage. The question is being asked whether this delay should not be extended and Maitre Henri Robert, the eminent pleader, is one of those who think that soldiers' wives should not remarry before the end of the war.

"How do you manage to keep your cook so long?" "My husband has promised her that if she is working for us when we strike oil he will buy her an auto." "But I did not know that you had any oil prospects?" "We haven't."—Houston Post.

Belle—"They say that Jimmy makes better approaches than any man in the club." Jack—"I should say he does! The first time I met him I lent him twenty dollars!"—Judge.

Let The Work Go

After reading the many excellent hints in this department I thought I would like to have a word with the weary women.

I think there can be no sadder sight than that of a broken-down, over-worked wife and mother; a woman who is tired all the life through. If the work of the household cannot be accomplished by order, system, and moderate work, without the necessity of wearing, heart-breaking toil—toil that is never ended and never begun, without making life a treadmill of labour, then for the sake of humanity let the work go. Better live in the midst of disorder than that order should be purchased at so high a price, the cost of health, strength, happiness and all that makes life endurable. The woman that spends her life in unnecessary labour is unfit for the highest duties of home. The wife and mother should be the haven of rest to which both husband and children turn for peace and refinement. She should be the careful, intelligent adviser and guide of the one, the tender confidant and helpmate of the other. How is it possible for a woman, exhausted in body, and as a natural consequence, in mind also, to perform either of these offices? No; it is not possible. The constant strain is too great. Nature gives way beneath it.

She loses health and spirits and hopefulness, and more than all, her youth; the last thing a woman should allow to slip from her, for no matter how old she is in years, she should be young in heart and feeling, for the youth of age sometimes is more attractive than youth itself. To the overworked woman this green old age is out of the question; old age comes on her before it is time. Her disposition is ruined, her temper is soured, her very nature is changed by the burden which, too heavy to carry, is dragged along as long as wearied feet and tired hands can do their part. Even her affections are blunted. She has no time to train and guide her children, as only a mother can. A wife without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman, so overworked during the day that when night comes her sole thought is rest and sleep that probably will not come, and even if it should, that she is too tired to enjoy, better by far let many things go unfinished than have such a curse brought on self and family.

Attendance Of Over 2400 At Public Schools In September

Ahead of Last Year and Reaches the Record Figures of 1914—Reports Presented at Board of Education Meeting Last Night—New Ventilation For Collegiate Institute

In presenting his report to the Board of Education last night on the Public School attendance for September, Inspector Mowat stated that the enrollment had returned to the record figures of 1914. That year's attendance was the highest in the history of the local schools. In 1915 there had been a decline of about 60, but September's reports reveal an attendance of over 2,400. Queen Alexandra, South Central and King Edward schools are particularly well filled. The aim of the Board to maintain one teacher for every forty pupils was being carried out, but there were two rooms in the South Central each with 40 pupils, and one at the Queen Mary would by Christmas be considerably over 40. Mr. Mowat stated that these increases would be met by opening a new room at the latter school which would absorb some of the South Central's surplus.

The aggregate attendance of the Public Schools in September, 1916, was 2,382. The past month counted 2,408.

Mr. Mowat's report follows:

	On Roll.	Aver.

THE KILTED LOWLANDER

BY A CANADIAN OVERSEAS

A halo of romance encircles the Highlander and down through the ages he has thrilled the heart of mankind. The "nucleus" of the original "Kilties" has been swallowed up in death and glory; the men have gone with those who made undying history with our little Expeditionary Force in the first days of the war, and their pipes make phantom music in Valhala.

Their traditions and their glory are being carried on; the soul of the Black Watch or the glitter of the Gordons cannot be quenched or dimmed. Ever since the desolate days of Mons, the stream has been fed from the hills and valleys of rugged Perth and the towns and farms, the lowns, the castle, the cottage and the factories of the Lowlands. The tartan of the Highlander now drapes the shoulders of the Lowlander and well does he wear it.

The Lowlander has his claims. For in the Lowland Provinces an overwhelming preparation of Scottish history was centred. It was the "dogged Lowlander" with Wallace and Bruce who maintained the country's independence and the Kingdom of Fife and the Lothians was the centre of ancient national civilization.

Between the Highlanders and the Lowlanders there is no rift in the lute to-day. In the great cause Highlander and Lowlander are marching together, shoulder to shoulder, fighting together, and dying together, and in the same swift stream their blood mingles and flows.

THE WAR-TIME NOCTURNE.

The darkened nights are enhanced by the great searchlights as they sweep across the heavens in their exploration of the sky, as if playing some celestial game.

The sweep of the great rays across the darkness with the little patch of light at the end of them cast so far away on the rippling surface of the clouds, fills one with a queer sense of power and mystery. They seem to be playing—the advancing, meeting, crossing and retreating rays—surprising the darkness of the night and prolonging their dances into the dawn. One watches them and forgets at moments their real purpose, in the enjoyment of their beauty. With all one's incessant and anxious consciousness of the war, one finds it difficult to associate these aerial games with it; they seem so innocent and so tranquil.

But these faithful sentinels of the night skies are restless in their search for the lurking enemy, and their dances must be sleeplessly maintained until even their beauty is a reminder of the German foe.

A New and Powerful Searchlight Invented

Since the earlier days of the present war many improvements and new devices have been devised to, as near as possible, "turn night into day". Of course, the idea is always to clearly light up the enemy's positions while keeping our own in the dark. The most effective and most generally used and powerful search lights, so, most improvements have been directed towards increasing the power of these highly important instruments.

A very great advance has recently been made by Elmer A. Sperry of New York. Mr. Sperry has already made a number of very valuable inventions of particular use in the present war—mostly relating to automatic stabilizers and steering devices for aeroplanes. But his most recent improvement is in increasing the power of searchlights. He has just mounted on the roof of his laboratory in Brooklyn, a searchlight, which is 80 per cent. more powerful than the most powerful one now existing. The present most powerful one, at the Brooklyn navy yard, is credited with making objects plainly visible at over 55 miles. Increase the power of that by 60 per cent, and it is hard to believe how far Mr. Sperry will be able to see objects with his light. It has a candle power of 1,280,000,000.

It would be a great thing for either army to have a very few such lights. This is only one of the many very valuable scientific advances which the war has forced into being, many years earlier than would otherwise be the case.

A REMOTE POSSIBILITY.

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."
Yes, talk is cheap; but hope is cheaper still—
When all is dark let hope still be your motto,
For hoping much was never known to kill.
Then let us to the ball park right away;
Our team may win sometime—why not to-day?

CLEOPATRA'S CLAIM TO BEAUTY ALL DISPROVED

BALTIMORE, Md., Sept. 30.—Cleopatra, long famed as the fairest of the fair, was not beautiful at all. In fact, she was decidedly ugly. The discovery was made at the annual convention of the American Numismatic Association here.

Numismatists can prove that the supposed bewitching queen of Egypt had irregular features, a flat chest, large ears, small eyes, bony shoulders and a scrawny neck. The proof is found in some of the rare coins which the numismatists from all sections of the country have brought with them and exhibited.

Answers--Queries

What Material shall it be?
What Color will best suit?
What Style will be most becoming?
And Where Can I Purchase the most up-to-date Garment?

¶ These are questions, all of which, are passing through the minds of Ladies about to make their FALL PURCHASES, and they apply equally as much whether the garment in question be a SUIT, a COAT, a DRESS, a WAIST, or even a SKIRT—for the natural desire is always to look ones best.

¶ But the question WHERE to purchase cannot correctly be decided upon without having first visited the BARRIE STORE, which, if results count for anything at all, is rapidly becoming the principal daily rendezvous for the fashional world in Peterborough.

MR. R. B. ROGERS AND ALD. DOBBIN ARE THE LOCAL DELEGATES

At a well-attended meeting of the Speakers' Patriotic League, held in the Patriotic Fund Office, Simcoe St., last night, Mr. R. B. Rogers and Ald. F. H. Dobbin were selected to represent the League on the Ontario deputation which is to visit Quebec next week in an effort to establish a better understanding and more friendly feelings between the two provinces. Mr. J. A. Aylmer, president of the League, presided, and there were present, among others; Lieut.-Col. Miller, Lieut.-Col. Stevenson, Messrs. T. F. Matthews, W. R. Morris, R. B. Rogers, R. J. Soden, Walter Stocker, Adjutant McElhaney, R. R. Hall, Jos. Wesling, and F. D. Kerr.

A letter from Lieut.-Col. Malloy, of Kingston, stating the object of the visit, and asking for local delegates, was read. The deputation will leave Toronto on Oct. 8th, arriving at Montreal Monday morning, and remaining there until Tuesday, when they will proceed to Three Rivers. Leaving that place in the afternoon, they will arrive in Quebec on Tuesday night. On Wednesday afternoon they will go to Sherbrooke, returning to Montreal on Thursday, and leaving for home that night.

The matter was discussed for some time, and it was the feeling of the meeting that Peterborough should be represented. Finally a motion selecting Mr. Rogers and Ald. Dobbin was carried.

CORP. NELSON'S DEATH

Mr. Robert Nelson received the appended letters from the captain and chaplain of the battery of which his son, Andrew was a member. Corporal Nelson was a nephew of Mr. John Ormiston, 886 Water street Peterborough.

Belgium 17-8-16.

Robert Nelson, Esq.,
Campbellford, Ont.

Dear Mr. Nelson,—Official notice has no doubt been sent you of the death of your son, Corporal A. E. Nelson, who was one of my trusted and reliable N.C.O's. He has been through a number of bombardments and his conduct has always been most satisfactory both in and out of the line. In a recent attack he stood to his gun and did good work—he and his men came through safely. It was two days after that he was killed in a bombardment of our lines with very heavy projectiles. He was standing to his gun firing it at intervals when the enemy obtained a direct hit on his gun pit, killing him instantly—and two of his men besides—and some others were surrounded. He was killed by the concussion instantly, without pain, and when we dug him out from under the earth and debris, no signs of wounds or broken bones could be found. We buried him at midnight on a beautiful moonlight night in a military cemetery beside one of his own men, and beside other soldiers who share his honour as a soldier brave and faithful who died at his duty, nobly and well, overcoming any natural fear which might have been in his mind—for there are few soldiers who have no fear of the bullets and explosives which maim and kill. Capt. Masters, one of the Brigade Chaplains, conducted the burial service and Lieut. Reade, officer in charge of his section, six of your son's fellow soldiers and myself, and a few others were present. I am not permitted to give you the exact location of his grave but this will be notified you through the Graves Commission. He lies under the shade of a beautiful grove of trees and within a mile or so of a once famous city—now but a pile of bricks. His watch and one or two articles of personal value will be sent you through the regular channels. I enclose his identity disc herewith which may be of value to you.

I feel the loss of your son very keenly both personally and as his C.O. He served his country well.

Very sincerely,
JOHN E. RYERSON, CAPT. O.C.
Trench Mortar Battery.

Belgium. Aug. 18th, 1916.

Dear Mr. Nelson,—You will doubtless have been notified of the death in action on August 14th of your son, Corporal A. E. Nelson. His captain has given you the particulars. His comrades brought him out and I was able to give him Christian burial in the military cemetery at Transport Farm near Ypres. It is a registered cemetery and the grave will be cared for and a cross erected. We thought highly of your son as a brave man and a good soldier. And we join with you in your sorrow for the loss of your son. Such a sacrifice as he has made is not in vain in the Lord.

With kind sympathy,
C. K. MASTERS, Chaplain,

COMEDY AT THE GRAND

"Twin Beds" Lived Up to Its Advance Notices as a Mirth-provoking Comedy

Few comedies are capable of producing such a fund of wholesome laughter as "Twin Beds," which was presented last evening in the Grand Opera House. The play is full of mirth-provoking situations that are irresistably amusing. It has been characterized as "the funniest play in the whole world." It was well staged and supported by a capable company. Marguerite Risser as 'Blanche Hawkins,' handled a very heavy piece in a very competent and acceptable manner. Other parts were equally well handled. As a whole the show is full of sparkling humour and well deserves the reputation which it has earned in New York and other large centres.

THE "CALEBITES"

Hold Their Session in St. Andrew's Hall

The "Calebites" held their fortnightly session last evening in the Lecture Hall, adjoining St. Andrew's church.

The President, the Rev. Mr. Mitchell, opened the proceedings with a short speech, following which Mr. Langford gave a vocal solo accompanied by Mr. Treneer. Mr. Kerr then read a well-constructed paper on the subject of "Profit Sharing." This very much vexed question has continually been rising to the surface, but no really practical results, at least to any extent, have ever followed. However, Mr. Kerr treated the subject in a very impartial manner, and an interesting discussion took place afterwards.

Mr. Mitchell announced that the subject of the next meeting would be the question of women becoming better citizens if the full franchise were extended to them. This is a very debateable point and should provoke much discussion.

"God Save Our King" having been sung, the proceedings terminated.

Salaries Increased At Midsummer Now Janitors Want More

The janitors of the Public Schools reminded the Board of Education last night that the cost of living is high and incidentally asked for increased salaries. Mr. Hill suggested that the petition be received, stating the janitors had received increases at midsummer, and it was hardly possible that two increases could be given in a year. The salaries are now fixed by schedule, running from $600 to slightly over $1,500 a year.

The petition was signed by Walter Avery Isaac Elliott, C. L. Kauffman, Geo. McKee, W. Naish, W. Northcott and Robert Northcott

About the Preparedness of the ELLIOT'S STORE For Fall and Winter

ALL YOU PEOPLE WHO are customers on the outside of the counter, did you ever think of the trying time of the buyers on the inside, who are eternally trying to produce goods somewhere near the good qualities we have been accustomed to have. In a season like this it is an occasion for merriment for the sales staff of any factory if you should ask for 25c gloves or hose. They don't seem to realize you are in earnest, and it's almost as much as your life is worth to insist on it.

PICTURE MANY WEARY WEEKS and months of selecting and discarding the "No Goods" from the garments and winter-wear that are ever pushed up in front of you as the biggest value of the season—and then think of the joy and triumph we feel in being able to show you good 40s worsted hose when the lowest price at the mill is 54c. Kid Gloves whose prices seem never to stop soaring, at 65c, and the loveliest most complete range of Flannelette Gowns starting at 50c

IT SEEMS HARD TO BELIEVE at such a time that we have such values, in fact it is really harder for us to believe it, and yet, here they are from end to end in countless profusion. Another absolutely non-gettable underwear to-day is the 25c ladies' vest, however we kind of suspected they would be and had 2,000 laid away for us. Then there are 79c Corsets. The prettiest of the new Silk Blouses at $1.98, and we would sooner have you judge of the lovely guaranteed wool qualities in our Tweed Coats. We have loads of Mitts and Gloves in all the old good colors and styles, and any number of any size you should call for in slipper soles for your Xmas gift.

IN SHORT, IT WILL surprise you how closely we have been able to duplicate the good old qualities and prices, the values that we were afraid had gone completely, and not the least important factor, you are assured of real winter warmth, comfort and style at prices which are really much smaller than store-keepers can buy at to-day.

Two Westwood Girls Committed For Trial

Annie and Alice Douglas Will Appear For Trial at the Spring Assizes—Bail May Be Granted

MURDER ALLEGED

This morning in the County Police Court, Police Magistrate Langley, Annie and Alice Douglas of Westwood, were committed for trial on a charge of the murder of an infant, which it was shown was born to Annie Douglas on July 4th last, and died on the following morning. The case will be tried at the spring assizes. In the meantime it is probable that counsel for defence will make an application for bail. This will have to be made in Toronto before a High Court judge, and is seldom granted in a case where murder is alleged.

Inspector Miller of the Provincial Police Department, who conducted the investigation, said that Alice Douglas had admitted to him that her sister Annie had given birth to a child, which subsequently died.

She said she had taken a bottle of turpentine to her sister at her request. She did not know what had happened. The baby died three hours after. She had not seen the turpentine administered, but she said Annie had told her she had given the baby half a teaspoonful of turpentine.

Alice said the baby was born on July 4th, and died the following morning.

Mr. D O'Connell appeared for the defence and Crown Attorney Hatton for the prosecution.

The Kingston Whig says:— At last the 154th Battalion is to have kilts. That will be glory for every one from Lieut. A. G. F. MacDonald down to the cooks. As mentioned in Friday's issue the necessary authority, which has been held up for so many months, was granted by the acting Minister of Militia. The boys of the 154th are more than pleased. They have started to plague the quartermaster already for the issue and until those kilts come into the stores there will be little leisure in life for Capt. Crockers.

It will be remembered that many months ago Lieut.-Col. MacDonald stated that he had made application for the authority to make the 154th a kilted unit. His band was the pipes and the only thing necessary to make the 154th a credit to the historic name of MacDonald was the kilts. There was delay after delay until at times the boys almost gave up hope. Now all is changed, and their faces are wreathed in smiles. There are some 200 French-Canadians in the battalion but they want the good old Scotch tartan to wear too.

Col. MacDonald will have every man of the battalion outfitted in kilts before leaving for overseas.

On the Slightest Provocation.

The Kingston Whig says: Lieut.-Col. Scobell, commanding the 235th Battalion is, according to reports, making a whirlwind campaign for recruits and has already rounded up some 600 men. They are not weaklings either, for the recruits are marching from fifteen to twenty miles a day. An officer who has been watching the results of Col. Scobell's campaign declared to the Whig that he was the liveliest colonel that was ever produced in this military district. He knows men and knows how to get them. The plan adopted by the 235th was to trek through the country rolling in men as the battalion marched along. He carries a minstrel show and will give a concert on the least provocation. If there are two or three men working in the field the battalion stops in its march and does not start until those men are enrolled. The uniform and all equipment is carried on wagons with the column. The battalion, which started out with a strength of less than 300 men, is making a complete tour of the district.

Personally Col. Scobell is doing a wonderful amount of work. He secured an automobile somewhere, and within a day had thirty sailors. He refuses to answer questions as to where he located them. The car has done other good work. The colonel thinks nothing of running thirty miles in a night for one man and he seldom, if ever, comes back empty handed.

The registration scheme has been thoroughly worked out in Durham and Northumberland in which the 235th is recruiting. Every man is approached once, twice or a dozen times if he does not explain why he is in civies. The results have justified the work, however, and the 235th should be a full battalion soon.

For Another Session.

KINGSTON, Oct. 3.—It is rather an astounding fact that recruits are not coming forward as fast as needed but that there are boys in the convalescent homes who, after having gone through the mill, are making applications to get overseas again.

The camp headquarters has received many applications from invalided soldiers to allow them to re-enlist. Some of the men who have been shot full of holes are more than anxious. There must certainly be a great inspiration for a man who has been under fire when after being home for a few weeks his most urgent wish is to go back.

Inquiries made brought out the fact that it is almost impossible to show how great a percentage of the soldiers return to the front; as soon as they are discharged many try the medical examination and if possible re-enlist. Of course in many cases they do not pass the examination, but with the number of overseas buttons that are worn by men in the three battalions at the camp the fact that a large percentage are going back is borne out.

There is now a race between the various municipalities of this district to secure soldiers to be quartered during the winter and headquarters is being besieged by requests from all sources for those favours, says the Kingston Whig. One of the most interesting and one that seems to be of very great interest to the district concerned is that dealing with the 235th Battalion. There are half a dozen places anxiously working for an allotment. The order issued some time ago from Ottawa was that troops were to be quartered in large centres. This of course depends on the accommodation provided. There is accommodation for 10,000 men from this district, but as to where the 5,000 will be shaken into is yet a question. The 235th Battalion is about 500 strong now. There is Bowmanville, Port Hope and Cobourg in the list of runners. Each of these places want the battalion. The camp engineer, Capt. Palmer, was in the district last week and made an inspection of the various places. So far no decision has been reached.

The question is also agitating other places. Belleville is getting the Canning factory (beg pardon — "The Barracks") into shape for the new battalion which rumour states is to be quartered there. The fact is that in neither Belleville, Brockville or Kingston have battalions been authorized and this complicates matters. All three expect units, but just what will be done is a matter of debate.

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 3.—Members of the 155th Battalion, who are residents of Belleville to-day arrived in this city from Barriefield Camp on their last leave previous to going overseas. It is expected that the camp will be broken up about the 15th instant. The officers and members of the 155th Battalion are chiefly from Hastings and Prince Edward Counties.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The appointments and changes consequent to the visit of the Minister of Militia, already foreshadowed, have now appeared in the orders. Colonel McCrae, deputy, leaves the supply and transport department at Folkestone, Colonel Frank Reid, the new adjutant general has also opened offices at London. Another camp is being opened at Thorham, near Brighton, of which Brig.-McDougall takes command. His successor at Shorncliffe will probably be Col. John Hughes, brother of the Minister.

Still another 33rd officer has gone to France. The name of Lieut. G. N. Milburn appears on the list called from England yesterday. He was platoon commander of the Lakefield platoon, C company, 33rd. So far eight lieutenants of the 33rd have been announced as leaving for France. The list is as follows: Lieuts. A. R. Stevenson, N. C. Hatton, G. N. Milburn, W. G. Worth, F. C. Slight, J. A. McNabb, L. J. Stuart, and E. R. Hughes.

The recruits of the 247th Battalion have been fitted out with the new uniforms, which arrived on Monday.

Pay-Sergeant Elmer Edmunds has arrived in the city and is on duty with the 247th Battalion.

THE AMATEUR ARMY.

Just a lot of amateurs
Picking up a trade,
Drilling hard and keen to learn
How a war is made.
Some from crowded city streets,
Some from moor and fen,
Mine and plough, but good eyes,
Seeing they are men.
Just a lot of amateurs,
Rallied to the drum,
Charging up the shell-torn slope,
Cheering as they come;
Sweeping through the hail of steel
To the lines of grey,
Light of heart they play their part,
Calmer lads and gay.
Just a lot of amateurs,
Fighting hand to hand,
Foot by foot and inch by inch
O'er the stricken land.
Slow but steady in advance
Valour's mood they claim
In the fight for God and right,
Amateurs yet game!

Women By Hundreds Sob With Emotion At Billy Sunday Meeting

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 2.—Thousands of white-haired women, who formed fully 60 per cent. of the audience which heard Evangelist Billy Sunday preach his sermon in behalf of motherhood lent unusual interest to the picture in the big tabernacle which was about two-thirds filled for the afternoon service, and was crowded in the evening, when Mr. Sunday preached on the same subject.

Motor cars donated for the occasion brought scores of aged women, many on crutches, some too feeble to walk, and the lame, the halt and the blind, were included in an immense outpouring of aged mothers of Detroiters.

Nearly everyone in the tabernacle were a white flower and the sea of snowy heads and long rows of white blossoms made a spectacle not soon to be forgotten.

NINETY-ONE HIT THE TRAIL.

It was upon the pretty story of the infant Moses and mother-love which saved him, to become leader of the hosts of Israel, that Billy Sunday built his sermon, and from sweetly touching music at the opening, to an impressive plea for "trail hitters" at the close, the day was given over to the mother and her powers, her sacrifices and her influences. Ninety-nine hit the trail, all being women, and three-fourths of them white-haired.

At the opening of the afternoon sermon Billy Sunday Jun. sent to his mother a bunch of white roses, which were carried to "Ma" Sunday by an usher. Song Leader Rodeheaver and Mrs. Archer, of the Sunday party, opened the afternoon service with a beautifully-rendered duet. "Dear ones in glory are looking this way."

SOBS FILL HALL.

From the far rear of the great tabernacle came a soft answering chorus, sung by a group of women. "Tell Mother I'll Be There." Hundreds were sobbing, with faces buried in handkerchiefs, long before the music died away. Hundreds in that audience were in deep mourning, and as the evangelist touched the depths of pathos in his talk, women sobbed and shook with emotion.

At the outset of his sermon, Billy Sunday drew a word picture of a home bereft of a baby, with little baby shoes, toys, ribbons and tresses of baby hair laid tenderly away.

In his talk he lauded mothers to the skies and as suddenly turned and upbraided them for carelessness in upbringing of children, as in the instance, when after a particularly beautiful flight of rhetoric on the glories of mother love, he suddenly turned and said:

"The devil would bank his fire if the mothers of boys and girls would watch the companions and pastimes and habits of their children. You know it, too.

"You'd better get something into your old empty heads and keep your boys from gadding around."

A moment later he said:

FOR WINE GUZZLERS AND DANCERS.

"There's more power in a mother's hand than in a king's sceptre. When God gave you the job of mother, He gave you His right hand. That's something for you old card-players, wine-guzzlers and dancers to think about."

The text to-night was Exodus xi:9: "Take this child and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages."

Here are a few "Sundayisms":

"Mothers are always brave when safety of their children is concerned.

"Fathers often get the blues, hit the booze and commit suicide; but the mother will stand by the home and keep the little band together if she has to manicure her finger nails over a washboard to do it.

TRUE GREATNESS IN THE CRADLE.

"If you want to find real, true greatness, look toward the cradle. Launching a battleship with eighteen Jesus Christs is a greater feat than launching a battleship with eighteen inches of Harveyized steel armor. Bringing up a good boy is a greater task than building a submarine that can dive in a harbor in Germany and come up in the harbor of New York. There aren't devils enough in hell to pull a boy away from the arms of a Christian mother.

"If men had half as much gift as women there would be different stories written about many homes.

"Moses was a chosen vessel of the Lord, and God wanted him to get the right kind of a start, so He gave him a good mother.

"Somebody he said, 'God could not be everywhere, so He gave us mothers.'

"Most any kind of an old stick will do for a daddy, but a mother must be a real mother.

"If every boy and every girl to-day had a good mother, the saloons and brothels would go out of business to-morrow."

EDUCATION THE THING IN THIS MODERN AGE

Back in the old days when a boy had reached the 'Third Reader' stage of education he was put to work—that is, if his parents were poor and knew what work was. Education wasn't taken very seriously in those times, although the person who could read "writin'" was regarded with special interest. The two or three dollars a twelve or thirteen-year-old boy could earn was needed, and as a result many children were put at manual labour and remained at it all their lives. True, they managed to live, but it was hardly more than an existence.

Some humorist had said: "Old Father Time gets us all." Granted, and a hundred years from now the boy who became a skilled surgeon, as well as the poor fellow who from start to finish remained a drudge, will have been forgotten for about seventy-five years or so. Yet the fact comes home to us that to-day is a day of education, and the boy or girl who grows up without an education, or is so permitted to grow up by careless, indolent parents, is without question doomed to a lifetime of drudgery.

Children, boys especially, around the age of fourteen or fifteen, find study—school work—dull and uninteresting. These children often urge their parents to get them "working papers"—they won't go to school any longer. They want to go to work. Johnny Jones, or whoever it is, of the same age—their chums—is working; their are going to work too. As a result thousands and thousands of boys and many girls, too, are allowed to obtain "working papers," and are considered children no longer.

A boy or girl of fifteen or fourteen should be in the schoolroom, not in the workshop. This is an age of education and the boy or girl who hopes to make any headway in life must be so equipped to meet the demands of the times. The boy we will say, of working parents who remains at school until he is seventeen, and then begins an apprenticeship at some good trade, will—ninety-nine times out of a hundred become a better journeyman than the boy who left school—as fourteen, did odd jobs until he was seventeen and then began his trade.

NEVER HAD A CHANCE.

We admit there is always a call for unskilled labor, but what is "unskilled labour?" Unskilled labour simply means thousands and thousands of poor creatures, unprotected, who never had a chance. Do you want your boy or girl to become one of them? Yet the boy at fourteen who begins his 'career' side by side with this class of labour will, unless he is especially gifted mentally, never raise himself much higher than the adult workers around him.

Therefore the parent who has travelled life's hard road and has his or her children's future welfare at heart will certainly do his or her utmost to get those growing boys and girls at least a chance. Keep them at school until they are sixteen—if longer, better—and send your girls to normal schools if you can. Teaching is a fine profession one of the best for any girl. Remember the "Third Reader" stage has passed, and the parents, who are in touch with the times' demands, who would see their children get a start in life will keep them at school, will bring out what is best in them.

May Add To Scott-Rutherford Property For Fair Grounds and The Sewage Disposal Site

The negotiations between the city and North Monaghan Councils regarding the location of the outfall sewage disposal plant advanced to a stage last night, when the Crawford suggestion was definitely confirmed and attention concentrated upon the proposal to use the Scott-Rutherford property for the disposal plant and Exhibition Grounds. Mr. D. O'Connell moved, seconded by Ald. Stratton, that representatives of the Fair Directorate, City Council and North Monaghan meet on Tuesday, Oct. 10th, to discuss the use of adjacent ground that would allow grounds enlarge the Scott-Rutherford area to accommodate the agricultural exhibition. It was also stated that this would make a suitable site for a public park, with a long frontage on the river.

An enthusiast stated that he was convinced the property would make a good location for the Fair, and several members of the Board have generally expressed their approval of this idea.

Mayor Duffus reiterated a former expression that the success of any movement in this direction will be assured only by full cooperation of all the parties concerned.

Those who attended the meeting were Reeve McIntosh, Mr. Rye, Mr. Gillespie, Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Newhall, Ald. Stratton, Ald. McIntyre, and Mayor Duffus who presided. In the interim of next Tuesday's meeting, Monaghan ratepayers who are most concerned about the disposal plant will be approached for the purpose of securing definite information of the cost of the property which it is suggested might be purchased in addition to the Scott-Rutherford property.

Nothing Sweeter To Mother Than Appreciative Words

The woman who works from early until late at night, performing the endless duties that make up the routine of housework, and who never hears a word of encouragement or recognition from her lord and master, is a martyr of the first water.

Those in the rural and outlying districts who at best find life a pretty hard problem, work as hard as the veriest slave. They never leave home, know nothing but hard labor, have few luxuries and the men folks rarely never dream of hitching up the horse on Sunday and taking the family for a ten miles drive—a little pleasure trip. "The horses are tired all the week and need to rest on Sunday," they will tell you, but Mother keeps right on. Sunday, Monday and the other days are all the same to her.

THE ANSWER IS CHANGED.

But let a certain wearied woman be ailing for a moment and just watch the whole household worry and think out ways and means of getting along, but if "he" stops now and then and tells "her" how well she is doing life to her also becomes wonderfully sweet.

ENCOURAGEMENT NEEDED.

What an enchanted place the world would be if those for whom we give the best that is in us would show a bit of appreciation once in a while. Persons on the outside may compliment a woman—may recognize her worth and tell her they appreciate it, but when this recognition comes from her husband, father or brother, it changes the very air that she breathes.

If you, sir, happen to run across this article, and if you know in your heart that your wife, mother or sister is working hard for you—for your welfare—tell her you appreciate what she is doing for you. Recognition sweetens—makes light the hardest and most wearisome work, and you know it gives you new life and strength when some one tells you you're doing "great."

Remember, not all cases of nervous prostration and other kindred ills can be traced to "too much housework." Inconsideration, or lack of appreciation, which ever you wish to call it, has caused and is causing more mental and physical wrecks than "too much housework" ever caused or ever shall cause.

"Life is hard," she mused, "for some women. Nothing but hard work." Just then "he" came through the door. To see "her" idle held him, and then he noticed for the first time that her shoulders were drooping—that hard work had left its traces upon her. He set down the water pail and came over to her. "Betsy," he said, "don't iron to-day. It's too hot. Wait until to-morrow." And then his arm slipped around her waist and he bent down and kissed her worn and faded cheek!

"Too hot to iron to-day!" In a twinkling her world had changed. The hard work, and the long, hard years were forgotten. Then he went away whistling, and snatches of happy songs came to him quite like old.

And the woman who lives in a city flat also longs to hear a word of appreciation occasionally. She also is queen of her home (if she is the wife of a husband) in fact she performs the same duties from day to day, must

How To Absorb An Unlovely Complexion

The face which is admired for its beauty must have a satin-smooth skin, pink and white and youthful looking. The only thing known that can make such a complexion out of an aged, faded, or discolored one—that is a natural, not a painted, complexion—is ordinary mercolized wax. The substance dissolves literally absorbs the unsightly cuticle, a little each day, the young, healthy, girlish skin beneath gradually creeping out until within a week or so it is wholly in evidence. Of course such absorbing as freckles, pimples, liver spots, blotches and wrinkles are discarded with the old skin. If you will procure an ounce of mercolized wax at the drug counter and apply it nightly as directed, you'll find it a veritable wonder-worker. Another valuable natural treatment is a wash lotion to remove wrinkles which can be easily prepared. Dissolve an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. Bathe the face in this and you'll find it "works like magic."

When beating the white of an egg be sure that there is no grease on the beater. It will prevent the eggs from frothing.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

RED SOX GREAT STRENGTH LIES IN THEIR PITCHING STAFF

NEW YORK, Oct. 3.—Of the seventeen players who represented the Boston American League club in the famous eight-game world's series with the New York Nationals in 1912 less than ten will be seen in the coming series to begin on Saturday. Counting the present season, the Red Sox have won three pennants and figured in three world's series in the last five years. Victors over the new York Giants in the stirring struggle of 1912 by four games to three, with a tie contest thrown in for good measure, the Red Sox added to their prestige in 1915 by sweeping through the Philadelphia Nationals to a world's championship, four games to one.

In the 1912 series Outfielder Hooper and Lewis were the same fast fielding, hard-hitting players they are to-day. Gardner, the present third baseman, guarded the same sack; Cady and Carrigan worked behind the home plate; and utility outfielder Henriksen figured as an emergency hitter, but did not play in the field. All these members of the Red Sox combination participated in the series of a year ago, in addition to Janvrin, Barry, Hoblitzel, Gainor, Scott, Thomas, Shore, Ruth, Leonard and Foster.

In 1912 the Boston team had a world's series batting average of .290 and a fielding average of .968. In 1915 the Red Sox batted .244, and fielded .978. This season the averages show that up to within a few days of the close of the pennant race the Boston club, considered as a whole, was batting .268 and fielding .971. Taking the figures for the two world's series and the work of the team for the major part of the 1916 pennant season the grand average will be found to be, batting .244, and the fielding average, .969.

The opinion is held in some quarters that the outfield with Tris Speaker missing from the line-up is not as strong as the one that played in the 1912 and the 1915 series. The absence of Barry from second base, due to injuries is thought by certain critics to have weakened the infield during the closing weeks of the race, and it is contended that should he be able to participate in the series play the team will be far more formidable than with Barry on the bench.

There is but one opinion regarding the pitching staff, however, and a glance at the work of the twirlers, who have borne the burden of the hurling, and their records for the present season will indicate clearly the reason for the Boston fans' optimism regarding the outcome of the coming contests. The averages of the leading pitchers, both on the basis of games won and lost and earned run per game by opponents are as follows: Shore, .600 and 2.75; Mays, .615 and 2.39; Ruth, .667 and 2.01; Leonard, .615 and 2.37; Foster, .500 and 3.07; Gregg, .333 and 3.23.

That batting and fielding averages of the players, now with the team, in the world's series of 1912 and 1915, together with the averages for the present season in the American League pennant race, are as follows:

ARE ATHLETICS HARMFUL?

NEW YORK, Sept. 31.—"Are track athletics harmful to young men?" was the question recently asked by the Medical Times, and the query is answered by physicians who have had an opportunity to study this problem from close quarters for many years.

Those who discuss the matter and give their opinions are Dr. John W. Bowler, professor of physical education and hygiene and director of the gymnasium at Dartmouth college; Dr. George L. Meylan, professor of physical education at Columbia university; Dr. D. A. Sargent, president of the Sargent School for Physical Education; Dr. Albert H. Sharpe, athletic coach at Cornell university; Dr. C. Ward Crampton, director of physical training in the New York City schools and secretary of the P.S.A.L.; Dr. W. A. Lambeth, director of physical education in the university of Virginia, and Dr. William G. Anderson, director of Yale University gymnasium.

ANSWER IN THE NEGATIVE

These authorities are practically unanimous in asserting that the question is to be answered in the negative if athletics are carried on with the proper safeguards. Dr. Anderson of Yale has prepared a table of statistics on the lives of Yale athletes covering a period of fifty years which shows that the Yale athlete does not die young, nor is heart disease the leading cause of the greatest number of deaths, but the percentage is not higher than that expected among nonathletes from similar causes, and that a comparison based on the statistics of insurance companies is favorable to the athlete. Dr. Anderson, however, says that although the average athlete is not short lived, there is no adequate proof that he owes his longevity to athletics.

Dr. Sharpe, better known as Al Sharpe, the football coach, who brought about such an improvement in the Cornell eleven last season, is emphatically outspoken in favour of track athletics. He not only says they are not harmful but he asserts they are decidedly beneficial. He gives several instances of the favorable results in serious sicknesses of a strong heart action developed by members of the Cornell track team under the care of Jack Moakley.

NO CONTINUANCE OF WORK

The only rational criticism that can be advanced against collegiate athletics, according to Dr. Sharpe, is that the environment of a college athlete after he graduates does not generally afford him an opportunity to carry on his usual physical activities, and no other form is substituted.

Dr. C. Ward Crampton says that athletics conducted in a manner that satisfies the competitive spirit of the participant and their competent supervision are distinctly beneficial in serving the ends of physical education. Dr. Crampton enumerates the safeguards that the P.S.A.L. uses in protecting the health, of the thousands of elementary and high school athletes in this city and states that in the last ten years no competitor has suffered any ill effects from the athletic games held by the school organization, although more than 180 school district and championship school meets were held last year.

LITTLE DANGER IN ATHLETICS

Dr. Lambeth of the University of Virginia says there is as little danger in modern athletics, conducted under proper supervision, as there is in going to church or digging potatoes. On the contrary, he thinks that feeble minded boys often build up their constitutions through athletics.

Individual excess is the main objection to be considered against track athletics, according to Dr. Sargent of the Sargent school. This excess occurs in two ways—from over-exertion on the part of an athlete judged fit to take part in track events and from participation in such events by youths not able to stand the strain incident to competition and rivalry. When an intelligent administrative supervision is put in force the danger from competitive athletics is reduced to a minimum.

Classic Events of the English Racing Season

As the classic events of the English racing season, the Derby, St. Leger, and Oaks, always create considerable interest in lovers of the thoroughbred in all parts of the world, it will not be amiss to say a few words concerning the courses over which these historic races are run, says the Daily Racing Form. Not the least interesting feature of these courses is their age.

Racing was held at Epsom as far back as 1645, but it did not assume a permanent character until the first Derby in 1780. The famous Newmarket course is over 200 years old, while the Ascot races owe their origin to Queen Anne, in 1711. The York and Doncaster meetings are over 150 years old, while that at Goodwood is over 100 years old.

The three Thames valley courses—Hurst park, Kempton park, and Sandown park—are all modern courses, established in the last thirty-five years. It was on the last named course, however, that the first race for $50,000 stakes took place. Twenty three years ago the managers of Sandown park startled the racing world by instituting the Eclipse stakes, nominally worth this amount—first won by that famous horse Bendigo—and the success of the venture was such that the Jockey club ultimately established two $50,000 races at Newmarket, viz., the Prince of Wales stakes and the Jockey Club stakes.

Needless to say, the races for these enormous stakes attract the best horses of each year, and it is on record that in 1907 two winners of the Derby, [illegible] of the St. Leger, two winners of the Two Thousand Guineas, and a winner of the Ascot cup ran on the Sandown park course for the Eclipse stakes.

Ten Courses at Newmarket.

Newmarket, "the racing capital of England," possesses no fewer than ten courses, the longest being four and one-quarter miles in circuit. Here the Jockey Club has its chief seat, while over 1,000 horses will often be found in training on the Heath. Altogether there are nearly fifty training establishments at Newmarket, and a large army of employees is constantly at work during the racing season, keeping the courses and galloping grounds in order.

The cost of this labour is mostly met by the fee charged by the Jockey club on each horse trained on the Heath. For horses in training an annual charge of $25 is made, while a fee of $10 is levied on yearlings taking their first lessons. Altogether between $60,000 and $75,000 is derived from these sources every year. Although somewhat expensive, most owners like to train their horses at Newmarket, for then the horses need not be taken away to run.

There are seven annual meetings to choose from and prizes like the two Thousand and Cesarewitch to win, and, in addition, the course can be chosen which will most likely suit the horse. For while some animals can run equally well on any course, there are others which never do themselves justice except on a course they like. Consequently there is often a great deal to be gained by properly "placing" a horse.

It is at Newmarket where King George's race horses are trained by Dick Marsh, as the famous trainer is known on the turf; while not far from the town is a beautiful estate owned by Danny Maher, the famous American jockey, and probably the richest professional rider in the world.

Saved Derby Race at Epsom.

How many people are aware that had it not been for the generosity of Lord George Bentinck nearly seventy years ago the Derby race at Epsom might have been crossed off the racing calendar? In 1829-30 $100,000 was spent on the erection of the grandstand, which accomodates 1,500 spectators.

The maintenance of the Epsom summer meeting, however, cost more than the revenue from the stands etc., and the consequence was that the clerk of the course went to Lord George Bentinck and explained that unless more money was forthcoming this meeting would probably come to an end. Lord George lent the clerk $25,000, which the latter used to such good purpose that the Epsom summer meeting took a new lease of life, and the clerk and his family made their fortunes.

For many years afterward the original $100 shares in the Epsom Grandstand company realized large sums in the market. In 1884 they brought $400, although they dropped some $100 after that. This was owing to a falling off in the entries for the Derby and Oaks, however, and a great flip was given to the popularity of Epsom, when, in 1890, it was announced that in future the Derby would be worth a guaranteed minimum of $25,000. Its guaranteed value was then made $32,500, at which it now stands.

STILL TRUSTS HIS YOUNG WIFE

Though She Was Shot in Another's Room

PHILADELPHIA.—"My wife is the squarest girl that ever lived. She did nothing wrong of her own volition. She has only erred. I will wager every cent I have that she is innocent. I don't know why she was in the Hotel Walton with J. C. Graveur, but I believe she was either lured there or she was drugged.

"No matter what she has done, she is my wife. I will stick to her until the end of my life.

In these words Joseph G. Leduc wealthy Chicago merchant, to-day pledged faith in his beautiful young wife, Mrs. Lillian Kappes Leduc.

Mrs. Leduc, who lies critically wounded in the Jefferson Hospital is the keystone figure in the sensational "midnight murder" at the Hotel Walton. Her companion, Joseph C. Graveur, of New York, was killed by Mrs. Harry Belser, of Brooklyn, who then took her own life.

Within an hour of his arrival and before a dramatic interview with his wife, Leduc brushed aside all doubt as to his attitude. It was only late this afternoon, after a personal visit to the scene of the crimes and heart-breaking revelations, that the truth seemed to be borne in upon the wronged husband.

Even then the stalwart, winning Chicagoan would not admit that his loyalty had been shaken.

"I won't believe it," he said, passionately. "My wife is square. These things mean only that innocence has been seduced and a man I considered a friend sought to wrong me terribly.

"My love for her and her love for me is as deep as life. She is a true, faithful wife. Can't you fellows see it?" There were few dry eyes in the group of which the haggard husband was the centre. Forcefully—if not eloquently—one man, a veteran police official, expressed the view of the group.

"One game guy," he whispered. "One game guy."

With Leduc when he went to the hospital was Mrs. Robert Mann, of New York, sister of Mrs. Leduc. Softly he approached the cot.

"Lillian, Lillian" he whispered "this is Joe."

The wounded woman recognized the voice, lifting her head a few inches from the pillow she cried aloud:

"Joe, my Joe; come to me, Joe." Leduc threw his arms about her neck and they sobbed in unison. The woman drew him close.

"Joe, will you take me back?" she asked.

"Of course, I will," he replied. "I love you and trust you. We are going back to Chicago together."

"Do you really mean it?" she asked, softly.

"Yes, Lillian," he replied, simply.

Then haltingly she told her story. Later it was put into writing and signed. Here it is:

"It is untrue that I registered with J. C. Graveur at the Hotel Walton as his wife. I left New York on Tuesday afternoon after visiting my sister, and came to Philadelphia to visit my nephew, who is in the coal business. After visiting my nephew I received a telephone call from Mr. Graveur asking me to meet him in the evening. I met him at the Walton and he invited me to go to the theatre. I had no baggage with me except a small hand bag and I had planned to remain here only for the day, intending to return to New York the same day. After inviting me to go to the theatre Mr. Graveur suggested that I leave my handbag in his room, and I agreed to do so.

"On our return from the theatre we had something to eat on the roof garden of the hotel, and at 1 o'clock I told him it was time for me to go to my nephew's home. I then remembered my handbag in his room.

"We stopped at the room to get it. We had barely stepped into the room and just as I was about to pick up the handbag near the dresser a woman jumped out of the closet. She was tall and dark, and I don't believe I ever saw her before. She had a revolver in her hand. She said nothing.

"She began to shoot. The first shot struck Mr. Graveur in the left side. I tried to rush to the door, but before I could I was shot. That is all I remember."

HOW FISH JUMP DAMS ON WAY TO HEADWATERS

Do you know that fish actually jump one hundred-foot dams in their migrations each spring to the headwaters of the rivers in which they spawn?

Of course, this one hundred-foot jump is not made all in one leap, but in a number of short leaps of eight inches each. This feat is made possible by what is called a fish ladder.

This ladder must be placed in all river dams in which fish such as salmon swim up to the river heads to spawn. Fish will not spawn anywhere except in the still headwaters, and it is necessary that they arrive there with the least exertion. The government makes it obligatory that at least one fish ladder be built into every dam across such rivers.

Fish ladders, while they may be built of wood, stone or concrete, according to the material of which the dam is constructed, are all alike in principle and consist of a trough which begins at water level on the low side of the dam and then extends upward in several zig-zag steps to a point below the water level on the upside of the stream. Water enters at the top end and flows down and out at the bottom. Its flow, however, is not free like that in a sluice, but is retarded by means of cross-pieces at regular intervals in the trough.

The water in the ladder is continually flowing down and out at the bottom, forming a running stream up which the fish may swim with a choice of passing from the first pool to the next and so on up by swimming through the bottom notches or jumping through the top notches from one pool to the next higher one. The jump in the latter case is not more than eight inches and can be done easily by almost any kind of fish.—"Popular Science Monthly".

"Don't you play bridge at Crimson Gulch?" "Not any more," replied Broncho Bob. "It upsets all the rules. When you lose at poker you can keep your troubles to yourself and not talk about the hand. But when one of us loses at bridge he doesn't know what minutes his partner is goin' to draw a gun an' rely on a verdict of justifiable homicide."—Washington Star.

More New Trotting Marks

THE REAL LADY SET TWO WORLD'S RECORDS IN KENTUCKY FUTURITY. MABEL TRASK WON.

LEXINGTON, KY., Oct. 4.—Two world's records were made by The Real Lady in winning the two-year-old division of the Kentucky Futurity, the principal events of the opening day of the forty-fourth annual meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association here.

The Murphy entry trotted the first heat in 2.07 1-2, lowering the former mark of 2.07 3-4 for 2-year-old fillies held jointly by Native Belle and Volga and then lowering that mark in the second heat, trotting it in 2.07, and by so doing establishing a new two-heat record for 2-year-old fillies. Mary Coburn was second in each heat, while third place went to Bertha McGuire.

The Walnut Hall Cup, 2.12 trot, was hardly more than a workout for Mabel Trask, who won the classic in straight heats.

Giants Made A Great Record

(New York Herald.)

Sweeping down through the space of time which practically measures the life of the National League, a thousand teams have come and gone, and it remained until yesterday afternoon at the polo grounds to accomplish a feat which has never been done before, when the Giants scored their twenty-first straight victory. Baseball history was made when, after a lapse of thirty-two years, a nine was strong enough, mentally and physically to keep up the pace that no other nine had been able to maintain, and when the New York combination representing the National League won a double header from St. Louis by scores of 1 to 0 and 6 to 2, an epoch was marked in the great American pastime. Possibly there were a few present who were on hand when the old Providence Greys made their run of 20 straight in 1884, and possibly there will only be a few of the ten thousand who saw yesterday's performance left when the feat is equalled or surpassed. It will be something to talk of though in the years to come, and any fan who was lucky enough to be present when Rariden caught a high pop-up in front of the plate for the last out counts himself among the elect.

As far as world's series money and the hope of winning a pennant go, the Giants are practically hopeless. Notwithstanding this the Giants of 1916 will go down in the history of sport as one of the greatest teams since baseball became what is known as "organized." In the olden days there was not the same efficiency in competitive baseball as there is to-day, and the records that were made thirty years or more ago can hardly be said to stand up alongside the strings of victory of the modern organizations.

World's history has been associated with limelights which have stood out in the loneliness of it, although there have been accompanying shadows mark. School boys can all recall the charge of the Light Brigade; they can tell you of Nathan Hale when they have forgotten the achievements of the really great revolutionary generals; they can all recall Stonewall Jackson and Fitzhugh Lee who fought in a forlorn cause, when they can't remember the Union leaders who were victorious. The little boys of to-day who were lucky enough to see the Giants do what they did will be telling their children about it when no one will remember who won the pennants in the world's series of 1916.

Baseball statisticians have been delving back into the dusty tomes of past ages to try to discover some wonderful winning streak, and some antiquarian has discovered that the Cincinnati Red Stockings went through an entire season of 84 games without losing one. Possibly somewhere back in the days when Ptolemy ruled in Egypt he pitched a hundred straight with one of the Pyramids as a backstop.

Everyone who saw the double victory yesterday is convinced in his own mind that he will never see the like of it again. Coming down in the trains and walking along the streets no one could hear anything but baseball. The street car and milk route strike, the chances of Hughes and Wilson, the Zeppelin raids, the high cost of living, and all other vital topics of the day, were lost in the ouer vernacular expression, "Gee, the Giants won two!"

The two games were full of breathless moments, and it is no exaggeration to say that every crack of the bat was echoed with the thump of ten thousand hearts against ten thousand breasts. Every fly that soared up against the background of a steely blue autumn sky, flecked with silvery clouds, was accompanied by a gasp, and when the last catch of the game had been made there was an extraordinary outburst of enthusiasm. A huge sigh of relief arose, for one of the tensest situations in a generation of sport was at an end. The safety valve of emotion was once more lowered down to a normal position.

CAPT. PEARSON ADDRESSES THE PROGRESSIVE CLUB

Capt. Pearson gave a most interesting address to the members of the Progressive Club, at a recent meeting. Capt. Pearson chose, as the main theme of his talk, the care of the wounded at the front. He traced the stages through which the wounded soldier passes from the time that he receives first aid, either from a comarade, or from the Army Medical Corps, until the reaches a base hospital in France or in England. Men so dangerously wounded that they cannot be sent to England, are kept at the base hospital in France; also men whose injuries will be healed in three weeks or less. Those whose wounds will not permit them to return to active service within three weeks go to hospitals in England.

Capt. Pearson described the wonderfully efficient work of the A. M. C., their motor ambulances, hospital trains, with operating theatre, etc.

Wounded receive immediate attention, as far as possibe, and are transported with a minimum of discomfort and risk.

Capt. Pearson answered a number of questions of great interest to those present, all of whom were deeply grateful to the Y. M. C. A. officer for

Peace Terms Proposed By The Enemy

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, October 4.—The Tribune's London correspondent says: German agents, acting through King Albert of Belgium, suggested recently definite terms to the Allies regarding Belgium, Serbia and Lorraine. This I learn from excellent authority. The proposal included the withdrawal of the Germans from Belgium, the payment of an indemnity for destruction due to military occupation, and the retirement of the Kaiser's forces from Serbia without an indemnity, and the return of Lorraine to France. But the Belgian King and his Allies spurned these efforts repeatedly.

Anti-Recruiting Riots in Montreal

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, Oct. 4. — This city is again the scene of serious anti-recruiting rioting here this morning. During the procession of the Laval University students after attending mass, some lads demolished the large recruiting sign. The police were called out and there was street fighting in which clubs and stones were freely used. Two students, one policeman and several civilians were more or less injured. Mayor Martin has temporarily suspended a police captain, it being charged that he entered the precincts of St. James' Cathedral to arrest the students. There will be an investigation. Four students are under arrest.

OFFICE BOYS SCARCE IN NEW YORK.

From all over the business part of the city there has arisen a sudden cry for office boys, and for once, to the great shocking and grieving of believers in "natural law," the demand has not created a supply. At any rate, the supply is far from meeting the demand, and, in offices reported—perhaps with a touch of exaggeration—as innumerable, the many tasks small, but not unimportant, that custom has intrusted with more or less of confidence and hope to boys now go undone or are performed by servitors long since busy with other duties.

Formerly, and not long ago, an advertisement for an office boy brought forward anywhere from a dozen to a hundred eager applicants for the job and the advertiser could exercise his taste and judgment in awarding the coveted prize. Now the tables are turned and it is the office boy who does the choosing among the eager advertisers. This state of affairs has its inconvenience for the employers, but, by the observer without immediate and direct personal interest, the phenomenon can be viewed with satisfaction as indicative of general prosperity.

Seemingly it is due to a combination of causes, and chief among them are two. On the one hand, the need for office boys has been increased by the growth of old activities and the starting of new ones, while, on the other hand, the bettered conditions of many parents in the class producing this sort of labour has enabled an unusual number of them to keep their sons in school instead of putting them to work as soon as they could get their "papers". Acting against the spread of these influences, however, must be the many strikes, some of them involving the earning power of thousands and thousands of families that are a troublesome characteristic of such times as these, but apparently this particular result of the stoppage of wages has not yet made itself felt.

Too often of late years, the position of office boys has been what has come to be called "a dead-end job," leading to nothing. When, or where, it has ceased to be an opportunity to "learn the business" its labours have degenerated into mere drudgery. The fewer created into more drudgery. The fewer candidates there are for such places this better for society.—New York Times.

THRILLING STORY OF CANADIAN SUCCESSES IN RECENT FIGHTING

How the Dominion Forces Captured the Zollern Trench ---"Black Devils" Dig Trenches Under an Enfilading Fire and Then Rushed Right on the Guns---Hot Fighting For Winnipeg Troops.

LONDON, October 4.—Sandwiched between a veteran British brigade, in which was a certain Northumberland battalion which we once "took over" from the Ypres salient, and an eager new division which consists almost entirely of London citizen soldiers, the Canadians since last Wednesday, when they went over in daylight, have been having the time of their lives, and have caught the Germans with their backs to the wall, although as a wounded officer who must have been an Irish-Canadian said the other day: "There is no wall there."

GERMANS USE THE BAYONET.

It has been the bitterest fighting in their experience, and one officer of the "Little Black Devils," who has been with this division since Langemarck, says it is the first time he has ever seen the Germans come right into us with the bayonet.

The places have been mentioned so often in General Haig's despatches that it is only right now that Canadians should be linked with a portion of the fighting, though it must always be understood that we are but a part of a limited operation which has occupied the limelight during the last few days.

AT THE ZOLLERN TRENCH.

The Canadians took Zollern trench situated northwest of Courcelette at comparatively light cost. It was the Canadian battalion which bore the brunt, although to their right and going over very tough ground was an equally famous battalion whose colonel was killed early. This battalion had been in more than one scrap with "the devils." Other trenches in this German strong point were fully linked together with the Hessian trench and Regina trench. A portion of the latter has changed hands five times, but up to yesterday in combination with the new British regiments who have gone through the worst since the push began like veterans, we hold the complete line.

REGINA WORKS IMPORTANT.

Regina works were vitally threatening not only the Bapaume road, but communications beyond. Pys, Dahaume, and Lygny are full German forts which the Teutons are vainly striving to move. That is why counter-attacks of such tremendous violence have been launched on this section. Each night our lighter artillery puts up a barrage on every conceivable track from the German depots. In the opinion of a Canadian officer who has been close to the front, the enemy will never be able to move the stores they had stacked to last, perhaps to an inconclusive peace, with lines where they were in July.

DUG TRENCHES UNDER FIRE.

The "Black Devils" then commenced an attack in broad daylight. At one o'clock on a clear day "we were over the parapet and away five hundred yards before the Hun knew it," said an officer. "There we gathered in shell holes and part of the trench which the Pioneers had constructed the night before. Hell was let loose on us then from the left of the ridge in front of Thiepval, where the Huns must have had a dozen machine guns and many twenty-sevens. They enfiladed so hard that we had to dig a trench north and south in the face of fire. Luckily we kept up our communications, and when we found ourselves dug into the advanced Hun trenches, we got permission and streamed out in scores. The Huns surrendered, but we had no time to bother with them.

RUSHED RIGHT ON THE GUNS.

"The trench which had evidently only recently been built led to the Hessian trench, and we suddenly found ourselves among the machine guns, which were rattling away at the battalion which had come up on support to the immediate right. It was nearly time, but we knew it would be hard for reinforcements to reach us through the enfilade.

"My sergeant-major made a return trip to brigade headquarters for instructions. They came back to advance on the Hessian trench and hold it if possible, as Canadians and British brigade were gaining ground to direct north of Courcelette.

GERMAN PRISONERS FEARFUL.

Hundreds of Germans, very much dazed, surrendered, for our guns were working splendidly and with few exceptions the dugouts were never as formidable as those around Courcelette. I heard coming down that we gathered in two thousand prisoners in twelve hours. They had all to go through their own enfilading barrage and sometimes they needed considerable coaxing, but we couldn't afford to have them behind us when we advanced on the Regina trench.

GERMANS MAKE STRONG ATTACK.

"That night, when we were trying to make something out of the wrecked Hessian trench, which was the strongest of the three, the Germans came over on wholesale counter-attacks. It was the first time they had ever stood up to us with bombs and bayonets, but they fought desperately and well.

"I don't count the Germans as a beaten man yet by any means, but with the assistance of tanks, which seemed to have come up from nowhere, we beat them off and started for Regina. It sounded like home to me, but I was pinked as I went over parapet. I found doctors working in the trench we had just left. You can't say enough about the medicoes in this present game. I got back safely that night."

STALKED MACHINE GUN CREWS.

One of the old Canadian early battalions fits up the story of what happened on the right, while to the right of them, also in charges which gained them three series of trenches, was a veteran battalion officer, who says: "We were held up some time by an enfilading fire, which eased off while the 'black devils' were getting it.

"Then we found the strong points, which had two machine guns, each protected by bombers generally. We went round them and caught them in the rear by stalking, and the kilted sergeants, who seemed to have a charmed life, stalked three in this way killing an average of five men in each.

DRIVEN BACK FOR A TIME.

"The Zollern trench was comparatively easy, our artillery having pounded it in, but the Hessian works led into a ramification of trenches which held out for three attacks. Then we got it and held it until orders came that reinforcements from another brigade were coming up, and we were to attack the Regina trench. We went for it, but on gaining part found a battalion on the left had lost hold, so we had to dig a communication trench back.

RAPID, SEVERE ATTACKS.

"Then the Winnipeg boys won their position again, and we were safe, we thought, for night, but we had four of the stiffest counter-attacks I have yet experienced before dawn. However, some part of the battalion always hung on.

"It was while leading his men to the last one that Captain Peterman, who had been already on the casualty list six times, was killed. He went down game."

From what is heard to-day, the Dominion troops are still in the thick of it.

The Aeroplane Is Playing A Greater Part Than Ever In The Great Battles

Frederick Palmer Describes His Trip From England to France in a New "Bus" Being Sent Over---Aviators Make Daily Trips Across Channel---Machines Make Record Time in Crossing---The Wastage of British Aeroplanes Has Been Supplied by New Machines From the Factory.

CROSS IN SEVENTEEN MINUTES

(By Frederick Palmer.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN FRANCE, via London, October 5.—Never were such numbers of planes employed and never did they play such an important part as in the battle of the Somme. The wastage of British planes at the front has been supplied by new planes flown across the channel from England, where, after coming from the factory, they are tested out at a home aerodrome. The record time in crossing the channel at the narrowest point, where the distance is 20 miles, is eight minutes.

When the correspondent, who was in London for a day's leave from the front, asked a certain general at the war office for permission to fly back instead of going by steamer, train and automobile, the answer was, "Perfectly easy," and to prove it he called up the commander of the flying corps and in five minutes all was arranged over the telephone."

A STEADY "BUS."

"What about my baggage?" asked the correspondent. "Oh, take it along and strap it on," replied the general. "A plane that carries 150 pounds of bombs will not be bothered with a dress suit case."

A dozen machines one after another were due to go to France that day as soon as the wire said a storm on the other side of the channel had passed. The correspondent slipped into a wadded jacket for protection against the wind, which would also act as a lifebuoy if he happened to fall into the channel, and took his place in a position usually occupied by the observer, who also mans the machine gun.

"She's a good and steady 'bus,'" said the pilot. "They flew her down from the factory three days ago and she is tuned up and ready for her part in the big show on the other side. You must not expect any fancy stunts or thrills. My business is to fly her to France and deliver her in good condition, ready for work."

FORMERLY A RANCHER.

She was immaculate in her fresh varnish and reassuring in her staunchness. This pilot had made thirty such crossings and was proud of the fact that he had never come down at any of the way stations. Before the war he had been ranching in South Africa, and was one of the thousands of men who knew nothing about flying, but have been made expert aviators.

It was as straight as a line drawn on a map, following a plotted course of land objects for the route, from the aerodrome the machine left to the aerodrome at the front. After forty minutes in unvarying steadiness of speed above the pattern work of the English hedges, he turned at a given point for the channel crossing. Usually the crossing is made at a height of 10,000 feet. This allows of more leeway to descend to the nearest shore or to a steamer in the channel in case of engine trouble.

"Our object is not to take any unnecessary risks," said the pilot, "but to get the plane to the front where it is needed, and we have risks in plenty over the battlefield."

CROSS IN SEVENTEEN MINUTES.

On account of thick weather we took the channel this trip at a height of 4,000 feet. As the white lacework of surf beat against the chalk just under foot the correspondent looked at his watch. Beneath were all the patrol ships that guard the channel, which were lost as the machine ran into a cloud. Neither the shore nor the surface of the water was to be seen. Then the pilot stopped the engine, and the machine slid for a thousand feet until the sea floor, dotted with the white flecks of wave crests, appeared and ahead, as the engine took up its refrain again, was the white edging of the surf at the foot of the chalk cliffs of France. As the machine crossed the tape the correspondent looked again at his watch and saw that the time elapsed was seventeen minutes. The flight had not been made over the narrow part of the channel. The fastest steamer would have required an hour and a quarter, and, travelling that way, the passage would have been rough, as a heavy sea was running.

BACK FOR MORE.

Now over the broad spaces of the hedgeless land of France, with the fields so many patchwork squares stretching between soft green clumps of woods, and on towards the section of the front and the battle line, so well known to the correspondent. Then finally over a cathedral tower and down on the green floor of the aerodrome, where a score of other new planes fresh from England had been marshalled in ranks after their arrival. When storms have prevented migration for a period, fifty have come in from England in one day.

"Good night," said the pilot, after he had reported his arrival to the aerodrome office and before getting into an automobile. "I am off to catch the steamer and bring back another 'bus' to-morrow."

INCREASE YOUR WEIGHT RESTORES LOST STRENGTH PREVENTS ILLNESS

Every day come new converts to that great army of men and women who rejoice in new-found health that came to them through the use of that wonderful blood-renewing preparation called "FERROZONE". Very simple how it acts. All you have to do is take two small chocolate-coated tablets with a sip of water at the close of each meal.

Ferrozone is a marvel. It contains just what thin blood lacks—lots of iron, but mark you, the kind of iron your blood is able to absorb. Ferrozone puts life and vim into the blood. Makes it rich, red and nourishing. Naturally the body is better fed and grows stronger day by day.

Of course digestion must be improved, and probably the stomach will require aid as well. Ferrozone serves the purpose admirably. Those who use it, enjoy appetite and digestive powers far beyond the ordinary.

That tired feeling is replaced by the buoyant, joyous sensation of health and vigor. Day by day as your strength increases, you feel new energy surging through your veins, and know that a great tonic of great merit is at work.

No remedy more nourishing or uplifting, no treatment's sure to bring lasting health, good spirits and contentment. Ferrozone contains just what run-down folks need; it cures because it supplies more nutriment than you can get in any other way. 50c per box or six for $2.50 at all dealers, or by mail from the Catarrhozone Co., Kingston, Ont.

Dr. Cassell's
Instant Relief

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE for the health of the family? The mother, of course! She is naturally particular to give her children only the purest of internal medicines, but she may not always know that a remedy applied to the skin enters the child's system, by absorption, just as surely as a medicine that is swallowed. This is a fact, and the mother should, therefore, use only the purest ointment obtainable.

Scientific analysis has proved Zam-Buk to be absolutely pure. The great English Chemist, Mr. W. Lascelles Scott, says: "I have made an exhaustive analysis of Zam-Buk and have no hesitation in certifying its purity and its inestimable value for skin ailments and injuries."

Although the healing powers of Zam-Buk are beyond those of other ointments, it is at the same time so refined that it agrees with the most sensitive skin—even the skin of a baby. Mothers who have once used it say they cannot do without Zam-Buk.

It is best for eczema and all skin diseases, ringworm, blood-poison, scalp sores, ulcers, boils, pimples, piles, burns, scalds, cuts, etc. All druggists or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

KEEP CHILDREN AT HOME

Hamiltono, Ont., Oct. 4.—Drastic measures are being taken by Dr. Roberts, the Medical Health Officer, to stamp out infantile paralysis, which threatens to become epidemic here. There are twelve cases in the city now, two of them of a very severe type. The doctor has put the ban on children attending moving picture shows and to-day he announced that beginning on Sunday children would be prohibited from attending Sunday school until the disease is eradicated.

CHOLERA INFANTUM

Cured By Using
DR. FOWLER'S
Extract of Wild Strawberry

Cholera infantum is one of the most common, and at the same time one of the most dangerous summer complaints of infants, and many children have died who could have been saved had the proper remedy been used on the first sign of the trouble.

Cholera Infantum begins with a profuse diarrhoea; the stomach becomes irritated, vomiting and purging set in and the child rapidly loses flesh, and becomes weak, prostrated and languid.

Mrs. B. A. Cirwell, Rosway, N.S., writes: "I can recommend most highly Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. A friend of mine whose little daughter was ill with cholera infantum was given up by the doctors. The little one's mother asked me to come and see the child. I told her I had a bottle of 'Dr. Fowler's' and asked her if she would try it. When the bottle was half used the child was well. This cure was a miraculous one for I thought the child was dying at the time."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past seventy years. Any one who has ever used it will not accept a substitute. See that you don't. When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" be sure that you get it.

The genuine is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. Price 35c.

TO CALL MUENSTERBERG

Cambridge, Mass., Oct. 2.—The testimony of witnesses in criminal cases which come to trial long after the acts alleged will be discussed in its psychological aspects in court here by Prof. Hugo Muensterberg of Harvard University during the trial of Albert J. Roper of Boston, charged with the murder of his father, Albert Roper, of Tewksbury, a florist. William H. Wilson of Lowell, senior counsel for the defense, made this announcement to-day in explanation of the daily presence in the court room of Prof. Muensterberg, who is director of the psychological laboratory at Harvard.

"This case is going to be one of the most interesting in years from a psychological point of view," said Mr. Wilson, "especially in its bearing on the attempt to build up criminal cases months after an event has occurred. Witnesses are asked to recall specific incidents from the daily routine of one day out of hundreds of days alike. It will be interesting to consider how this is done. I believe the phase of the case affecting mental suggestion will develop facts of permanent scientific value."

The elder Roper was killed and robbed near his conservatories in Tewksbury on the night of March 1. His son was arrested in Boston a few days later, after having paid several small debts within a few days, according to the contention of the prosecution. One witness (a street car conductor) has testified that the defendant, whom he had known for several years, was a passenger on his car on the night of March 1, and had alighted near the scene of the murder. The defense, it is understood, will endeavor to establish an alibi.

"Maria, you will never be able to drive that nail with a flat iron. For heaven's sake use your head," admonished Mr. Stubbins. And then he wondered why she would not speak to him the rest of the day."—Puck.

Pretty September Wedding in Millbrook

Items of Interest From the Village of Millbrook

MILLBROOK, Oct. 4.—The home of Mr. and Mrs. Reid Ball, Millbrook was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday, Sept. 27th, when their youngest daughter, Margaret Elizabeth, was married to Reginald Herbert, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Armstrong, Bailieboro, Rev. Dr. Lee, minister of Grace Presbyterian Church, officiating. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties were present, and the bride and groom were unattended. The bride, who was given away by her father, entered the drawing room as Miss Augusta Clarry played Lohengrin's wedding march. She looked charming in her wedding gown of ivory Duchesse satin, with an overdress of embroidered net and wedding veil fastened with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of bridal roses, lily-of-the-valley and fern.

The house was beautifully decked for the occasion with white asters and autumn leaves.

After the ceremony a dainty luncheon was served and the happy couple left for Toronto and Buffalo on a honeymoon trip, the bride attired in blue chiffon taffeta, with smart hat to match.

The many beautiful gifts were significant of the popularity of the bride and groom.

Special Services.

Thanksgiving services next Sunday in Grace Church, Millbrook, will be conducted by Rev. J. A. MacKenzie, B.A., Peterborough, who will also conduct service at St. Enoch's Church, Garden Hill, at 2.30.

THE WIND.

A servant of the Lord, I wait,
Attentive to His will
At His behest I range the plain,
The valley, and the hill.

I stir the ocean in its sleep,
I churn the curdling foam,
And lift the billows from the deep,
And bear the wild bird home.

I pluck the old man by the beard,
I toy with maiden's hair,
I rock the young birds in their nests,
I drive away dull care.

I sing through forests old and dank,
And whisper in the ear
Of crouching marmots, in their sleep,
And start the tim'rous deer.

I make a music midst the leaves,
A music soft and low;
And fill the air with minstrelsy,
As when the pipers blow.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Romance of Moosehead Lake

By F. A. MITCHEL

Moosehead lake is situated in the northern part of Maine. The other Maine lakes farther south have for some time been overrun with city people during the summer season, but Moosehead, being farther away, still retains much of its wildness.

There once lived a trapper on Moosehead lake, a widower with a daughter who was his housekeeper and companion. Gertrude Fleming was the only comfort of the old man's life. She grew up in the wilderness, but her mother was a refined woman and had kept her child from that uncouthness common among backwoods people. Her father was aware that some young man might pass that way and pluck his wild flower, leaving him in solitude.

Gertrude occasionally accompanied her father in his hunting and trapping expeditions. She would take a gun with her, and several of the heads of animals that decorated their cabin had been brought down by her. But she was more fond of the lake than the wilderness and in her canoe would ride its waves like a duck. She dressed much like an Indian girl—that is, in gaudy colors, with her hair hanging down her back.

Arthur Brewer, a New York boy, was one of the first city men to discover the hunting grounds adjacent to Moosehead lake. He was a handsome youngster and a thorough sportsman. One October day—he always took his outings in the hunting season—he was standing on one of the arms of the lake wishing for some way to get across when a vision of loveliness shot out from beyond a point of land. It was Gertrude Fleming in her canoe. About her shoulders and fastened under her chin was a many colored blanket, a circlet of wampum bound her temples and held the feather of a bird she had shot herself, while the arms that swung the paddle were adorned with bracelets made from the antlers of a beast of the forest.

"Hello!"

The girl stopped paddling and looked about her.

"Will you put me across here?"

Without a word Gertrude recommenced to paddle, turning her course toward the man on the shore. On reaching it their eyes met, the man's expressing admiration for this human feminine contrast with the desolate region, the girl unconsciously revealing through her eyes that she had been suddenly caught by the engaging smile with which she was greeted.

Brewer got into the canoe, and Gertrude pulled him across to the spot he wished to reach. She told him that she lived near by and that her father had gone into the woods for skins. Brewer had put up a tent at a point on which they landed, and there he made his headquarters, though he frequently slept in the open. He had game in his larder, but no vegetables. Gertrude cultivated a little kitchen garden and had left from her summer stores carrots, potatoes and other vegetables designed for winter use. She offered to supply him if he would come for them.

There was a great difference between this daughter of the forest and the young girls to whom Brewer had been accustomed. Perhaps it was this difference, this novelty, that aroused his interest. There is no doubt that the picturesqueness, the unity of a single woman in a wilderness, contributed to his enslavement. At any rate, he realized at once that his passion was irresistible. Possibly similar causes affected Gertrude. They met near the beginning of the day, and at its end each was conscious of the unbreakable bond that had suddenly united them.

When Fleming returned that evening he saw by the flush in his daughter's cheek that he had lost her. His only expression of the pain the discovery gave him was a suppressed groan.

At Fleming's invitation Brewer took his meals for the remainder of his outing in the cabin. There was no effort made to conceal the situation. All recognized, though nothing that two kindred spirits had met. Before Brewer's return to the city he asked Gertrude if she would go with him.

His words produced a sudden realization of the fact that she stood between a love on the one hand and her father and the life to which she had been reared and loved on the other. She gave no answer. Brewer did not urge her. He waited till it was time for him to go, then said:

"Will you come with me?"

Gertrude was standing between her lover and her father. The latter spoke no word. She looked first at her lover, then at her father. Suddenly she came to her choice. Running to her father, she threw herself into his arms.

Brewer, who had taken up his belongings, threw them on the ground.

"If you will not go with me," he said, "I will stay with you."

Brewer and his wife lived in the cabin with Fleming till the latter died; then the couple made a trip to New York. Brewer's father, who had disinherited him on account of his marriage, relented and furnished the funds for a comfortable residence that his son built on the site of the cabin.

The couple usually spend their winters in the city and the summers in their country home. But it was not till after the hunting season that they left the lake and the woods.

THE NEW "WILLIES."

New York Times.

"Willie," the terror of the Somme, is not simply an American agricultural machine with armour. The caterpillar principle was borrowed and improved by the British government, but the farmers here who have been using machines based on it would not recognize "Willie"; they would stare as amazedly and laugh as uproariously as did Tommy Atkins when he first saw the thing "walking up the street with the army cheering and laughing along behind it." We don't yet know what "Willie" looks like, but he is much bigger than we imagined. He is, it is said, the length of a city block; he is not an armoured car, but a walking fort. If you can imagine a gunboat coming up the street, or a slow, eccentric, but immensely powerful railroad car the length of a three-car subway train, you can understand why trees and brick walls bow to it. It seems to be a fort and a ram and a—bridge all in one. High Dunsinane comes to Birnam Wood and more is down. The Merrimac appalled the wooden ships in Hampton Roads; now the Merrimac walks abroad in the land and rams not ships but machine gun batteries. The Germans will have to find a monitor if they can.

Wonderfully does war and scientific invention meet. It seizes on everything and improves it. Railroads and telegraphs in French hands astonished the enemy and the world more than a hundred years ago. Long after the war "Willie" may have peaceful successors, doing many work as yet unthought of. In this age of Zeppelins, T-boats' guns and countless strange notions "Willie" is the most astonishing monstrosity yet.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must in order to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of The Examiner,

Dear Sir,—A short time ago I went to hear what to me was a strange minister, and as my memory and hearing is not so good as once, I took notes of somethings, which appeared to be emphasized. One was this:

Happiness does not depend on what we have, but on what we are. Now, we all appear to be seeking after happiness; so sometime after I got alone and called up memory, and record, for Luke 16th and 25th makes it very clear; we cannot get away from these, neither in this life, nor the future. So after I had written a long time, reviewing the past, asking myself honestly, what am I, I was afraid or ashamed to send it; it was too personal; but you can have it, as written, any time you wish, and send for it to do as you like with.

Another statement: I doubt very much if a man can be a Christian if he does not pray. The life of Jesus was saturated with prayer. This met my views exactly. My partner in life and I followed the best business under the sun with one exception, in my view and once a day we read in that holy book and knelt together, but always, perhaps, but I can never remember pressure of business preventing us, and very often read aloud, one or the other before retiring. I have looked upon this as the secret of our success. For a couple that has sent five children to High School, and one of them to China as a foreign missionary, are not ciphers. By the way, we received three presents from that far-off land, last week, done up a great deal nicer than is done in this land.

And so when we found out we had to quit, after farming together for forty years, we appealed to our Father in Heaven. Oh, the privilege of appealing to the Word, in trouble! Ask and ye shall receive; seek and ye shall find; knock, etc. And when I had been directed to this home I brought my partner to see it. And now living on borrowed time, and having had a Doctor brought to see me three times when I did not know anything about it, Once carried out of church. What shall I render unto the Lord for all His goodness to me? Read the last Psalm; that has appeared to express my views.

And now, reader, what are you? Created in the image of God; possessed of noble powers, for man is fearfully and wonderfully made; your birth and home in a Christian land; the doors of each house of God open, inviting; the servants of God beseeching you to be reconciled.

What pleasure it would give to welcome you. Some of the happiest moments of my life have been when welcoming a sister or brother into the Church of Christ. I have wondered as I have walked the streets, to see how many smoke cigars or cigarettes. When I was a young lad or young man I used to take pleasure going with the fair sex. My father came from Yorkshire and he used to say to me: My lad, mind, you can stoop and pick up nowt any day. And I have thought, as I have seen bits of boys with a cigar, surely that is the road to nowt, or nothing; or do the young ladies like to go with young men who smoke?

My mother was a member of Rowland Hill's Sunday School, in Old London, and she surpassed anything I ever heard in repeating verses. Look at this:

The road to Heaven, by Christ was made;
With heavenly truths those rails were laid;
From earth to heaven the line extends,
To life eternal, where it ends.

Repentence is the station, then,
Where passengers are taken in;
No fee is there for them to pay;
For Jesus is, Himself, the way.

The Bible is the Engineer
That points the way to Heaven, so clear;
All, then, who would the glory ride
Must come to Christ, in Him abide.

We're travelling through a desert, here,
Of glimmering hope and glimmering fear;
Though dangers, here, our road may cross,
It will prove our gain, and not our loss.

At times our steam is very low;
We do not move, or seem to go:
But move, we ought, and never stand,
Until we gain that happy land.

Now I know, or appear to, that this is not done real well; but if you would just recast it a little, perhaps it might help us to consider what we are in the light of God's word at this serious time in our history.

J. H. Taylor,
380 Bolivar Street, Peterborough.

With a sharp knife cut out the center of a large cucumber. Slice in rings about one-half inch thick. Place four of these in a circle on a lettuce leaf, filling the center of the rings with chopped hard boiled eggs, olives and pimento. Heap mayonnaise in middle of rings and sprinkle all with a little parsley. Serve with thin salad small crackers that have been buttered and salted and placed for a few moments in a hot oven.

PRICES REMAIN FIRM ON THE LOCAL FARMERS' MARKET

A drop of sixty cents a hundred weight in the price of live hogs and an increase of ten cents a bushel in the price of Ontario wheat are among the chief price fluctuations in this week's market report. Live hogs are now selling at eleven dollars a hundred weight while Ontario wheat is worth one dollar and thirty-five cents a bushel, delivered in Peterborough. This is a pretty fair price for both of the above mentioned commodities. There is a strong undertone to the market and there is every reason to believe that present prices will not suffer much by way of depreciation during the next few weeks.

Butter is quoted at thirty-nine and forty-two cents. The latter is for creamery. A few lots of dairy butter have been still selling at thirty-eight and forty cents a dozen. Supplies are not plentiful and chances are that the price will remain at the present level for some time yet for thirty-eight cents. Eggs are to come.

The Egg Market.

Prices of eggs are being firmly maintained owing to the good demand for domestic account and the continued good inquiry from over the cable for cold storage stocks, consequently the Montreal and other markets are active, and the prospects are that prices will rule higher later on in the season.

The Meat Market.

Prices in general remained unchanged, especially in meats. Cold weather will cause a slight increase in the dessert meats also, it is claimed, as many householders will on purchasing beef, lamb and veal by the quarter to keep in the cold storage.

There is a fairly good demand for potatoes, with prices ranging from one dollar and ninety cents to two dollars. Supplies are beginning to come in from New Brunswick which will cause a drop in price.

Poultry Market.

Dressed fowl of all kinds will be plentiful next week. Dressed chickens, the kinds of all varieties were being fattened up for Thanksgiving Day and a record demand is expected. Geese and ducks are fairly plentiful in the country districts, turkeys are scarce and chickens are both plentiful and in good condition.

it is made from choice tobaccos, fully matured and pressed into a solid plug so as to preserve all the natural moisture and fragrance of the natural leaf. BIGGER GATE RECEIPTS AND MORE ENTRIES AT KEENE FAIR

Otonabee Agricultural Society Favoured By Brilliant Weather For Its Annual Exhibition—List of Prize Winners and Fair Workers

October, with a golden smile, greeted the visitors to the Otonabee Agricultural Exhibition at Keene yesterday. Messrs. James McNeil and James McFarlane, who held the gate office, counted receipts at the close of the afternoon that totalled twelve dollars more than last year, and Secretary-Treasurer J. A. Drummond aggregated the exhibit entries at sixty-seven in excess of the 1915 figures. Hence the directors, to whom the financial balance is always a matter of first concern, reflected the Autumn sunshine with a satisfaction that knew no worry. Otonabee was naturally largely represented in the prosperous-looking crowd that makes the Keene Fair something of a community reunion, but there were many visitors from Peterborough, Norwood, Hastings and Rice Lake points. The steamer 'Rainbow' located a sandbar in a fog, and lodged on it with its scow so securely that it was detained three hours, until released by a boat from Harwood. As a result Capt. Burnett did not carry as many passengers as usual.

After long waits at lake wharves they returned home, believing the 'Rainbow' had cancelled the trip. Peterborough should be more largely represented at the Keene Fair, and would be, perhaps, if the Directors made a special endeavour to attract the automobile owners.

Among those noticed on the grounds yesterday were Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., who judged the dairy exhibits, Mayor Duffus, Ald. Weir, Reeve W. A. Anderson, Dr. Munro of Warsaw, who had charge of the track events, County Clerk Elliott, who assisted him; Chief of Police Thompson, County Constable Archie Moore, Allan B. Mann of Bridgenorth, and others.

Entries Numerous.

With the exception of the Roots Class, in which the exhibit might have been carried away in a wheelbarrow, the entries were numerous, and of fine quality. The dry summer robbed the roots of exhibition finish.

Countryside in Colours.

Keene Fair's special attraction, the vista of the valley of the Indian River, was in itself a feature that never fails with the succeeding autumns. Like a carpet of Bagdad the expansive watershed spread out on either bank with a weave of colors that ranged from nut browns and light mahoganies to the deep red foliage upon which the magic touch of Fall had exerted its most charming effects. But the natural beauty that stretches up the Indian River from the lake beggars description. It must be seen to be appreciated.

The Races.

In the absence of a band, (last year it was the 93rd Battalion) the races provided the main attraction other than the exhibits. The Free-for-All was easy for 'Jimmy Direct,' with Murton Storey behind him, although he dropped the first two heats to 'Dr. Johnston'. The results were as follows:

Free-for-All—
'Jimmy Direct'	2 2 1 1 1
'Dr. Johnston'	1 1 2 3 2
'Sedella'	3 3 3 2 3
Novelty Race—

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S SHIRT WAIST.

By Anabel Worthington.

A study of the shirt waist designs nearly always gives an inkling as to the ideas that the Paris dressmakers intend to exploit. The information that counts does not seem to be important when details are changed, but it is true that every detail contributes significance. The full length sleeve and the prominence that bespeaks will have for decorating all garments showed first in the separate blouse.

In the illustration we have one that will count among the season's successes. Although it may be made of all one material, the combination idea that has increased steadily since the beginning of the year is still dominant, and will give more than ordinary merit to a waist developed from this design.

The shoulder straps are as much to be considered as the button and loop decoration in diagonal effect, telling where the closing is made, and as the sleeve inch opening of the fronts for the stylish effect. The buttoned cuff on a full length sleeve has a neat turnback of the collar material in narrow width.

The pattern of No. 7,959 is cut in sizes 36 to 44 bust measure. To make in size 36 will require 2 yards of 36 inch material and ½ yard of 36 inch contrasting. In all one material 2¼ yards of 36 inch goods.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

BAD WEATHER ON THE WESTERN FRONT

ALLIES' OFFENSIVE ON SOMME STOPPED BY THE WEATHER

No Infantry Fighting Recorded But British Artillery Inflicts Heavy Casualties on the Enemy---Canadians in Command of Tanks Which Have Played Such a Prominent Part in British Advance---Grand Duke Nicholas to Lead Campaign Against Bulgaria.

PARIS (French Official Communique), October 5.—Bad weather again impeded the operations on the Somme front last night. In operations around Morval the French captured nine 31/2-inch guns.

Canadians In Command of Tanks

Special to Examiner:

MONTREAL, P.Q., October 5.—That many of the great "tanks" now playing such a prominent part in the British advance on the Somme River are officered and manned by Canadians, is indicated by letters arriving here stating that Major "Eddie" Holland, who gained the Victoria Cross in South Africa, was in command of one or more of these "tanks" in the recent operations. Major Holland left here for the present war in command of the Borden Motor Machine Gun Battery. It is also noted here that Major E. L. Knight, of Durham, Ont., who went from Canada to command the Eaton Auto Machine Gun Battery, has been killed in action, presumably while directing the operations of some of the British "tanks" cars. Both these officers are well known throughout Canada as particularly daring men, just the kind that would be sent in charge of such operations as the "tanks" called for. In their respective batteries when they left Canada were officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the same type chosen from all the provinces of Canada for the particular suitability for this class of work.

Grand Duke To Lead Against Bulgars

Examiner Special:

LONDON, October 5.—The Grand Duke Nicholas, former Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies, has been recalled from the scene of his triumphs in the Caucasus to command the Russo-Roumanian drive against Bulgaria, said a Stockholm despatch received here to-day. The Grand Duke will be given supreme command of all Russian and Roumanian forces operating in Dobrudja and on the Danube. He may act as an adviser of the Roumanian commanders in Transylvania.

German Submarines in English Channel

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, October 5.—The New York World's London correspondent says: Although the fact is not generally known in England, not having been mentioned by any of the newspapers, the Germans last week sent all available submarines to the English Channel. The object was, of course, to close the Channel for once in accordance with German boasts. But the British navy was quick to deal with this new menace. The Bremen is not the only submarine whose whereabouts is causing anxiety in Berlin.

Famine Is At the Door of Belgium

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, October 5.—A famine is at the doors of Belgium because of the requisitions of the Germans on the conquered population, according to the Times' correspondent at Lausanne. Meat is practically unobtainable, he says, and butter is very scarce. Potatoes have not been seen for some time, and the prices of all products are becoming impossible. The object of the Germans in starving the Belgians is without doubt to induce them to demand peace, the correspondent says. Great difficulty is being experienced in provisioning Berlin according to the Socialist newspaper, Vorwaerts, of that city. According to this information there has been a great rush to the soup kitchens which now distribute 34,000 portions daily.

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, October 5.—Mailed advices from pro-German sources in Holland to-day intimated that in August Kaiser Wilhelm and Von Hindenburg met representatives of Czar Nicholas at Kovno with offers of important concessions of large territory to Russia for a separate peace.

The entrance of Roumania into the war put a stop to negotiations, say these despatches, which add there is no prospect that Russia will desert the Allies under any possible conditions.

$1500 IS FIGURE AIMED AT FOR THE TAG DAY EFFORT

Everything Ready For Saturday's Big Campaign and the Hearty Co-operation of All Citizens is Asked For on Behalf of the Children's Aid

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN

Word comes that everything is ready for Tag Day, the day of days. The friends who are working have set a sum which it is looked for to be realized in solid cash. The limit is certainly not distressingly high, quite moderate, considering the great good to be accomplished. $1,500.00 is looked for. Such a sum will not greatly exceed what has been raised in years past. Of course there are, and have been, many calls. But this call stands head and shoulders over all others. Other objects have municipal, government, denominational and other sustenance behind them and on which to fall back. The Children's' Aid depends on the people.

Certainly no object deserves fuller sympathy or help. The more the people realize the great good that is done the more freely will contributions be had. Large sums are not expected. A general and hearty buying of the tags by all and singular will roll up a sum that will reach the high-water mark that has been set, wisely too, at $1,500.00. It is well to remember that this beneficent institution is your very own, of the city, among your people. Lending a helping hand to the friendless and dispirited, to the child homeless and in most depressing surroundings. The lives of the parents may soon be run. It is the children, the citizens of the future, that we should help and guard.

When a large number of ladies can and do give, unstintingly of time and effort, it is little enough that the public give of a small sum of money. The tag conferred on you is only the outward token of your willingness to help. Wearing it, you are for a few brief hours marked as one who has done "your bit." It may be discarded to-morrow, but the satisfaction is still with you as a fragrant memory, that a helping hand has been bestowed. Don't neglect the privilege of giving to the Children's Aid. The Aid needs your aid.

An effort was made to obtain the names of the young ladies who will sell tags on Saturday. Only a partial list could be obtained. There was a large number of volunteers. Quite a battalion. And more coming in.

PTE. VIC. NORTHCOTT OF PETERBORO' HAS DIED FOR EMPIRE

Another Peterboro' Soldier is Killed in Action--Ptes. F. E. Dean and Herbert Whitworth Who Enlisted Here Are Wounded---More Peterborough Officers For the Air Service---To-day's General Military News.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Pte. Victor Jas. Northcott, 2nd Battalion, 177 Murray street.

WOUNDED.

Pte. Francis Edward Dean, 50th Battalion.

Pte. Herbert Whitworth, 50th Battalion, Concession street.

Almost twenty-five months after he left Peterborough as a member of the gallant band of one hundred and thirty officers and men sent by the 57th Regiment to the first Canadian contingent, Pte. Victor Northcott, of the 2nd Battalion, has been killed in action. His father, Mr. R. M. Northcott, 177 Murray street, janitor of the Murray street Baptist church, received an official message from Ottawa this morning that Pte. Northcott is reported killed in action on Sept. 19th. The news will be deeply regretted, as the gallant young soldier was highly esteemed throughout the city. Before enlisting he was employed as an electrician by Messrs. Grant and Thorpe. Pte. Northcott joined the 57th quota here a few days after the war broke out and went overseas with the 2nd Battalion. He was ill in England for some time and did not go to France when the battalion crossed the channel, joining them after the battle of Ypres. He was a bright, genial youngster and will be missed in many circles.

Pte. F. E. Dean.

Pte. Francis Edward Dean, who enlisted here in August of last year during the first week of the big campaign inaugurated by the Speakers' Patriotic League, has been wounded. Pte. Dean was one of those who elected to go to Barriefield to join the 59th Battalion rather than remain here with the nucleus of the new battalion, which afterwards developed into the 93rd. He is thirty-eight years of age and married, his wife residing in England. Pte. Dean went overseas with th 59th and was afterwards drafted to another Canadian battalion at the front.

Pte. Herbert Whitworth.

Pte. Herbert Whitworth, who is to-day officially reported wounded, resided on Concession street, and was employed as a labourer before he enlisted here in the spring of 1915. He enlisted in the 59th, but was turned back for a minor defect and afterwards went to Kingston in a draft from the 57th Regiment to the 59th Battalion.

An old Peterborough boy, Capt. Victor McWilliams, A.M.C., son of Mr. J. B. McWilliams of this city has been appointed second in command of the Ontario Base Hospital at Toronto. Capt. McWilliams has been overseas for a year with the Imperial Army medical corps. Rugby fans who remember Capt. McWilliams' prowess on the Peterborough rugby team will be glad to learn of his appointment.

Peterborough's representation in the air forces of the Empire is steadily growing. Sub Flight Lieut. Leslie Stevens and Norman Geale are overseas, Sub Flight Lieut. Crossman sails in a few days. Lieut. Wilfrid Stratton is entering the Flying Corps in England. The latest addition to Peterborough's list of airmen is Lieut. W. P. Eastwood, son of Major J. H. Eastwood, medical officer of the 57th Regiment.

Lieut. Eastwood who went overseas last year with the 39th Eastern Ontario Battalion was transferred to the Flying Corps and has been in training in England for some time.

Several other Peterborough officers who went across with infantry regiments may also desert the surface fighting for the arduous work of fighting in the air.

Farrier Sergt. Rickaby of the 74th Battery has been home on leave for a few days from Barriefield Camp.

A number of the Peterborough members of Queen's Field Ambulance are home on leave from Barriefield Camp.

The Kingston Standard says:

As stated in the Standard of yesterday, the 230th French-Canadian battalion now in camp near the city of Ottawa, has been ordered to Barriefield camp and will be here on Saturday of this week. The battalion is in command of Lt-Col. DeSalaberry, who some time ago returned from the front, and has a total strength of 600 men of all ranks. The battalion will be located on that part of the camp grounds formerly occupied by the 130th battallion of Perth. At the conclusion of the camp at Barriefield, the 230th will be located in the city of Kingston, and as the officers are inveterate recruiters it will not be long before the battalion is up to strength. Lt.-Col. Wilson and Major Hamilton are busy looking for places in which to quarter troops, and if the co-operation of the city can be secured, Kingston will have its streets thronged with soldiers for the coming winter.

The city is peculiarly adapted to the training of troops, and being the headquarters of the district, it is a decided advantage to have them here.

The special company now in camp will probably be converted into a base battalion, and this too will be located here. Then there is the promise of another Frontenac battalion of artillery and the various departmental corps will give Kingston what The Standard said would be its last, about six weeks ago.

Brig-General Hemming has ordered the 230th to be in camp on Saturday. Lt.-Col. DeSalaberry will receive a warm welcome from the population of the camp and the city.

Pte. Alex. Sorgat of the 238th Battalion, Northern Pacifiers, and a former local printer, is in town for a few days on leave from Camp Borden. Pte. Sorgat has been living in Cochrane and is making arrangements to have his wife come to Peterborough to live.

Elmer Edmunds of Port Hope, and Geo. Wells, of Peterborough, were taken on the strength of the 247th Battalion yesterday. The former has been appointed pay sergeant.

Flavelle's Limited Destroyed By Fire

Disastrous Fire Broke Out in Lindsay Early This Morning—Loss Will Be at Least Two Hundred Thousand Dollars—Flre Was Still Burning at Noon To-day.

TANK BLEW UP

LINDSAY, Oct. 5. — Flavelle's, Limited, was visited by a disastrous fire at 5 o'clock this morning, and completely gutted, one hundred and fifty hands being thrown temporarily out of employment. The fire started in the boiler room, and lapped its way through the butter-making, ice-cream, box-assembling, plucking and candling departments, as well as the office, while the cold storage building which was semi-detached, is still involved in danger, owing to difficulty of getting at the fire. This building contains $200,000 worth of produce. This includes 35,000 cases of eggs, 500,000 pounds of butter and 1,000 boxes of cheese. The walls of this storage section are two feet thick, while it is topped with four roofs, all of which handicapped the firemen in their fight to save the building and contents. The fire is still raging in this part of the plant.

Houses Caught Fire.

Two hundred thousand dollars represents the estimate that is placed on the fire loss which Lindsay suffered this morning through the destruction by fire of the cold storage plant of Flavelle's, Limited. The fire was discovered by a nightwatchman about 6 o'clock this morning in the boiler room of the huge plant. Twenty minutes later that portion of the building was ablaze and doomed to destruction. At noon to-day the cold storage section of the plant was still burning fiercely and there is very little hope of saving the building together with thousands of dollars worth of produce. Several houses across the road from the fire were in danger and the occupants made a hurried departure taking with them as much furniture as circumstances would permit. Several times the house caught fire, but were saved by the prompt action of the firemen.

Ammonia Tank Blew Up.

During the progress of the fire the ammonia tank which is used in connection with the cold storage plant, exploded with terrific force and the main portion of the tank was hurled across to the opposite side of the Scugog River. The main portion of the plant was completely destroyed in less than an hour after the fire was first discovered. The cold storage section was still burning at noon. The latter contains tons of produce, such as butter, eggs and cheese, the greater part of which was for export to Great Britain. Included in the loss is several thousand dollars worth of produce that was stored in the plant by Lindsay merchants, also a large quantity of furs belonging to people residing in and around Lindsay.

Butter Ran Into the River.

When the fire was at its height, the butter and other produce melted and ran into the river in large quantities. The whole surface of the river is covered with a layer of grease as a result. Nine carloads of produce that were standing on the siding were removed without damage to the contents.

This lot alone was worth fortyfive thousand dollars. The entire building was filled to overflowing with produce of all kinds. In addition to this the firm was preparing for the opening of the poultry season, and, in consequence had a large quantity of poultry on hand.

From one hundred and fifty to two hundred hands will be thrown out of employment. This morning, Mr. Flavelle was unable to estimate the actual amount of damage, although he said it would easily reach two hundred thousand dollars and more if the firemen were unable to save the cold storage section. The walls in this part of the building are three feet thick, and are grouted, making the fire all the more difficult to contend

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

THURSDAY, OCT. 5, 1916

REMEMBER OUR PRISONERS.

Every Sunday we beseech the good Lord to have "pity upon all prisoners and captives" and now a chance is presented for adding to faith works. The Duchess of Connaught asked the women of Canada, to substitute for a proposed personal gift of farewell, contributions to the Duchess of Connaught's "Prisoners of War Fund"; and Lady Hendrie, president for the Province of Ontario in an appeal, printed on this page, places before the women of Ontario, a call for contributions to supplement the "Prisoners of War Fund". We all have reason to know of the hard lot of Canadian—and Peterborough—prisoners in Germany. Some of them are of our own kin and citizenship. Their hard and scanty fare, their lack of warm clothing and good comfortable beds added to the despotism of their custodians—brutal, ill-treatment and scourgings—make a strong appeal to hope hearts that are thus made to bleed. Our women are invited to read the appeal of Lady Hendrie appearing elsewhere in this issue.

CHILDREN'S AID TAG DAY.

Saturday is our annual "Tag Day" in the interests of the Children's Aid Society. Whatever we do or leave undone we must stand by, and not neglect, the claims of this splendid society. The neglected and dependent elements of our population make first call upon our charity and generosity. Not "charity" of the patronizing kind, but on the broader kind, without which all the doings and resolves become in the divine sight, but as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. We, as a country and as society and as a community of Christian churches, are responsible for the conditions, and in duty bound to repair the results of shortcoming somewhere. As good citizens we must in self protection and in the interests of the quality of our citizenship, contribute to conditions that will help remove the menace of potential development of vice and criminality. Besides, the highest motive should be inspired by love of our fellow men, and the duty of relief of the sufferings of neglected, ill-used, ill-fed, ill-trained and withal, helpless and innocent children, who, without our help, will, in many cases, grow up to become if not vicious, undesirable, members of the community.

ANOTHER SPECIMEN PIN-PRICK

The race and creed operators seem never to lose a chance to stir up trouble, to wound and excite interprovincial hostility. A Kingston journal has on Tuesday, an article, under the heading "Fourteen Fine R. C. H. A. Recruits: Few of Number Came from Montreal: Others from Toronto and Kingston." This, in large display type, giving the casual reader, who often confines his newspaper aquisition of knowledge to the headings, and every other reader, the impression that Quebec is still slow in recruiting—in effect, in this regard, giving Quebec the "black eye." As the article tells the truth, and contradicts the lie in the heading. The latter says, "ten of the number (14) were recruited in the city of Montreal, three in Toronto, and one in Kingston." "Ten," instead of a "few of the number" would have been typographically as convenient for the heading, but then it wouldn't have conveyed the innuendo that Quebec was up to its old recalcitrant—refusal-of-recruiting." This spirit is regrettable. When we are all speaking for the success of the war, and need a reproachment more than ever, it is a bad time for sectionalism, which goes to the extreme of unkindness in excess of it. This is a small matter in itself, but it is a not-to-be-overlooked matter to the careful reader of the current history of a certain journal which will thus justify daily opportunity of the Hon. R. A. Pringle's vote for [illegible] on a vote for "Reference"—a vote that, if [illegible] would have [illegible] Quebec the "black eye" as a province that refused to help Canada in the hour of need. The fact is that Quebec's balance of trade and progress [illegible]

A CALL UPON THE GOVERNMENT.

An Ottawa despatch states that the patriotic fund needs $13,500,000. Now thirteen and a half millions is no small sum to be raised by seven and a half million people, and if we take out the proportion of the population who will not contribute, it means nearly $4 per head of those who are willing to give. The people of Canada have responded splendidly to past appeals, for patriotic funds so designated, and also for all other patriotic purposes. Besides, they are compelled to contribute by way of taxation to many forms of war help, and these things conjoined with the high cost of living, naturally lower the capacity of the people for giving. Besides there are local demands, such as the Children's Aid Society, and other things that must be adequately financed in order to give them their absolutely necessary usefulness. The government is charged with the responsibility of financing this war, but it confines its attention to financing the destructive end—the provision of guns and munitions and other agencies of destruction; but it gives little or no attention to providing means for the reparation consequently necessary from the destruction it helps create. There does not seem to be any reason why governments do not take a larger financial interest in Red Cross work, one of the most important subsidiary agencies of making and keeping the soldier fit, and restoring him to the ranks of the army in the field, and restoring him as the next possible condition to the ranks of citizenship if he is unfitted for active service. As to the Patriotic Fund, why should it not be a larger charge on government finances? The people's resources are largely drawn upon in giving in many ways, and though they do it willingly they could do more for other necessary home and national enterprises, which governments cannot be expected to subvent if the government assumed a larger share of financial responsibility in respect of patriotic funds and Red Cross work. The government boasts, and with good cause, of the patriotism of the people in over-subscribing the war loan, giving twice what was asked. The first 100 million was considered enough for present purposes, and we have a windfall, an unexpected sum of another 100 million left that could be partially devoted to relieving the drain upon the people's liberality by devoting a more or less liberal proportion to funds, which otherwise the people will have to maintain. There is a considerable body of opinion favourable to providing patriotic and other funds associated with war work, by local taxation, a measure, it is claimed that while distributing the duty of giving proportionately and equably will relieve the cheerful giver, who is always looked to to respond. If this view is entertained it is only a companion idea to the government, with its overflowing war coffers, assuming a considerably large share of financial responsibility. Of course, if this is not done, the people will have to respond, for the patriotic and other funds must be maintained.

The National Executive committee of the Canadian Patriotic Fund at its meeting at Ottawa, justified its decision not to ask government assistance for the fund, by a process of reasoning that does not seem unanswerable, and asks contributions to "continue" the same as heretofore, or more liberally. The committee states that the government is spending fully 2 millions per month in separation allowances, met by war loans which "future generations must pay," and it asks the people of Canada to pay a million dollars per month "spot cash," so to speak, to the entire relief of future generations.

A WONDERFUL COUNTRY.

That Great Britain is by no means bankrupt yet is strikingly evidenced by the statement that for the six months ended Saturday her revenue receipts exceeded those of the corresponding period last year by over $300,000,000. What a wonderful country it is.—Ottawa Free Press.

Appeal to Ontario Women

Dear Madam,—I have been asked to place before the women of Ontario the appeal for a contribution to supplement the Duchess of Connaught's "Prisoners of War Fund." Her Royal Highness having graciously approved of this fund of herself, in war time, rather than a personal gift as had been at first suggested to her.

Accordingly a meeting of representatives from the Provincial Women's Societies with Mrs. Sandford, the Provincial Secretary and the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, [illegible] at which the proposal was unanimously agreed to; and it was left to the officers of each society to make [illegible] to collect subscriptions from its members, remitting to Charles Sweet, Esq., General Manager, Dominion Bank, Toronto, who was appointed Honorary Treasurer.

In order to [illegible] woman in the Province [illegible] to participate in [illegible] by the Duchess [illegible] women and children [illegible] and every penny [illegible] may be used given to the Honorary Treasurer, or deposited with the local Bank or Post Office.

Such were conditions arise on account of which the whole amount of this supplementary contribution shall not be required for the relief of Prisoners of War, it is understood that Her Royal Highness shall be free to apply such surplus as she may deem best for the benefit of Canadian soldiers.

The subscription list will be closed on the 13th of October next.

Mrs. Arthur Van Kreughnet, 256 College street, Toronto, was appointed Hon. Secretary, and all correspondence, but not subscriptions, should be sent to her.

The good accomplished by this Fund has been inestimable and feel sure this appeal to the women of Canada will receive a cordial and prompt response.

Yours very sincerely,
Lena M. Hendrie,
President for the Province of Ontario.

BOXERS RETURN BROKE.

New York, Oct. 2.—On board the good ship Vestris of the Lamport & Holt Line, which arrived at New York a few days ago, were almost a dozen pugilists of various sizes, weights and colors. The names of the exponents of the manly art were not on the first class passenger list, as according to one of their number they had returned from South America "dead broke."

Early in June about twenty boxers and their managers were invited to the Argentine Republic to take part in an international tournament from which the boxers were to reap a golden harvest. Upon arriving at Buenos Ayres they were informed that no prize fighting would be allowed, but that boxing exhibitions could be held across the river. These entertainments were held but few attended them.

The trip was a failure was start to finish, according to those who have returned. Not all of the men have come back. Sam McVey, Bob Devere and Dave Mills are still in Chile and they have [illegible] chance of remaining there unless funds are sent from New York. Jim Buckley returned yesterday with the boxers. The boxers who arrived yesterday are Harry Wells, "South House" Weir, Mike Mauvy, Eddie Kelly, Tim Kelly, Tom Robinson, Albert Badoud, Ted Lewis, Nat Bradley, and Sam Langford. W. H. Hechler, who represented Billy Gibson, Billy Murphy and Charles Johnson, were also in the party.

ONE FORM OF PENALTY WAR LORDS HAVE BROUGHT UPON GERMAN PEOPLE

An advertisement now appearing in Canadian newspapers and which has been running for some weeks in London papers, gives some idea of what conquest in war means, and what Germans are losing as a result of the greedy movement of the Kaiser two years ago. This is an advertisement of the sale by auction of German property in Nigeria. The sale is being made by order of the supreme court of Nigeria. The former German colony is now a British possession having been captured by the British. The disposal of enemy property there is a reminder that Germany has lost all her colonial possessions through the war.

It is apparent from the action taken by the British authorities in the colony that there is no intention on the part of Britain of allowing Germany to again possess Nigeria. Having been taken by legitimate conquest it will remain a colony of Britain.

This same policy will no doubt be followed in respect of German East Africa and the other former German possessions now in the hands of Britain. Germany elected to test her strength against Britain when the latter had no desire for war. She must stand the losses.

Industrious, able Germans went into these overseas possessions of their country and spent years in building up profitable businesses. The partial list of property in Nigeria offered at auction in London gives some idea of the extent of the commercial enterprises that have been worked up by these Germans:

The property of various well-known businesses including Gl. Gafver, Witt and Busch, Deutsch Kamerun Gesellschaft, German West African Trading Company, Bey and Zimmer and L. Pagenstecher and Company, general import and export merchants. J. W. Jackel and Paul Meyer, commission agents. Woermann Linie, steamship agents, and Niger-Benue, Gesellschaft, River Transport Company.

The fruits of these years of effort are lost to the industrious Germans by the mad, greedy act of their country and their country's ruler. So also, the great world trade that the clever business men of Germany had developed is gone. The work of half a century has been sacrificed on the altar of greed. These Germans, for the most part, were in sympathy with the move taken two years ago by their war lords because victory would have given more of the world's business to them. But instead of victory there is defeat for Germany, and instead of further gain there is only total loss for the German business interests.

Canadians who still take pride to themselves that Canada came "to the assistance of the motherland," might get another point of view by contemplating a reversal of the fortunes of war and substituting Canada for Nigeria.—Ottawa Free Press.

THE LESSONS OF THE CANADA WAR LOAN

The over subscription of the war loan indicates determination to bring the war to a successful conclusion. It is not a mandate to the government to become reckless spenders. One or two of the federal cabinet ministers at Ottawa appreciate the necessity of thrift and economy on the part of governments and people. Other ministers, who in various ways are doing considerable harm to the prestige and life of the present Dominion government, may regard the oversubscription of the loan as additional fuel for the fire of parsonage and polite corruption. Canadians will subscribe war loans freely and so long as their governments practice the economy and clean politics they preach.

The result of the loan not only enhances Canadian credit in the international money markets, but it also gives the people of Canada a greater measure of financial self-reliance. The country knows now that it is capable of doing a little lending, besides a lot of borrowing. An achievement which means the subscription of two dollars for every one of the $100,000,000 asked by the government, is notable. Whether the citizens at large realize this, it is difficult to gather. The fact that $200,000,000 have been subscribed was given less space and a poorer position in our daily press than a murder or a divorce story would get at any time.

With the $300,000,000 subscribed through the two war loans, the per capita subscription is approximately $48. While a number of small investors subscribed to the loan, the rank and file have yet to be reached. If $48 per capita instead of $43, were subscribed to war loans—and that should not be a difficult task — that would be equal to a further $300,000,000 of war loans. Considering in addition our facilities for raising funds in the United States, the hope is reasonable that the war will have ceased before we have to raise $900,000,000 more of war loans.—Monetary Times.

Paper dust exploded with fatal results when workmen carried lighted lanterns into a room filled with it in a paper tube factory in France.

Sub. Lieut. H. R. H. Prince Albert.—Second son of King George, who has been promoted to Sub. Lieutenant in His Majesty's Navy. He is 21 years of age and a midshipman of the Royal Navy [illegible]. He has [illegible] since the outbreak of war.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lines. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

EXHIBITION NOTICES

There were no practical exhibits of agricultural implements or machinery at the Keene Fair—no cream separators, ploughs, pumps, engines' or mills; but merchants from Peterborough and automobile dealers sent interesting exhibits which were worthy of extended notice.

S. F. REDMOND'S HERD OF DURHAM CATTLE.

The most interesting stock show on the grounds was the fine herd of thorough-bred Durhams, by Mr. S. F. Redmond, of "Elm Grove" Farm, Lot 28, in the 12th Concession of Otonabee.

Altogether there were ten specimens of fine careful breeding and feeding, all of whom were much admired by the hundreds of visitors at the Fair. Stock men present who inspected the herd, admired the skill and care which the animals showed.

Mr. Redmond's specialty is beef cattle, and his collection at the Fair showed many points of excellence. They are his favourite breeds. In vitality, they are equal, if not superior to any other breed. Mr. Redmond's cows are also good milk producers. Almost any of his cows are profitable with milk prices at a war level, but when normal prices are restored the man who derives a profit from his herd will be the one who appreciates the value of the pure bred sire.

Mr. Redmond carried off 1st and 2nd prizes for aged cows; 1st prize for two-year-old heifer; 1st prize for yearling heifer; 1st and 2nd prize for yearling calves; and 1st for bull calf. In beef grades he took the 1st prize for heifer calf, and won the special prize offered by Mr. G. T. Galt, of Keene, for 25 lbs. of calf meal.

In Class L Sheep, Mr. Redmond's pen of Shropshire Downs was awarded 1st prize for aged ram; 1st and 3rd for aged ewes; 1st for shearling ewes, and 1st and 2nd for live lambs.

GRAFTON & CO.'S CLOTHING DISPLAY.

These chilly evenings and mornings, reminding men of their overcoat needs, gave a special interest to the new shapes and makes of overcoats, shown in Grafton's exhibit. Comfortable top coats at $10 and up to $30, $20 and $25, were on view in heavy warmth-giving fabrics.

In this display was also featured some seasonable examples of the trend of suit styles for fall and winter wear. In the centre of the exhibit were shown smart looking young men's suits after the English model. Men's suits with the fashionable short coat; about 29 or 30 inches long. This was a type of the newest out for smart dressers this season. Other suit specials were shown at $10, $12, $14, $16 and $18, which in point of quality, value and fashionable fabrics will be appreciated by those who admire a well dressed, manly figure.

Boys' cute and attractive suits were also shown—a two-piece khaki coloured outfit and a khaki overcoat being samples of the latest snappy effects. The samples of boys' military clothing were much admired for their smart proportions and the marked low cost proved that a house that can produce an article at the lowest cost can sell it at the lowest price.

Grafton's exhibit occupied a prominent position on the grounds, presenting an attractive front, with its coloured bulletins, and surmounted with scores of flags floating in the breeze. During the day several balloons were sent up from the Grafton exhibit, which were watched by the hundreds until they sailed away out of sight.

The contest for the Grafton & Co.'s three special prizes, which they have offered at all Peterborough Fairs for nearly a quarter of a century, was again keenly contested. The names of the winners of the three best teams of Farmers Agricultural or General Purpose Horses will be found in the list of prize awards.

THE NEW McLAUGHLIN FOUR.

The McLaughlin-Buick Four touring car D-4-36 is the answer to the demand for a car without extravagancy or superfluities at a small investment, and with low running expenses.

This new McLaughlin model was shown on the Fair grounds by Mr. Andrew Brown of Peterborough, whose garage is located at 182 Hunter street. It caught the eye of hundreds who were quick to discern the fine new body lines and finish of the car, and enquirers were plenty.

The new McLaughlin Four is put on the market at a price made possible only by the enormous production of the big company in Oshawa, the price named being $896. It is equipped with the famous McLaughlin-Buick valve-in-head motor, has 36 horse power, 106 in. wheel base; 4 in. tires; with Delco electric starting and lighting system; and has genuine leather upholstering. Motor men say that this new car is destined to win immediate approval. All specially interested should get the full specifications from Mr. Brown at his office, Hunter street.

NOVEL DISPLAY OF CLOTHING BY "OAK HALL," PETERBOROUGH.

In their handsome palisse marquee, the "Oak Hall" Clothiers Store, 499 George street, Peterborough, made a very creditable display of men's and boys' fall and winter suits, overcoats, caps, sweaters, etc. The patterns were shown in a tastily arranged fashion and ticketed at regular selling prices. The materials in the suits were Canadian and English tweeds, selected with special care and made up for the "Oak Hall" regular trade. Carefully tailored single breasted men's sack suits, with soft roll lapels, and either two or three buttons, with good hair linings, were shown at $10, $12.50 and $15.00 and $18.00 that certainly looked like extra good values when compared with prices hitherto known to good dressers.

This exhibit was visited by many of the young men of the neighborhood, as all had to pass by it on entering the grounds. In the vicinity of the Fair and throughout the grounds "Oak Hall" attractive announcements loomed up conspicuously. Visitors would always find [illegible] and always kept busy attending to his assistant [illegible] was industriously circulating "Oak Hall" advertising.

THE CHEVROLET MOTOR CAR "THOROUGHBRED."

A "thoroughbred" model of the Four-ninety Touring car was shown on the grounds by the proprietors of The Manning Garage. Messrs. Bert Manning and Bert Howson, who are the active Peterborough dealers for the complete line of Chevrolet cars. A study of the exclusive features of this car reveals a capacity for splendid service. It is a powerful, quiet running machine, with a motor of the vale-in-head type. Not a few in criticizing this car, wondered how it is possible to give the exclusive features it possesses at so low a price. But the public commenced buying the Chevrolet, and its performances have elicited much favourable approval and now there has sprung up a strong demand for the Chevrolet. For motorists who want more power and better service this car is worthy of special attention.

Important to all Chevrolet owners is the fact that all dealers in Chevrolet cars must carry a stock of parts in order to give proper service. The Manning Garage on Water street is fully equipped with parts and supplies for this car, so that prompt service is always assured.

THE UNIVERSAL CAR.

The countryside that attended the Keene Fair gave a cordial reception to the representatives of the Ford motor car who made another good impression there. Mr. Joseph J. Duffus of the Duffus Garage, 195 Simcoe street, Peterborough had sent this expert salesman on to make a practical demonstration of the Universal car, in the very heart of of the township, where he was born. And as the exhibit was made by an Otonabee boy "to the manor born," who had to his credit the title of having reached the high water-mark as a Ford care salesman, the rally of his friends was hearty and encouraging. The handsome Ford Touring Car model shown was constantly surrounded by eager interested visitors. The astonishingly high favour of the Ford is only equalled by its astonishingly low price. And that's why the public are demanding such an enormous quantity of new Fords this year. Hill or dale, good roads or bad, the Ford finds it easy work. It claims to do everything that other cars, much higher in price can do. The hills on the road to Keene gave it a good chance to show its mettle, and the "pep" and "ginger" it displayed made a fine demonstration of its work on Fair Day.

This smart and economical "Universal car" combines the popular features of a handy inexpensive easy driven machine, and its simplicity is one of the big reasons why it is the car for the farmers.

"Buy a Ford and leave the balance in the bank" is one of the strongest appeals made on behalf of this car. Just the other day it sold a Ford to a lady who had decided to buy a more expensive car. And the occupation of this new field of selling Fords at agricultural fairs means the winning of new customers by the good advertising they get.

FORMERLY RESIDED IN PETERBORO'

Mr. T. P. Connor referred to in the appended item, was formerly superintendent of the Canadian Cordage plant, which is now occupied by the Peterborough Metal Products Co. The following from the Waupun "Leader," Wisconsin, U.S.A.:

Waupun may have two hemp cleaning plants to care for this season's crop. The need of such a plant has been urgent for some time, and the success of the local hemp industry depends on a better means of cleaning the crop. The Hemp Growers' Association has been figuring with various concerns to induce them to put in a cleaning plant.

"We were told last week by one of the officers of the Association that in all probability the International Harvester Co. would put in a plant here. If that company does not put in a plant, the Hemp Growers' Association will build a small plant in or near the city to take care of the product of its members for this year.

John Connor of Boston, who has visited this section at various times to study the hemp industry, and who is an expert on fibres of various kinds, has been spending the past ten days here. He announced last week that he had decided to locate hemp cleaning plants here and at Brandon, and that machinery for the plants had been ordered. He will work independent of the Growers' Association, buying the hemp by the acre, or at so much a ton delivered in the straw or for the fibre produced. He has been looking over several locations in the city, and will have a definite announcement to make later.

The trust on sisal and its high price will effect materially the price of binding twine, for that fiber is the most used in twine. This is going to cause a great increase in the acreage of American hemp raised and insure good prices, as hemp will undoubtedly be used more and more in binding twine. The International Harvester Co and other large producers are therefore much interested in hemp farming.

John Connor, who is figuring on putting in the plant here, is a brother of T. P. Connor, superintendent of the prison twine plant and has been a guest at the home of his brother while.

The best method of selecting seed corn, and the one which will pay farmers for their trouble, is to select the ears from the stalks of corn as they stand in the field.

The Rhode Island Experiment Station says that R. I. Red Clover is found in many old fields of that State. The seed is now valuable and in good demand, and will give quite an income to those who can harvest it.

Try This If You Have Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every singe sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

SCOTTISH SOLDIER INVENTS WONDER OF ALL SURGERY

Marvelous Results of Medical Corps Man's Idea Being Achieved.

LONDON, Oct. 3.—The British Medical Journal announces that a remarkable scientific discovery is now on trial at one of the casualty clearing stations in France.

Shows Details of Organs.

By means of this discovery it is possible in broad daylight to obtain detailed pictures of any organ or body, brain, liver, kidney and spleen, and to see at a glance by what gross lesions they are affected. Thus it is possible to see blood vessels in the brain, to observe a blood clot in that organ; to detect abscesses in the liver, and wounds of cuts in any organ. In one case a concretion in the appendix was seen clearly when the picture was complete.

"Human" Electricity Used.

The miracle is achieved by utilizing the currents of electricity which the body is believed to generate. Two electrodes, each ending in a perforated plate of zinc wire screen, are employed. These are connected with batteries in the ordinary way, but are not placed in contact with the patient's body. One screen stands on a pedestal in a vertical position near the patient. The other is hung horizontally at right angles to the first one. In this way any electrical field coming from the first screen is always at right angles to that of the second.

The patient is placed with the part to be examined quite close to the first screen and directly under, but at a distance from the second. The current is turned on. Then the third electrical element, the current from the patient's new organs, is released.

"The inventors," says the British Medical Journal, "believes the results are primarily due to the fact that the process interposes between two alternating electric fields of equal strength and at the precise point where they meet a third electric field, whose faculative potential force is thus released and can be converted into dynamite power."

Shows Living Tissues.

The third field is made to operate a sensitive needle, which works upon a revolving cylinder carrying a waxed paper, tapping out little holes in the wax, and when later the wax is held up to the light a diagram is seen which "precisely resembles the outlines of the living tissues, lying vertically below the second screen.

This diagram can be converted into an ordinary photograph by processes familiar to the applied arts. The actual finished photographs are remarkable, and show bloodvessels in the brain in detail, also bone, but not the actual brain substance. In other words differences, such as diseased areas, are shown

Works While Life Lasts.

The apparatus works as long as the body is alive and even until molecular death has occurred. After that it does not work.

The inventor is James Shearer, a Scotchman, aged 20, a sergeant in the medical corps and working at the casualty clearing station.

IF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER BOTHER

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and Bladder weakness result from uric acid, says a noted authority. The kidneys filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it often remains to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation as the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief, two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread, the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in avoiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it, because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying, and sometimes very painful, this is really one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast, continue this for two or three days. This will neutralize the acids in the urine so it no longer is a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs which then act normally again.

RUPTURE

Not one in a thousand cases of Hernia, commonly called Rupture, is caused by a tear or break. Knowing the true cause of rupture enabled me to perfect a series of inventions, for which I have been granted six patents by the government, the first one dated Jan. 19, 1884; last dated April 9, 1907. During these thirty years hundreds of people ranging in age from three weeks to eighty-six years have been cured by my appliances. I have the evidence. Therefore no matter how large your rupture is, or how long you have had it, I ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEE THAT YOU WILL NOT FIND IT NECESSARY TO BUY ANY MORE TRUSSES. The very fact that people come to me from Toronto, Montreal, New York and other cities should prompt the readers to INVESTIGATE THE MERITS OF MY INVENTION.

TO PARENTS

I guarantee my invention to cure your little infants and children.

SEPARATE SKIRTS

Captivating With Their Freshly Acquired Smartness

FASHION has wisely declared in favor of the Separate Skirt and graciously extended singular little touches to accentuate the seasons mode.

STRIKING but pleasing checks and stripes, others quieter and suitable for the conservative dresser and their indistinct patterns might be described as invisible.

ONE particularly attractive model in navy blue, is a complete circular of box pleats of about 2 ins. in width and when spread reveals a series of narrow white stripes, giving a most novel and swagger effect.

THE styles are here with no stint in numbers, no lack of novelty and no dirth of plain materials for the woman who is conservative in her tastes. We invite you to inspect this new array of skirts that we now present.

HASTINGS BOY HAS SUCCUMBED TO WOUNDS

HASTINGS, Oct. 4.— The funeral of the late Mr. J. McMillen, who passed away in the Nicholls hospital, Peterborough, was held here on Thursday afternoon from the residence of his brother to the Norwood cemetery and was under the direction of the Foresters and Orangemen.

Our citizens generally were sorry to learn that Lance Corporal McWharrie, who last week was reported seriously wounded, had succumbed to his injuries and official notice was received by his wife during the week.

In memory of the deceased a service was held on Sunday evening in the Presbyterian church under the auspices of the Orangemen and Foresters, of which he had been a faithful member. Rev. D. A. Thomson delivered an excellent address and extended the united sympathy of the entire community to the bereaved widow and children, who have the consolation of knowing that he died nobly for the empire, of which he was a worthy citizen.

At the close of the church services another gathering of a civic nature was held in the town hall, and was very largely attended. On the platform, besides the reeve, Mr. W. Fowlds, were Revs. Fr. Bretherton, D. A. Thomson, Isaac Snell, Fr. J. Powers and Capt. Everett Birdsall.

A large number of representative citizens were present and the assembly was a credit to the town.

Rev. Isaac Snell was in Westwood on Tuesday officiating at the marriage of Miss Vida Faux, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Faux, to Mr. Ross Lobb, also of Westwood. About 80 guests were present and a number of valuable gifts were presented to the bride, among which was a $100 cheque from her father.

After a sumptuous repast had been partaken of the young couple, accompanied by some friends, motored to Norwood and left by C.P.R. for a short honeymoon trip, the bride travelling in a tailored suit of midnight blue with hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. Lobb are widely known and a host of friends extent congratulations, accompanied by the hope that to them may come every happiness and a long life of connubial bliss.

The September meeting of the Ladies' Aid, in connection with the Methodist church, was held on Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Malcolm Baker. The officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Mrs. Jas. Buck, president; Mrs. E. Wilcox, vice-president; Mrs. B. F. Doxsee, secretary; Mrs. M. Baker, treasurer. After the business was disposed of the hostess served luncheon and a pleasant time was spent in social intercourse.

Growing Girl's Friends Exert Great Influence

It is interesting to observe the various ways in which young girls are affected by their first claims to maturity. The girl between fourteen and eighteen is passing through a stage where for the first time she sees the boys of her acquaintance not as chums and pals, but as possible beaux. She sees herself for the first time not as a tomboy and a playmate to her boy friends, but as the possible recipient of masculine admiration.

The girl at this period very often becomes affected with any one of a score of what might be called mannerisms, for lack of a better word. From being a child absolutely indifferent to her own appearance she becomes supremely conscious of her own charm or lack of charm; she is apt to become either very shy or rather bold. But she is seldom her own natural self during these first years of her adolescence.

What a pity it is that girls cannot grow right from childhood to womanhood without that in-between period of supreme self-consciousness. By the time they reach twenty they have become used to the new conditions and are once more their own selves, free from the little affectations which spell so many such young girls.

DIFFICULT PERIOD.

But the most unfortunate part is that this period is almost bound to come, sooner or later, no matter what the girl's mother can do to prevent it. The mother may try to keep her daughter a child as long as possible but that is only putting off the evil day. If the girl is kept in short frocks, with her hair abrad, if she is kept in a strict girls' school, where she never sees a boy until she is past seventeen, it simply means as a rule that the period of self-consciousness has been postponed and will attack her just about the time when she ought to be coming out of it.

Not all girls are affected this way. Fortunately a great many come through this difficult period without a touch of self-consciousness to spoil their sweet girlishness. These are the girls with very wise mothers, who study every thought in their children's minds, who allow no disquieting, upsetting influences to gain possession.

But the vast majority of girls go through at least a year of unnatural self-consciousness. They are quiet free from constraint when they are with other girls but when they meet boys of their own age they become shy, or stiff or awkward. They are often covered with blushes at a sudden word.

It seems as if this uncomfortable period might be more or less avoided if the mother could hit on just the right course of action. The trouble is that no two mothers agree upon what is the right course. Some think it is the best policy to keep their girls in boarding school until they are somewhat grown up. Others say that it is much better to let the girls go right through the public schools, seeing the boys constantly with whom they have been friends since childhood.

And the latter seems more reasonable if a wise mother is guiding the home life of the girl. To let the daughter keep right on meeting her childhood's pals in school should lead to no self-consciousness if her mother has a sensible head.

FOLLOW OTHERS' EXAMPLE.

Mothers, keep your eye on your growing daughter's girl friends, not so much on her masculine acquaintances. If she is going with girls who are flirtatious and sentimental, nothing you can do will prevent your child becoming self consciousness. But if her girl friends are sensible, well balanced girls, who look on their boy acquaintances in just the same friendly light in which they consider their feminine chums, she will be all right.

See to it that your growing girl daughter has plenty of boy friends, and she will be safe. It is only when the young girl has a chance to grow sentimental and romantic about one, that danger lurks. If your girl is accustomed to merry evenings with a crowd of young persons of both sexes about her, she will feel no interest in a tete-a-tete.

It is a pity that your daughter should become self-conscious about her own personal charm or lack of charm, for it spoils the sweetness of her girlishness. But if you see that she has the right kind of friends of both sexes she may come through this difficult period unscathed.

Peterborough Choral Society And the "Messiah"

The above society intends resuming its practices next Tuesday evening, 10th October, in the Collegiate Hall at 8 o'clock.

As announced last season, it is intended to render Handel's great oratorio, "The Messiah" annually on a date as near Christmas Day as possible.

The conductor, Mr. John Allan, and the executive, desire that this yearly rendering of this glorious and inspiring work will become recognized by the citizens of Peterborough as an indispensable part of the Christmas season's celebrations and that all will feel that the Christmas season without a rendering of "The Messiah" is incomplete. That feeling already prevails in some cities in Canada, but throughout the length and breadth of Britain, every city, town, and even village possessing a choral society regards its work as only half done if the annual performance of the Messiah is not given.

There are many men and women in Britain whose remaining years now are but few, but who proudly boast of having attended fifty or sixty annual performances of the "Messiah."

Lloyd George, the Minister of War, speaking last month at the Welsh "Eisteddfod," said "By all means let the people sing, even in this time of sorrow and strain keep alive the soul of music." When the day of war is over, music the universal language will be one of the links in the chain of common interests amongst the warring nations which will help to bind together the aching hearts, and though perhaps never to forget, will some day aid us to forgive those who brought upon us all the horror and cruelty of the present days.

It is hoped that all the former members will be present promptly on Tuesday evening.

A very cordial invitation is extended to all singers, if members of any choir or not, as the only requirements asked for are the possession of a voice and the ability to read music even if only in a small degree.

Go To Millbrook Fair On Friday, Oct. 6th

The officers and directors of Millbrook Central Exhibition take pleasure in announcing the fact that for this year's show the programme for your entertainment has been very much improved. The judging rings have been re-arranged, and the judging of driving horses, etc., and driving competitions may now be more comfortably viewed from the grand stand. Some good horse racing may be expected, as two races are on the programme, a free for all and a 2.30 class. Many of the prize-winning horses that have been at the other fairs will be exhibited at Millbrook. Special reduced fares on railways, good going on the 4th and returning on 7th Oct. A special train for the convenience of those from Peterborough and vicinity will leave Millbrook 7.30, Friday evening, Oct. 6th. The Peterborough S. A. Brass Band is to furnish music on the grounds. 2d-

STUDENTS REMANDED

MONTREAL, Oct. 5.—The four students arrested in yesterday's riot were arraigned in the Records' Court on charges of damaging property and disturbing the peace and insulting the police. They pleaded not guilty and were remanded to Oct. 12.

Freight Movement Activity

When we see a "double header" train on the Grand Trunk we nearly always associate it with a half mile string of grain cars. But not all of us know that every evening at about half past seven, a double header pulls out from Peterborough for the main line at Port Hope, drawing from 40 to 45 cars heavily laden with productions of our munition factories and products of the Quaker Oats. This helps us realize how largely local prosperity and business activity are helped by the demands of the war.

SEES IMPROVEMENT IN THE CITY

Mr. Wm. Barrie, of Prince Rupert, B.C., is in the city on a visit to his mother. It is seven years since Mr. Barrie has been in Peterborough, and he notices particularly the much-improved appearance of the city. He is in the furniture and upholstering business in Prince Rupert, and states that business is a little quiet on account of the fact that there are no manufacturing plants of any kind in the city. The tourist traffic from the United States is very heavy this year.

JOHN BARRYMORE AT THE EMPIRE

"The Lost Bridegroom," a Stirring, Humourous Photo-play to Be Seen To-night

John Barrymore, the popular star, who since his appearance on the screen has played Balkan princes, South American dictators, and assorted American characters, but never before has been presented in the role of a crook, adds this to his many other photoplay adventures in the Famous Players Film Company's production, "The Lost Bridegroom," written expressly for Mr. Barrymore by Willard Mack, author of "Kick In." This paramount picture is one of the most laughable and yet thrilling stories possible to conceive. In the role of a young society favorite who is struck on the head, thereby losing his memory, becomes a thief, and attempts to rob the house of his fiancee, John Barrymore has an unsurpassable opportunity for the unlimited expression of his comic and dramatic abilities. Empire Theatre, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

DR. HELEN MACMURCHY'S LECTURE TO-MORROW

Dr. Helen MacMurchy, who lectures here on Friday evening, is well known in Peterborough as a forceful and interesting speaker. Being a graduate of Toronto University in Medicine, she has had the unique honour of being the only woman physician to be appointed to the staff of the Toronto General Hospital. Later she was appointed physical inspector of the Toronto schools, this being the first time a woman was given this position and, needless to say, Dr. MacMurchy gave a good account of herself while she held this position. Since then Dr. MacMurchy has devoted all her time to the study of mental defectives, and she now holds a government position as inspector of children's asylums and institutions.

She meets many interesting and pathetic cases in her travels about the country, and it is of these that she is coming to tell us on Friday evening.

Little Facts Worth Remembering By Busy Housewives

A straight wide-mouthed pitcher is excellent for beating eggs in.

White potatoes or onions will last longer if kept in a wire basket.

When one undergarment of a set wears out save it to patch the others.

Put a pinch of salt in the starch. It will prevent the irons from sticking.

To make a meringue tender add a tablespoonful of ice water before beating it.

Never hurry with the family mending. It is not worth doing unless it is done well.

An iron stand which can be fastened to the ironing board is a great help on ironing day.

A housewife's apron should always have huge pockets. She will find their uses manifold.

Don't try to cook a small quantity of anything in a fireless cooker, for the food will not retain the heat.

White silk or satin slightly soiled may be cleaned by dusting with powdered magnesia and then brushing out.

To remove rust from steel, cover it with sweet oil and let it remain covered.

Do not allow the top of the range to become red hot. It will cause it to warp, and a red hot stove always means a cool oven.

To remove stains from knife handles and also to keep the ivory from turning yellow, rub the handles well with a cut lemon; afterwards wash well in soap and water and dry immediately. This removes the stains, and keeps the ivory a good color.

The daily meal should be set with as much care for one member of the household as for the entire family, else the servants will grow careless.

If the flatirons are put away for some time they should be rubbed on the bottom, when slightly warm, with a mixture of vaseline and sweet oil.

Children love to be in the kitchen and they should be allowed to come in, for in this way they unconsciously learn much about foods and their preparation.

Stove polish when mixed with turpentine and applied in the usual manner, is thicker, more glossy and more durable than when mixed with any other liquid. The turpentine prevents rust.

Silver forks and spoons that are not in everyday use can be kept ready for the table by wrapping them in waxed paper. With a little care one sheet will suffice to wrap a dozen spoons. If the wrapped packages are kept in a pasteboard box as free as possible from the air the silver will retain its brightness for many months.

If a garment is spotted by the rain it may often be freshened by laying a damp cloth over the article and steaming it.

If wine is spilled on the tablecloth, cover with salt at once and let it stand for a few minutes; then rinse in cold water.

Tea grounds mixed with salt and then sprinkled on the carpets, will brighten and clean them wonderfully.

The whole village is now in the hands of the British, who are now consolidating their positions. The Bulgars suffered heavily in the recent fighting.

LONDON, October 5.—British artillery played upon moving German infantry columns north of Schwaben redoubt last night, inflicting many casualties, but aside from intermittent shelling there was no activity north of the Somme. General Haig reported this afternoon a successful raid by the British infantry near Vimy. A German attack near St. Eloi failed.

BERLIN, October 5.—British gains north of the Somme were admitted by the War Office this afternoon, but it was announced that the British were defeated with severe losses at one point. The French gained some German trenches between Fregicourt and Rancourt.

Five thousand men are wanted, and these are to be placed at the disposal of the British Navy, but will be paid Canadian rates of pay from the Canadian war fund. Reserve Firemen Called Out When Aid Went To Lindsay

Lindsay's S. O. S. call was caught up by the Fire Department vigilants at 12.45 o'clock this afternoon, and sharp at 2 o'clock the fire engine, loaded on a G. T. R. flat car, pulled away from the local yard. It was in charge of Conductor Fred Horner and Eddie McConnell was at the throttle. Chief Howard, with [illegible] men, including Billy Lytle and [illegible] volunteers, formed the reinforcements. The special met a double header at Murray street, and for remainder of the run had a clear track.

It was expected that they would make the trip within half an hour. [illegible] speeded the railroad officials were ready. [illegible] time Chief Howard sent out a call for his reserves, and had fourteen men on duty in the hall when the train left. They came from the C. G. E. Works, the De Laval plant, the Quaker Oats, and other places of employment, assisted in loading the engine and then retired to the front trenches at the fire hall waiting for the first sound of the alarm bell at the station. These volunteers backed in the trucks at the station and otherwise performed the work of the regular staff, some of whom remained with them. At a first glance one wondered what the civilians were doing around the hall and the appearance of Gene Hurtubise, in overalls, suggested that the Department had fallen upon the tender mercies of a posse of plumbers. But these were reserves whose voluntary assistance made possible the sending of a detachment to Lindsay.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE WOMEN'S ART ASSOCIATION

At the meeting of the Peterborough branch of the Women's Art Association of Canada, held on Tuesday evening, the following annual report for [illegible] was read by the recording secretary, Miss Amy K. Bennet:

During the current year war conditions and the accompanying patriotic activities have naturally absorbed the attention of our members to such an extent that many usual activities, such as exhibitions and lectures, have had to give way to one side. However, one important branch of our work [illegible] this year, namely, the donation of prizes at the Public school [illegible] and also prizes at the Industrial Fair. This year the school [illegible] took in January, six [illegible] and eighteen [illegible] exhibition of drawings [illegible] was larger than [illegible] the improvement in the [illegible] work was noticeable. [illegible] competition at the Industrial Fair there was but one entry, and it was not considered worthy of the $3 prize which was awarded.

A committee of members of the Association took charge of the Art Department in connection with the Fair, hanging the pictures and acting as judges.

We have to thank Mr. and Mrs. Gliddon for a delightful Christmas musical held in December in the Conservatory Hall.

We record with regret the removal from town of one of our most active and enthusiastic members, Mrs. Patmore, [illegible] her future home in [illegible]

Voice of the People

Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—It was with surprise that I read in your last evening's paper that on and after the 15th of October any grocer selling a loaf of bread to a hungry person after 7 p.m. was liable to 6 months in prison or fine of fifty dollars and costs to be followed up by distress and sale of the goods in default, etc., etc.

It appeared to me and to many others that we are drifting back to the dark days, and to the days of feudism and slavery—with all the clear light and advanced civilization that we possess, it seems that the age is departing from the faith once delivered to the saints. I see this in my experiences, as a local preacher for over thirty years travelling the country visiting the Jail and Protestant Home. We talk about the United States bowing down to the god of mammon, but if we look nearer home we find a great number of people lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God, our churches and prayer meetings prove this to be true; and if this be the standard of the nation how can we expect that we shall have liberal laws or laws wisely administered. Many of the people of the city are indignant over this by law and say that it is an injustice to them and a number of the grocers that signed the petition would not have done it if they had been fully aware of the provisions of the by-law. They think it was unfair to rush a by-law through the council without first publishing it so that the merchants would know what the by-law meant they see now the injustice which they will have to suffer. Sometimes laws like the nightsoil by-law have to be amended and I think this one who will have to be changed a little or reconsidered. It would be a blot on the laws of a free country like Canada to send a person to jail because he supplied some groceries to a needy person after 7 o'clock; it would be as bad as happened in an English court some years since, when the magistrate sentenced a girl of twelve to one week in prison for taking a cabbage out of a neighbour's garden. In the old country we used to call this Justice, Justice? I would again reiterate what I said in a former letter that I cannot see any necessity for such a by-law. If they want to close at 7 o'clock no one hinders them, they are at perfect liberty to do so, and why should others be compelled to do the same against their will. There is no fair spirit of liberty, such as I understand, in coercing law abiding—large tax paying citizens—to obey a law that means financial and other loss to them, when times demand that we put every iron into the fire to help to meet the ever increasing demands that are being made upon us. Yours truly.

$1,500 IS FIGURE AIMED AT FOR THE TAG DAY EFFORT

So rather than make a list that would be incomplete, the young ladies will accept a general acknowledgment of service to come. They will be found and seen on the street, affable, entreating, beguiling in a feminine way the reluctant passer, if he prove to hesitate. There are no bargains on Tag Day. One price to all. And this broad and comprehensive business rule may apply, that one may not gain a tag without paying, but can pay for as many as desired and not take the tag. Value received every time.

One or two belated announcements consequent on a change in stations and appointments. Mrs. A. E. Micks and Mrs. Hackett will have charge of the lines in East City during the morning. Mrs. (Dr.) Robinson will join Mrs. Basil Hall at the Grand Trunk Station. There may be other changes and additions, and such as are effected during Friday will be, if possible, announced.

The management of the Street Railway is very good. As in former years, free transportation is accorded to the vendors of tags. So the young ladies may climb on and off cars without even waiting to bestow a smile or a wink on the conductor. For the day his authority to collect such fares is abrogated. One day, only, in the year. Motor car owners will do a service in extending a lift to any selling on the outskirts of the city. No one knows where to strike a sell. And a good many scattering ten cent pieces can be picked up in what we call the suburbs. In fact our agricultural friends might well be waylaid as they drive into the city and each mulcted to a respectable sum. The farthing friend has just as good perception of what is helpful as the resident of the city.

Fire, Is Under Control.

A report received at three-thirty o'clock this afternoon states that the fire while still raging fiercely in the cold storage section of the plant, is practically under control. Unless the wind changes the fire will hardly spread to other sections of the town. Chief Howard, of Peterborough, arrived in Lindsay with one fire engine, a hose waggon and eight men. He left Peterborough at five minutes after two and arrived in Lindsay at two-thirty o'clock. Two streams of hose from the engine are playing on the fire.

HOUSES TO RENT ARE GETTING SCARCE

The Surplus of Houses to Rent a Year Ago About Exhausted

A talk on both sides of the question of renting a house—that is with a party who wishes to get one and a real estate man whose business is to let them—will elicit the information that empty houses are getting very scarce.

For the past two years or more it has been cheaper to rent a house than to own one and keep it in repair, and on this account very few houses have been built. In talking the matter over with an owner of several houses, he stated that from all the information he could gather, rents were bound to go up. With high taxes and low rents many properties were not paying 4 per cent. on the money invested. This does not begin to make it attractive for an investor to put his money into real estate. He advised any one having the opportunity to get into a satisfactory house at a reasonable rent to close the bargain at once.

CONVENTION OF CITY TEACHERS IN SESSION

Papers Read This Morning By Miss Rush and Miss Malone

The Public and Separate school teachers of the city met in convention this morning in the assembly room at the Public Library. Miss Lillian Rush, of the South Central school, read an interesting paper on the new Kindergarten primary course. She pointed out that it is intended to form a connecting link between the Kindergarten and the primary grades. She outlined the course in an interesting manner, showing that it will retain the best features of the Kindergarten and will include introductory primary work as well.

Miss Malone of the Separate school staff read a paper on "Character Development of the Child." This paper aroused great interest. Miss Malone particularly emphasized the teacher's influence upon the child and pointed out the necessity of the teacher being capable, scholarly and conscientious.

The evening session to-night will be held in the assembly room of the Collegiate Institute and will be a joint meeting of the city and county teachers. It will be addressed by Rev. Mr. Mitchell of St. Andrew's church. There will be no admission fee, and all citizens are welcome.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Dan Brouthers Delves Into Dim Past And Talks of Old Baseball Stars

Dan Brouthers, who was one of the heaviest batsmen in the country back in the old days when he played first base for the Buffalo, Detroit, Boston, Brooklyn and Baltimore clubs now is in the employ of the New York National League club as night watchman of the Polo grounds. He is a Giant rooter and one of John McGraw's oldest friends. Brouthers once acted as scout for the Giants, and received credit for digging up such players as Fred Merkle, Larry Doyle and Charlie Herzog. McGraw would not purchase these players until Brouthers had inspected them with his eagle eye. Brouthers is still a student of the national game, and for that reason his views may be interesting to the fans.

Brouthers branched out as a big hitter while playing first base for the Buffalo National league team in 1881. Five years later he was sold to the Detroit club with the other members of the famous big four—Hardie Richardson, Jack Rowe and Deacon White. The Detroits won the championship in 1887, also the world's series with Charlie Comiskey's St. Louis Browns. The Boston club, owned by Soden, Conant and Billings, purchased the release of Brouthers, Richardson, Bennett and Charley Gannel from the Detroits in 1889, but the Giants, backed by Buck Ewing, finished on top with the Beaneaters in second place. Brouthers went over to the Boston Brotherhood club in 1890 and played with Boston American Association club in 1891. He was a member of the Brooklyn team in 1892 and 1893, after which he played first base for the champion Baltimore Orioles in 1894, winding up his career with the Phillies in 1896.

ALWAYS BATTED IN THE .300 CLASS.

In batting Brouthers never had an average below .300. He led the National league in 1882 and 1883, was second in 1885, third in 1886, second in 1887, and again carried off the honours in 1889 and 1892. The big fellow probably made more home runs and three baggers during his career than any other player. He was a terror to all pitchers and old timers still insist that his terrific slugging never has been excelled, even by the great Tris Speaker.

"Who, in your opinion, was the best pitcher you ever saw?" Brouthers was asked the other day.

"Matheweon was a wonder and had the best idea of strategy," was the reply. "But Amos Rusie possessed the greatest natural skill. Rusie had the swiftest curve ball I ever looked at and his control was perfect. He seldom gave more than one or two bases on balls and he frequently struck out eight or ten men. But Rusie didn't pay much attention to business. John Clarkson was a master pitcher and so was Tim Keefe.

"Anson dug up Clarkson back in 1887, when I played with the Detroits. Nearly all of us were left handed hitters and Clarkson seemed able to beat us regularly until Ned Hanlon, our captain, ordered us to hit at every ball Clarkson put over the plate, even if the count were three to nothing.

"I remember the day well. We were to play a double header with Chicago and the late A. G. Spalding offered $200 to Clarkson if he would beat us in both games. We took Hanlon's tip and as a result Clarkson was slaughtered. We made about twenty hits off him in each game and he didn't understand it at all. Keefe, unlike Rusie, used change of pace. He had a wonderful slow ball and studied the battery carefully. Charlie Radbourne of the Providence team was another great pitcher who used his head as well as his arm. Buffinton, who pitched for the Boston Association team in 1891, practically won the pennant by mixing a fast high ball with a slow curve when he kept low and on the corner of the plate.

PRAISES MODERN PITCHING STARS.

"I don't want to say that the old time pitchers were better than those of the present day. Alexander Johnson, Leonard, Rudolph, Cheney and many others I could name are high class boxmen. So was Joe McGinnity, Kid Nichols, Sadie McMahon, Cy Young, Bill Donovan, Ed. Walsh and others who have passed along. But when I was playing ball Rusie, Keefe, Clarkson and Radbourne all pitched with skill that I never shall forget. They would have been winners in the present fast company."

"What have you to say about heavy hitters?"

Brouthers smiled for a few moments and then assumed an inquiring look. He evidently didn't care to talk about himself. But he finally admitted that he used the hammer the pill as hard as the best of them, and that he made twenty-one home runs in a single season. "Anson was an educated hitter," continued Big Dan. "He knew what kind of balls to swing at, and he seldom hit the bad ones. If an umpire called a strike that wasn't over some part of the plate there was trouble. Isaac Ance always watched the ball closely after it left the pitcher's hand. I think that Hans Wagner is one of the greatest hitters the game has produced. The old fellow has been batting up near the top for a decade and look at him now! In the 300 class and playing the same remarkable game as shortstop! Speaker, Cobb, Chase, Daubert, Jackson, Robertson and Wheat are fine hitters. The old timers, with few exceptions, had nothing on them.

"I remember a home run I made off Columbus off Dad Clarke in 1901. The ball went over the right field fence and the newspaper said the next day that it was the longest drive ever made in that town. I was invited to visit the penitentiary before I left Columbus and while looking over the prisoners the warden said that a poor fellow named Blair, who had been sentenced to be hanged, wanted to speak to me. So we went to Blair's cell and found him reading over the baseball scores.

"Is this Mr. Brouthers who hit that ball over the fence yesterday?" asked the condemned man with a smile. 'Say, I want to congratulate you, sir! I wish I'd seen the hit!'

MIKE KELLY A TRICKY PLAYER

"Mike Kelly was a card," Brouthers went on. "He was a tricky player and he pulled some funny stunts. I was playing on the Boston team with him when he was the manager. One day in a close game an opposing player raised a high foul that Bennett, our catcher, couldn't reach. Kelly ran out from the bench, shouting to the umpire that he had taken Bennett out of the game right there, and caught the ball Kel. was putting on the mask to supplant Bennett when the umpire said he hadn't called the batter out.

"Kelly played another trick on Umpire Phil Powers and got away with it. He had a ball in the grass in right field during a game in Philadelphia. It was foggy, and when Sam Thompson hit the ball in play over the fence the umpire couldn't see where it went. Kelly picked up the hidden ball and threw it to the catcher in time to nail a runner who was on first when Thompson made his homer. Powers allowed the play and fined Thompson for kicking. Kelly also fooled Second Baseman Joe Quinn in another game. He picked up a potato in right field when a batter drove a three-bagger over his head and drove the spud to Quinn, who in a hurry relayed it to third base to head off the runner. But of course the potato broke when the third baseman caught it.

"Buck Ewing, without doubt, was the best catcher in my time, and I've never seen his equal. But Kelly, also a good backstop, had more nerve than Ewing. Bennett also was a star catcher, but his work was mechanical.

"Who is the best manager?" Why you can't take anything away from John McGraw, can you? He has accomplished wonders with the Giants since he took hold of them nearly fifteen years ago. Results count, and McGraw certainly has obtained them in New York. He has a wonderful team once more, thanks to his own judgment in selecting players, and it's a shame that the present big drive of the Giants started a trifle too late. "When I acted as scout for the Giants McGraw's instructions always were the same. 'Get me brains and speed!' he said, and that is why he has been successful. The Giants of to-day amply possess these qualities.

Pensions and The Patriotic Fund

The provision of the Pensions List, under which amounts paid to pensions to dependents of soldiers killed in service have been lately very materially increased as far as the widows are concerned.

Pensions to will be remembered are never paid quite well fixed circumstances as to dependency etc. Cases include pensions to wives and children of men married and who are living with their families at time of enlistment. Also to mothers of sons that latter the sole support of the mother, that is dependent on the son for a living and support. There may be a few special cases outside of these but subject to careful scrutiny and determination.

Since the casualty list began to accumulate in the cases of Canadian soldiers being killed in service the Patriotic Fund has shared in the responsibility of assisting the dependents until such time as the pension has been declared and payments actually made. Then the Fund ceases to make payments. With the growing number of cases in the last six months this procedure has entailed on the resources of the Fund a very serious responsibility. It has in fact been doing the work and disbursing moneys that should have been accruing from the pension funds. In many cases the pension has been delayed for a period of four months, the Board not being sufficiently organized. Now however, the work is sufficiently systemized that we may look for prompt adjustment.

Beginning with October 1st, the Patriotic Fund has been instructed that payments made to the dependents of soldiers killed on service may only be made as a temporary loan to tide over the interval between the receipts of the pension and the casualty. The order from the Head Office says:

"In view of the increased rates at which pensions are now paid to the widows of men killed in action and, since the first cheque received by the woman is always for a considerable amount, it is considered by the Central Executive Committee that upon the death of a soldier the amount or allowance to his dependent shall cease. In order, however, that the woman shall not suffer want during the period that elapses between the casualty and the receipt of the first cheque it is proposed that Local Branches assign such woman by means of loans, the same to be repaid when the first pension cheque is received."

It may be noted that the pension to the widow of a soldier, killed on service, is fixed at the amount of $32.00 for herself, and $6.00 per month for each child under pension age. In case of a wife and three children the total amount, each month would be $50.00 per month. When payment is made of the first pension amount, the Board adds to the first payment of gratuity of two months pension amount. In the above case this would be $150.00. The pension is payable from the day after death of the man on service. If the widow should marry again, one year's pension amount is given and then all payments cease.

A Work of Charity and Helpfulness

The giving of Charity is a work that is fraught with serious consequences. There may be some good done and there may be a large amount of harm.

It is becoming recognized that Charity giving and the dispensing of the proceeds of efforts is a profession calling for an insight into human nature.

When you give to help give to the Children's Aid. There is the security that every cent will be most worthily expended. The object, the succor of friendless and defenceless children should appeal as above all other objects.

Why Not Put it in the Hands of the Children's Aid Society?

"As careless families become educated to the fact that there is vigilant Society in existence the neglect of children will become steadily reduced, until in the future we can look for a large reduction in the number of children found in circumstances warranting removal to the care of the Children's Aid."

TAG DAY SATURDAY October 7

"The work of the Society is to receive and investigate all complaints bearing on the neglect of or cruelty to a child. This in itself is a large field. It can be fairly claimed that the work is dealt with in prompt and careful manner, investigating thoroughly and applying the needed remedy at the earliest possible moment."

Greece 16th Nation To Join in the War

With Greece in the war there will be sixteen belligerents, including the little Republic of San Marino—four on the side of the Central Powers, and twelve on the side of Quadruple Entente. From appearances it would seem that King Constantine's hand has been forced and that he had this alternative—abdication or war. But it must be remembered that no revolutionary party, not even that in Crete which Venizelos has taken in hand to organize, has demanded abdication, while the King has repeatedly stated that the continued neutrality of his country depended on events. The events of last winter were not encouraging for the Allies of the Entente. They are so now.

When he accepted in full the ultimatum of the Entente of June 21, exacting how he should run his kingdom it may be said that he placed himself in the position of one who would yield to force majeure, whether expressed by the bayonets of the Entente or the demonstrations of his people, and that the entry of Greece on the side of the Entente was only a question of time.

Since then both the Entente and his people have increased their pressure. Bulgaria, by invading Greek territory, where it was not in the interest of the Entente to defend, has, meanwhile added to it.

The Bulgars took possession of Kavala and gave the Greek force there the alternative of surrendering to Germany or to the commander of the Entente fleet in the harbor. Many of them chose the latter. Warships of the Entente made a demonstration at Pirmus, the port of Athens. The disorganized bodies of the Greek army at Saloniki, retreating from the evacuated forts on the frontier, reorganized and placed themselves under revolutionary leaders to repel the Bulgars. In Athens, as part of the ultimatum of June, wholesale arrests were made of pro-German officials, and the Allies took charge of the post office and telegraph until Premier Zaimis promised to attend to them more satisfactorily himself.

FAILED TO SATISFY THE ENTENTE.

But even the thoroughly sympathetic "neutrality" of M. Zaimis suited neither the Entente nor the rising feeling of the people for intervention. When on the evening of Monday, August 28, it was learned that Rumania had entered the war demonstrations of applause were held before the legations of the Entente. The day before Venizelos had addressed a crowd of 80,000 from his balcony. He called upon the king to dissociate himself from evil influences and to act in accordance with the obvious will of the people. He declared his belief in the victory if the Entente and deplored the fact that his country might not share it.

On Sept. 12 Premier Zaimis resigned. The next selection was M. Demitracopoulos, who was at once rejected by the Entente. On Sept. 16, Nikolas Kalogerpoulos succeeded in forming a cabinet which contained two members notorious for their hostility to the Entente, and it has never been recognized by the latter. In their circumstances, with the continued success of the Entente armies on the battle fronts, intervention was looked for most any day.

Meanwhile without any royal mandate, officers of the Greek Army have assembled as far as possible the demoralized troops as volunteers, and camps have been established on the hillsides around Athens. Already stores of munitions have been collected there and at other places, under French auspices, for the obvious use of the Greek troops.

The annual contingent of recruits is fixed by Parliamentary law at 25,000. The peace footing is 60,000 men and war footing on the recruit and reservist basis would produce from 280,000 to 300,000. Military observers say, however, that such is the spirit of the Greeks that an army of fully 300,000 men could be raised, including many veterans of the Balkan wars—for Greece suffered least of all of the Balkan States—in spite of the disorganization wrought in the Thiwl Army Corps on the Saloniki border.

After the Balkan wars Greece aspired to possess a navy commensurate with the extent of her coast and the chance of a war with Turkey. Aside from possessing the old battleships (armored cruisers) Spetsai, Hydra and Psara, each of 3,000 tons, and with three 10.6-inch, five 6-inch, and one 4-inch guns, built from 1890 to 1869; fourteen destroyers, seven torpedo boats, and two submarines she had purchased in 1905, from the United States the battleships Idaho and Mississippi, which were renamed the Kilkis and Lemnos, (14,465 tons each, with four 12-inch, eight 8-inch, eight 7-inch, twelve 3-inch, four 6-pound, and 2 1-pound guns,) and in 1912 the Helle, a cruiser from China. She also possessed the battleship Averoff, (10,118 tons, four 9.2-inch, eight 7.5 inch, and sixteen 12-pound guns), the gift of M. Averoff, who left his fortune to the Greek Navy.

When the present war began Greece had building the battle cruiser George I., in Germany, a dreadnought in France and a small cruiser and four destroyers in England. The first has been taken over by Germany. The others have been held "subject to the needs of Greece" at the place of their construction.

GERMAN PLANS IN SYRIA.

London, Sept. 11.—The London Times to-day publishes an article by a neutral who recently travelled in Syria, and who knows the country very well. The writer describes the great preparations which the Germans are making in Syria. "These preparations," says the Times, "have such features of permanency that it would appear that the Germans have made up their minds to keep their hold upon the Ottoman Empire," the writer of the article says.

"The railroad over the Amanus Mountains from Islahie, where the break in the Bagdad railway occurs is new and has all been built within six months or a year. It is not yet fully metalled. There are no guarding walls or finished culverts and it apparently is only a temporary railroad to be used until a tunnel is completed at that point. It is 26 miles in length.

"The railroad crosses the Amanus Mountains and climbs in long spirals, and after five hours enters the German headquarters at Mamoura alongside the railway station. The break in the Bagdad railway over the Taurus Mountains is 45 miles long and at present is covered by motor service. From 15,000 to 20,000 Turkish peasants are at present employed in completely rebuilding this road. It ends in a beautiful Alpine-like valley at a place called Bosanti, on the main line, whence start the trains for Saidar Pasha.

"Along this section of the Bagdad Railway the greatest signs of warlike preparations appear. The tunnel at Bosanti is at least three miles long, and according to the most recent news from the Swiss engineers in charge, it will require at least two years more to complete. On top of the Taurus mountains, looking south toward the Mediterranean, in a superb position from a scenic and strategical point of view, is a large German camp. There certainly are more than 6,000 soldiers already stationed there, perhaps as many as 10,000. It is laid out in streets, has fences, buildings, tents, and hospitals and all the paraphernalia of a permanent camp. It has a post office, wireless and ordinary telegraphy and a complete sytaem of local telephones.

"Crossing the Cilician gates in a motor truck an observer saw and actually counted 147 German lorries, most of them of 60 horsepower, and all of them loaded with stores. On each was a German driver and in some cases two other men.

"Bosanti, the end of the Bagdad Railway, was the greatest sight in the way of munitions and war supplies of the whole narrow valley. There seems no doubt that those in charge were pushing matters forward during the dry months before the winter rains make the half-completed road impassable."

CONSCRIPTION FOR IRELAND TO BE FINALLY SETTLED

Parliament Next Week Will Be Called On For Definite Action on Subject—Sir Edward Carson in Favour of Force—Erin Will Be Asked If She Intends to Shirk While Canada and the Rest of the Colonies Are Doing Their Big Part—Without Conscription It Will Be Impossible to Maintain the Irish Regiments at the Front in Their Proper Strength.

ARMY EXCEEDS 5,000,000 MEN

LONDON, October 6. — When Parliament reassembles next week the government will be confronted with new and embarrassing proposals for the application of conscription to Ireland. The Times and other leading newspapers recently have been conducting a strong campaign with this object in view, and a decision announced by the Man Power Distribution Board and by General Sir William Robertson, Chief of the Imperial Staff, that more men are urgently needed will, it is believed, strengthen the hands of the agitators, who have been joined by Sir Edward Carson.

Sir Edward asserts that the situation is such that without conscription in Ireland it will be impossible to even maintain the Irish regiments at the front in their proper strength. He contends that Ireland could provide another half million men of military age, and asks what the colonies, which have made such sacrifices for the empire, will think of the shirking of Ireland.

While most of the responsible politicians are agreed that it would be inexpedient to attempt to apply compulsion to Ireland while home rule is withheld from it, undoubtedly in the present phase of the European war those who are demanding conscription hold a strong hand and the government may find it difficult to resist their demand.

QUESTION OF HOME RULE.

The nationalists in reply to Sir Edward Carson state that the colonies already have self-government and hence there is no analogy with the position of Ireland. They assert that Ireland will be found to be a united nation in resistance to compulsion.

The liberal newspapers consider the agitation another attempt to unseat Mr. Asquith, and contend that while compulsion in Ireland would provide a few men it would provoke another first class Irish crisis and throw Ireland into the hands of the Sinn Feiners.

General Sir William Robertson, Chief of the Imperial Staff at Army Headquarters, said in a speech at Daldorby, Lincolnshire, that while the Allies were winning the war slowly but surely, he wished to impress upon his hearers the necessity of procuring more men for the army and munitions factories. In this connection, he said, he had a serious word of warning to give.

"We are not justified in expecting to win the war," he said, "unless the service of every man and woman in the country is utilized to the fullest extent.

"We must be under no delusion as to the end or probable duration of this great struggle. We must be prepared to continue for a time which cannot at present be estimated.

"In fact, we must prepare for the worst while we hope for the best. We have adopted in theory the principle of national service. We must see that we put it into practice, because we want more men, and we want them now, and eventually we shall want all who can be spared."

MEN, MORE MEN!

A statement that Britain is in urgent need of men for her armies and also for her munitions factories was given out by the Man Power Distribution Board, recently appointed to comb out men eligible for military service in the United Kingdom who have not yet been enrolled in the army.

"It is essential," the report says, "that a large part of the labour now engaged in private work shall be diverted to government orders or released for the army."

The Board also has under consideration the extended use of women and of men over the military age, and also the release of men of military age now employed in government offices. This is the only means, the Board says, whereby extension of the age for compulsory service can be avoided.

No official figures have ben given recently as to the number of men serving with the British army. On May 25 King George, in signing the Military Service bill, placed the number raised up to that time at 5,041,000. In July, August and September the British casualties were 207,169.

WHERE THE STYLES COME FROM

Grand Duke Nicholas To Command In The Balkans

General Who Conducted Famous Strategic Retirement From Galicia Without Losing Any of His Armies and Who Has Been Pushing Back the Turks in Armenia Will Lead the Combined Forces in an Invasion of Bulgaria --Armies Have Been Organized on a Very Large Scale

MUST FIGHT IN THE OPEN

LONDON, Oct. 6.—Most alarming of all news recently published in Germany is the report, received through Stockholm, that Grand Duke Nicholas had left Trebizond for Odessa to proceed to Kieff and thence to go to the Dobrudja to take command of the armies driving south through Bulgaria toward Constantinople.

Reports from many quarters affirm that these armies have been organized on a very powerful scale and the German reading public is being prepared for coming events by the announcement that in this campaign for the conquest of Roumania and the rolling up of the Russian left, Field Marshals von Hindenburg and von Mackensen —— now, it is recalled is due the fact that the Prussian army is still camping in Russia, that Serbia is in the hands of the Central allies, that Bulgaria is carrying out unimpeded military operations on a large scale, and that Turkey has lost none of her confidence—will probably have to manoeuvre extensively on account of the peculiar terrain of the Dobrudja.

The vast quadrilateral of the Dobrudja lying between the elbow of the Danube, the Black Sea and the Roumanian-Bulgarian frontier on the south, is an immense sandy plain with marshes on the edge of the river and on the seashore. There is no water apart from salt wells and the country is largely desert, except for pasturages, which grow up after the spring storms, and support the herds of sheep and buffalo on which the sparse population makes its living. This population is of mixed blood, comprising Turks, Roumanians, Greeks, Bulgarians and Jews, about 200,000 in all.

DOBRUDJA OFFERS GREAT FACILITY.

The only completed railroad in the territory is that running westward from the port of Constantza toward the capital, Bucharest. As the Roumanians can pass the Danube within their own territory, the Dobrudja offers greater facility for operations in the opposite direction, especially if the Bulgarians fulfilled their agreement, made in the treaty of Bucharest of three years ago, to dismantle and raze the fortifications of Rustchuk, Shumla and Baltchik. So true is this conservation, that the ancient Romans in the days of Trajan had decided to close this great invasion highway by means of walls, to protect the Roman empire against the barbarians.

The position and fortunes of the army of Prussians, Bulgarians and Turks under Field Marshal [illegible] Mackensen, ostensibly dealing an offensive blow for the destruction of Roumania, and in reality endeavoring to stay the invasion of the army of Russians, Roumanians and Serbians, are therefore of intense concern to all observers in the Teutonic countries, and it is realised that on them may hang the early decision of the war. One point of great importance is being freely admitted, namely, that all hope of taking the Russian-Roumanian forces in the Dodrudja by surprise is now gone and that operations henceforward must be conducted practically in the open. This fact is not encouraging to the Prussians, as their resources in men and material are believed to be greatly inferior to those opposing them.

NO CHOICE OF WIFE.

When the heir to the throne of Japan wants a wife he looks around five families from whom, by immemorial traditions, he must choose a bride.

This sensible custom saves a great deal of trouble, and solves a problem which if tackled on European lines, would be insoluble now that Korea and China no longer possess royal families. Proposals to wed the young crown prince would be a piquant and embarrassing novelty.

As a rule, five Japanese families would have a choice of marriageable daughters to offer, but as luck will have it there is only one eligible girl in the five at this time, and if the old rule is to be kept, Miss Asako Ichijo, the 14 year old daughter of Prince Sanetaro Ichijo, will infallibly be Empress of Japan if she lives for another five years.

The Emperor's eldest son, Prince Hirohito, is to be formally proclaimed Crown Prince on November [illegible] next, when he will be 15 years old, and the Japanese newspapers anticipate that the declaration of his betrothal will be made at the same time.

STOMACH MEDICINES ARE DANGEROUS

DOCTORS NOW ADVISE MAGNESIA

Just how dangerous it is to indiscriminately dose the stomach with drugs and medicines is often not realized until too late. It seems so simple to swallow a dose of some special mixture or take tablets of soda, pepsin, bismuth, etc. after meals, and the folly of this drugging is not apparent until, perhaps years afterward, when it is found that gastric ulcers have almost eaten their way through the stomach walls. Regrets are then unavailing; it is in the early stages when indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, flatulence, etc. indicate excessive acidity of the stomach and fermentation of food contents that precaution should be taken. Drugs and medicines are unreliable and often dangerous—they have little or no influence upon the harmful acids and that is why doctors are absolutely condemning and advising sufferers from indigestion and stomach trouble to not rid of the dangerous acid and keep the food contents bland and sweet by taking a little pure deodorized magnesia instead. Bisurated Magnesia is an absolutely pure alkali which can be readily obtained from any drug store. It is absolutely harmless, is practically tasteless and a teaspoonful taken in a little cold or hot water after meals, will usually be found quite sufficient to instantly neutralize excessive acidity of the stomach and prevent all possibility of the food fermenting.

You can be sure of being nourished if you take BOVRIL

Bovril has the peculiar power of enabling people to get from their food nourishment which they cannot obtain in any other way. Unless your system crushes the gold of nourishment out of the ore of food you cannot get strong or keep strong, however much you eat.

Until your food has become part of your muscle, flesh and bone, it cannot assist in that process of rebuilding the body which is essential to good health. If your food does not nourish, however you vary your diet; if you are not strong enough to resist illness, or if you cannot get strong after illness, you will find a magical change if you add Bovril to your diet.

this is the Reason

In the remarkable experiments on human subjects an amount of Bovril proportionate to the small dark diagram section has been proved to produce an increase in muscle, flesh and bone proportionate to the large shaded circle.

GERMAN LIARS WRITE BUSILY FOR MOSLEMS

"Literature" by the Ton in Many Languages for all the Orient—Tricky Work Exposed

The "Journal de Geneve" (Swiss) has an illuminating account of Germany's underground activities. It derives special interest from the fact that its writer is himself an Arab, Ali el-Ghalati. It reads: We used to think that we knew all about the methods employed by the German propagandists in Mohammedan countries to convert the followers of Islam to the "German truth." We were wrong. We have just, in fact, made the acquaintance of a batch of seventy-two pamphlets, millions of copies of which have been distributed in Mohammedan countries, in India and in China. These pamphlets have been published in every language, especially in Arabic, Turkish, Persian, Tartar, Hindustani, Modern Sanscrit, and Chinese.

In order to give an idea of their wholesale distribution, it will be enough to note that of one of these pamphlets, "A Judgment on England," an edition of 5,000 copies was published in Berlin on May 2, 1915. Eighteen days later 10,000 more were printed. If subsequent editions are printed on this basis, one may imagine the result.

By a Neutral

Several of these works purported to have been published at the headquarters of the Entente in Paris, in London and in neutral countries, in Stockholm, Amsterdam, Zurich, Rio de Janeiro. Most of them are anonymous; some of them describe themselves as written "by A Neutral." Many are printed on paper of very fine quality, some are illustrated, and others are written in verse, especially those in Arabic, and Persian. Tunisians, Turks, Tartars, and Persians have lent their signatures to these publications. The Egyptian Nationalists, who normally find difficulty in appearing in print, are largely represented. The national Hindoo party has provided material for many of these works.

According to some of the writers, conquest and victory have been from all eternity vested in Germany, whose Emperor is the all-powerful protector of the Koran. One is amazed to discover that the Sultan, Mahomet IV., suddenly finds himself turned into a paladin and a hero who has taken into his own hands the destinies of the Empire and assumed all its responsibilities!

Can't Fool the Arabs

The other Governments of the Entente are fairly steeped in outrages; the mere titles of some of the pamphlets prove this more than sufficiently: "The Atrocities of the English;" "Russian Cruelties;" "French Lies;" "The Barbarity of the French in Tunis and Alberia;" "French intrigues against Islam;" and the texts are to match. On the other hand, all those which deal with Germany have nothing but praise for the prosperity and the greatness of Germany under Wilhelm II. Germany has foreseen everything, but forgotten to take account of one thing—the intelligence of the Arab!

BOER DOGGEDNESS WINS

Smuts Lost the First; Won the Second Decisive Day

Major Wedgood, M.P., returned from staff duties with the Smuts expedition to German East Africa writes: "Part of General Smuts' advance was marked by the building of a light railway, carried forward at the rate of two miles a day. The ground offers little resistance to heavy loads and the rails gradually sink until they become embedded in a sort of cutting. I have seen a train crawl along for a mile or two and then stop while the men got out and cut some grass to put underneath the sleepers to prop them up. Though the task of discovering the enemy owing to the thick bush is a tremendous business we do contrive to locate him, and it is a case all the time of forcing him back. The decisive battle, to my mind, was the battle of Latema, that was fought through the night. By winning this battle General Smuts placed the issue of the campaign beyond doubt.

"Smuts has a great sense of humor—his stories, told half in Dutch and half in English, are delightfully quaint—and what particularly amused him was to find out that the Germans, concluding from the first twelve hours' fighting that the battle was turning in their favor, decided they had won a great victory to be appropriately celebrated by a champagne banquet in Moshi Fort. The next evening we were in the fort.

"I suppose it would be right to call General Smuts' staff the most remarkable of any of our war staffs, including as it does representatives of the most vigorous fighting Boer element. The commander of one of the regiments, for instance, is the son of the man who captured Majuba Hill. Colonel Ben Smith, so magical are the transformations wrought by time."

"Decadent" France Wins

The story of the forty-four years which separated 1870 from 1914 would be extremely interesting to write, but, first of all, he wanted to say that it was by the men born in those years that the Huns were defeated at the Marne and held up along the lines from the Somme to the Vosges during twenty-two months. Nevertheless those Somme men had heard on every side that France was growing old and senile. During forty-four years Frenchmen had listened to the litany of their frivolity, decadence, corruption and impotence, and it was on that constant belittlement that they took, with Verdun, their gay revenge.—M. Henri Dausay.

Bird Stays By Nest

British staff officer writes: "A blackbird's nest with three young birds in it was found in the ruins of a village which had been captured by us some days previous. This particular village is situated practically right on the old German front line, and thus the old bird must have sat on its nest during the whole of the preliminary bombardment and the subsequent terrific fighting. Everything around the nest was smashed to atoms."

CHAPLAIN'S GOOD FIGHT

Beckles-Wilson writes of the third battle of Ypres, as follows: One more incident I must relate. It is the story of Rev. Gilles Wilken, a parson from Medicine Hat, on the Bow river. At the outbreak o fwar Wilken flung aside his surplice and enlisted as a private. He came to England with his battalion, where his talent for ministration and good works could not be concealed, and he was promptly, when a vacancy occurred, appointed chaplain. Having on this day, in Sanctuary Wood, done all he could for the dead and dying, Wilken felt it his duty to strike a blow of sterner sort for his country. He seized a rifle, wielding it with accuracy and effect as long as his ammunition lasted, and then went after the Germans with a bayonet. After one particularly fierce thrust the weapon broke. Whereupon, this astounding parson, baring his arms, flew at one brawny Boche with his fists, and the last seen of him he was lying prone and overpowered.

MAKING INDIAN CHIEFS

Officers And Preacher in Overseas Battalion Were Honored

The 114th Overseas Battalion, belonging to the 37th Haldimand Rifles of Cayuga, recruited half its strength from Indians of Eastern Canada. Major T. A. MacDonald, O.C., "D" Company, recently received the title of a chief of the Six Nations. He was a former teacher of Dufferin School, Toronto. His tribal name, which was conferred upon him at Cayuga is "Thayendanegea." This appellation bears a significationn of unification and is intended to show the close relationship between the Palefaces and the Redskins of the battalion. The Indian name conferred upon Colonel Thompson is "Amserogowah," which, in the English tongue, means "Long Sword." This title was chosen for Colonel Thompson because of the fighting stock from which he come. Corporal William Aird, formerly the Baptist minister at Chaweken, was one of the white men of the Brock Rangers who was honored by the Six Nations. One the same occasion that Major MacDonald was made an Indian leader, Corporal Aird was presented with the Indian title of "Sagoyewatha," meaning "Keeping People Awake." Corporal Aird formerly preached to the Indians of Haldimand County. Lieut. Milton Martin, a grand-nephew of Dr. Oronhyatekha, was also granted the use of the name of the late famed Indian, who was responsible for the foundation of the Independent Order of Foresters.

CANADIANS VS. HUNS

Young Aviator Describes First Battle and Victory

One of the most interesting letters that have come from the front has been recently received by Mr. R. King Farrow, Ottawa, from his son, Lieut. E. W. Farrow, of No. 12 Squadron, of the Flying Corps in France. The young officer writes: "Haven't had a chance to write for a few days as the weather has been fine and I have been doing a lot of flying, in fact too much. Have been up for three hours this morning doing patrol. Yesterday afternoon another machine and mine had to go over and drop bombs on a stationary kite balloon and drive it down so that our guns could fire at it.

"The day before yesterday I was on early morning patrol, when I came on a Hun machine about 1,500 feet below me. It was on our side of the lines. My observer fired about 15 or 20 rounds at it and then I turned and chased it across the enemy's lines. I was some 300 yards behind it when another of our machines dived on the enemy from above firing on it. We fired the balance of our drum about the same time. The Hun dived to the ground and about 2,000 feet from the ground it turned over and one of the occupants fell out. The machine struck the ground upside down and crashed.

"I got a nice new machine about a week ago. It is very nice, but there is something wrong with the rigging as it is so slow in climbing. This morning I managed to get up to 11,000 feet but it took me a long time."

RUSSIAN IMPRESSIONS ALONG WESTERN FRONT

Nurses Among Shells and Pale Stretcher-bearers Are Sympathetically Described

A Russian who is the guest of the French general staff at the front sends the following: Fighting has been going on almost incessantly—he says: "We have reached the front trench, about forty yards from the Germans, and are now looking across 'no man's land.' I take off my gas helmet, close my left eye and peep through the little round hole at the view in front—forty yards away a brown ditchbank, the German trench, and in front of it a maze of old iron and barbed wire.

"The colonel explains that the Germans have been forced to retreat a few yards, leaving a strip of land for which they had fought three days and nights. On the barbed wire, the dead bodies of four soldiers are hanging, like flies in a spider's web. Their uniforms are torn by the barbs, their faces—no, there are no faces left.

Dangling On Wire

"All around, in the hedged wire and on the ground are hanging or lying the bodies of soldiers who have fallen five months, four, three, or two months ago. It has been impossible to remove any of them. It is not pleasant to stand there month after month facing the bodies of your fallen comrades. Everything has been done to have them removed.

"The colonel first asked the soldiers to go out and get them. A young unmarried man immediately volunteered. He was given a red flag and mounted the parapet to signal the enemy. Instantly a bullet pierced his brain and he fell back into the trench, dead. Another man volunteered, and again another. Five young men altogher sacrificed their lives. Then the attempt was given up and it was decided to await the coming of darkness. About fifty dead bodies were thus recovered, but it was impossible to touch those hanging on the wire because the slightest touch set the German system of alarm bells going.

Pale Heroes and Nurses

"Just as life in Trenchville, which is about the size of London, is a picture of the great society of humanity, subject to the same laws and the same necessities, as death, too, is carefully organized. Its servants are first of all the stretcher bearers, as a rule rather delicate looking men, pale, near-sighted and often wearing glasses. At the beginning of the war French writers looked upon them as a wind of shirkers, but this is a great mistake. When these men in single file go out into the battlefield to gather up the dead or wounded, they are far more likely to be killed than are the soldiers behind the walls of the trenches, to say nothing of their risk; then they have to pick up wounded in the midst of a hail of shot and shell during a monster battle and carry them back to the first aid stations.

"We visited one of these dressing stations, a small dugout in the wall of a trench, with one exit to the trench, another to the field behind. Here was a surgeon with his two assistants, the most necessary instruments and a long flask table. While I was talking to the surgeon a torpedo exploded on the traverse near and the windows were broken. The surgeon did not even turn his head but gave an order to send for the glazier.

"In a trench in Artois I saw a girl nurse during a fierce bombardment walking calmly about helping to carry away the wounded. A shell exploded only a few steps from her, but she coolly continued her work of mercy. The French officer in command of the trench was so touched that he handed her a bouquet of the first violets of the spring, which he probably had just received from a friend in Paris.

FINE JAPANESE SKILL

Surgeons of Eastern Red Cross Perform a Marvel

The Japanese Red Cross is doing splendid work in France. The skill of its doctors is great. A corporal of artillery was taken from Douamont to the Japanese hospital; his chest had been torn by a shell and the heart could almost be seen. His case was desperate, and it seemed that the only chance of saving his life was a very dangerous operation. The surgeon asked if the man's family lived far away and was told between thirty and forty miles. "All right," he replied, "I have time," and gave orders for the relatives to be sent for. It was then eight o'clock in the evening, and a motor car was sent out at once to the man's native village.

In consequence, however, of various mishaps on the journey the car with the man's relatives did not reach the hospital till the next morning at five. Nevertheless, the surgeon postponed the operation and during the whole of the nine hours attendants stood around the bed compressing the man's heart, taking five minutes' turns at this hard work. The relatives finally arrived and embraced the patient who was still conscious. The patient was then placed on the table and the operation was performed successfully. The man lived.

ARMY'S VARIED WORK

Supplying Meat and Roads For France's Millions

A correspondent writes from Paris: On a trip behind the French front, one is inevitably impressed by the immense amount of work not strictly of a military nature which the army does. First there have had to be built hundred of miles of new standard and narrow gauge railroad to feed the trench line. Then comes the question of roads. All old highways are kept in perfect repair and thousands of miles of new road are constructed.

In the region called the Champagne Pouilleuse the road question was a particularly difficult one. Loads of stones are swallowed up without much effect. So logs are laid side by side and corduroy roads built. There are hundreds of miles of these corduroy roads and over them pass heavy artillery, motor trucks filled with shells and other large vehicles. In this district, too, the military engineers have had to bore hundreds of wells, for good water is a rarity. To do this gangs of professional well sinkers were selected from the mobilized soldiers and the country is now covered with these cases.

Immense quantities of wood are used by the army. Soldiers' cantonments, ambulances, water installations and the corduroy roads all call interminably for wood. For this purpose temporary sawmills are established just in the rear of the fighting zone. All this work is done with a remarkable elimination of waste.

The economical method which now marks the French army is also illustrated by the way the meat supply is managed. No meat is wasted. As a rule fresh meat is supplied to the troops. Any deficiency in the fresh meat is made up by supplying frozen meat brought from abroad, which is dealt out in just the required quantity from day to day. Paris omnibuses, taken off the boulevards, are used to convey the amount of frozen meat needed each day. The fresh meat is driven up near the firing line "on the hoof" to save transportation.

Soldier With Wooden Leg

When it was announced some time ago that a man with a wooden leg had entered the British army, most readers thought it was a joke. But Private J. L. Jones, Army Ordnance Corps, who has an artificial limb, is really to go abroad on military duties. He is a strapping Liverpool man, over six feet tall and twenty-three years old. When examined by the army doctors at the recruiting office he successfully concealed the presence of the wooden leg and marched past them without a limp. On the discovery of the deception, the army authorities let Jones give proof of physical stamina and marching power and then accepted him.

Hun Soldier's Wife

Made insane by suffering, Mrs. Anna Wiedemann, the wife of a mail carrier of Mauendorf, Saxony, who has been at the front since the beginning of the war, killed her three small children and herself. In a letter the woman declared it was impossible for her to feed her little ones with the small allowance received from the government.

WINNER OF THE ONTARIO JOCKEY CLUB CUP—Fair Mac (8) by Uncle Mac-Fair Lily, owned by G. H. Browne, who won the Ontario Jockey Club Cup at the Woodbine Park race meet. Fair Mac has been a great long-distance performer in Ireland before being shipped to this country.

SPORTSMEN MAKE GOOD

Sterner Game Found Famous Englishmen Ready to Die

Since the commencement of the "big push" on the Western front, which brought under fire the footballers and sportsmen's battalions, the war's toll among the British sportsmen has been heavy, a number of stars in every branch of sport being killed or wounded. Boxing is represented by the death in action of Sergt. Tom McCormick, the widely known welterweight champion. His last known act was to send $5.25 from the trenches to the Sportsmen's Ambulance Fund.

Cricket claims Major W. Booth, of the Yorkshire Country Club, while B. Kilner, of the same club and Lieut. C. Kelleway, the famous Australian, appear among the wounded. A leading rowing man, Capt. H. M. S. Carpenter, also made the big sacrifice. As secretary of the Kingston Rowing Club and one of the most widely known oarsmen on the Thames, he rowed in the Henley eight for the Thames' Cup in 1912.

Capt. G. V. M. Boyd, widely known golfer, was killed in action. A member of the Royal and Ancient, Prestwich and Troon clubs, his one-hole victory over T. Jennings in the South of Ireland championship in 1913, is on record as being one of the most exciting finals in the history of the game. Lieut. Stanley Wootton, the jockey, the brother of the famous Frank Wootton, was wounded.

TWO TRUE IRISHMEN

Private Patrick Moran, of the Connaught Rangers, and Private William Devlin, of the Munster Fusiliers, were prisoners in the hands of the Germans. Both were among the Irishmen whom Roger Casement tempted to gain their liberty by joining his expedition. Both refused and both were shot. The explanation given by the German authorities was that they were shot for other offences; but when the American ambassador tried to investigate he was not permitted to interrogate witnesses except in the presence of German officers and the authorities tried to prevent him from undertaking it at all. Patrick Moran and William Devlin were true to their oaths, to their duty, and to the best interests of Ireland. Their kind of heroism is not so extravagantly praised as some other kinds of Irish heroism; but Moran and Devlin and their kind give their lives not for Ireland's past but for her future.

Farms For Soldiers

Lord Shaughnessy, the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, announced that 1,000 farms would be set aside in Western Canada by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of disbanded soldiers. The farms were to be ready for occupation in the spring of 1917. They will be grouped in colonies, with appropriate military names.

Government Beer Saloon

The saloon opened by the British Government at Carlisle is more than a mere bar and lounge. The building is a fine stone structure in a prominent thoroughfare and resembles neither the German Bier Hall, nor the British public house. The invasion of the neighborhood by the creation of a colossal munitions factory in the neighborhood of Carlisle was the origin of the idea of a kind of workman's club saloon. The rural beer houses were too small and too local for the class of people who had come into the locality. So the Control Board took over several of these rural taberets (inns) and have made a single building of them, with kitchens, dining-rooms, library, and cinema shows.

The Nottingham Watch Committee has decided that no children shall be admitted to picture theatres after five o'clock in the afternoon unless accompanied by an adult.

This badge is worn proudly by British women munition workers.

AUSTRALIAN GIANT-HERO

Trench Fighting Did Not Suit This Lion-Hearted Patient

La Recontouse writes describing experiences on a British canal boat ambulance on the Somme: I was particularly attracted by a giant Australian who, I was told, had performed perfect wonders of courage. Just before the attack began he complained that he was beginning to feel bored by the inactivity in the trenches and one night he sneaked away with a number of his comrades to the German trenches opposite where he challenged the men to come out and have a few rounds of boxing with him, and when they refused he jumped down among them and brought a number of them back with him as prisoners. He was now in a state of semi-delirium and kept saying that there was nothing at all the matter with him.

The doctor said that his abdomen had been torn open by a shell and that very few men would have survived the shock. "He stands a chance," he added, "because of his marvellous constitution. They are terribly tough fellows, those Australians, but fine soldiers and wonderful fighters and withal there is not an unkind thought in their soul. This man here would not hesitate a moment to risk his life to save a German wounded. In fact, he has done it, I am told."

Another wounded soldier who greeted us with a smile and whose right leg was shattered at the hip, told me that he had four brothers who had fallen, but that he had had luck. Luck, indeed, to be crippled for life! All these men spoke with the greatest admiration of the French soldiers and said that their comrades had no higher aim than to prove worthy of their brave allies.

A Message To Thin Weak Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 20 Pounds of Solid, Healthy Permanent Flesh.

Thin, nervous undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

Nothing is needed in a vacuum of greatly upset the assimilative machinery of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin persons body is like a dry sponge —eager and hungry for the fatty matter sole of which it is being deprived by the millions of the alimentary canal to take them from the food in the natural way of working to overcome this. Every waste of flesh building elements add to step the leakage of fats is to try Sargol, the fat maker. Sargol flesh building agent has been widely sold in America in recent years. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and see if your cheeks don't quickly fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh form over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point. All good drug gists have Sargol or can get it from their wholesale house and will refund your money if not satisfied with the gain in weight it will make in the first few weeks' treatment. It is inexpensive, easy to take, and highly efficient.

If you find a druggist who is unable to supply you with Sargol send $1.00 direct order or registered letter to the National Laboratories, 10 Antoine St., Montreal and a complete two weeks' treatment will be sent you, prepaid in plain wrapper.

Sargol is guaranteed to put on solid flesh better and more quickly than any drug in the form of tablets or capsules, or your money back. It contains in a condensed form all the processes of the most powerful flesh producing foods known to science, and is absolutely harmless even if taken for a long period.

I have told young mothers as well as older ones about your remedies, and what they have done for me. I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved my life, as my health was very bad when I wrote you, but now I can do my own work and have not had a sick day since I began taking your remedies. SAGE TEA DANDY TO DARKEN HAIR

Its Grandmother's Recipe to Bring Back Colour and Lustre to Hair

You can turn gray, faded hair beautifully dark and lustrous almost over night if you'll get a 50-cent bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound" at any drug store. Millions of bottles of this old famous Sage Tea Recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, are sold annually, says a well-known druggist here, because it darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that no one can tell it has been applied.

Those whose hair is turning gray or becoming faded have a surprise awaiting them, because after one or two applications the gray hair vanishes and your locks become luxuriantly dark and beautiful.

This is the age of youth. Gray-haired, unattractive folks aren't wanted around, so get busy with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound to-night and you'll be delighted with your dark, handsome hair and your youthful appearance within a few days.

This preparation is a toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure mitigation or prevention of disease.

FIRST TIME AT FRONT

A junior British officer of artillery writes while en route to the front for the first time: "All last night when I was near the front I could see the flashes of the guns, and the air was one roar of guns. It was just like the waves on the sea shore—you know the noise they make when the surf breaks on the shore; but this noise never rolled back as the wave does. It just kept on. I shared a tent with a boy just going home and suffering from shell shock; such a charming fellow, but his nerves had all gone. The great thing that impresses me is the state of the roads and the dust; the roads are like a Bank Holiday game mad, and you wonder why the houses have such holes in them and why there are no glass windows. Everything is terribly busy; the push is on and we are becoming 'top dog' at last. You meet lots of German prisoners coming in, with men with dust and sweat all over them, with shrapnel helmets and big bayonets guarding them, and they are so pleased to be captured and so grateful and ready to do anything. Everything is white with dust, and all the world seems to have gone mad, and it seems impossible that I'm right here among it and not at home."

GENERAL POLIVANOFF

the Russian Minister of War. Upon his shoulders rests a tremendous responsibility, in view of the immense number of men Russia has in the field and the extent of the operations.

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with bronchial indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were ragged, the heart bad, and smothering feelings came on till I thought that I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me as I became discouraged. Then Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills which I thank for my present good health and now never my dyspepsia has had a touch of me.

OSTRACIZE HUNLAND

Economic War to Extend to Sea—French Plans

There is a very strong movement afoot in France to refuse to have dealings with Germans after war is over. The advocates of the ostracizing of Germany declare that no goods of French origin on route for Russia shall be sent over German railroads. Germany after the war is to find herself cut off entirely from the neighbors whose homes she invaded.

That the same feeling exists in some leading Russian circles is evident from an utterance of the President of the Duma while he was visiting this city. "Neither I, nor my children, nor my grandchildren," he said, speaking of Germany, "shall ever put foot in that accursed land."

"It is the merchant fleets of the North Sea, the Baltic and the Mediterranean," says the Petit Journal, "which in the future are to be the means by which our people and merchandise, in ever increasing volume, will go to Russia via Riga, Libau, Petrograd, Constantinople and Odessa. A service of fast boats will be able to cover the distance between Dunkirk and Petrograd almost as quickly as the trains do.

"Is there anyone among us who would not be delighted to be able to avoid the trip through central Europe and arrive on board a Russian or French boat straight in the country of our Allies? We have built leviathans which cover the distance between Brest and New York in less than five days. At this rate of speed it would take only sixty hours to travel from one capital to the other, or at least from Calais to Crenstadt, the port of Petrograd.

TURKS PREFER ENGLISH

Germans Who Reorganized University Met Strong Rebuff

According to the Cologne Gazette the German professors who arrived in Constantinople on board the first Bethan train thoroughly modernized and Germanized the Turkish university there. They were eighteen in number and they all were given chairs at the university.

Turkish students must take up at least one foreign language, preferably German. It aroused some indignation among the professors that a great many students chose to study English, maintaining that this is the only European language extensively spoken in Mohammedan countries outside Turkey. All lectures were given by the German professors with the exception of those in philosophy which are to be given by Turkish or Arab professors.

Praises Hun Spy-Waiter

"Die Woche," the German magazine, contained an article praising the German waiter, who, according to the writer, "has been at work in all parts of the world for many decades, gaining valuable knowledge of other countries, their languages, manners, customs, and business." This is a surprising admission that many German waiters were spies.

Many soldiers, some on leave from France, helped to remove the stores from the Llangollen Hide and Skin Works when a fire broke out in the engine-room.

Start Tomorrow and Keep It Up Every Morning

We're not here long, so let's make our stay agreeable. Let us live well, eat well, digest well, work well, sleep well, and look well, what a glorious condition to attain, and yet, how very easy it is if one will only adopt the morning inside bath.

Folks who are accustomed to feel dull and heavy when they arise, spitting, headache, stuffy from a cold, foul tongue, nasty breath, acid stomach, can, instead, feel as fresh as a daisy by opening the sluices of the system each morning and flushing out the whole of the internal poisonous stagnant matter.

Everyone, whether ailing, sick or well, should, each morning, before breakfast, drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash from the stomach, liver and bowels the previous day's indigestible waste, sour bile and poisonous toxins, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary canal before putting more food into the stomach. The action of hot water and limestone phosphate on an empty stomach is wonderfully invigorating. It cleans out all the sour fermentations, gases, waste and acidity and gives one a splendid appetite for breakfast. While you are enjoying your breakfast the water and phosphate is quietly extracting a large volume of water from the blood and getting ready for a thorough flushing of all the inside organs.

The millions of people who are bothered with constipation, bilious spells, stomach trouble; others who have sallow skins, blood disorders and sickly complexions are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone a pronounced crank on the subject of inside-bathing before breakfast.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GIRL'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

School days are approaching, and several new frocks will have to be added to many wardrobes, to last until after the holidays. One need not be told the advantage in choosing patterns that are neat, on simple lines but showing that simplicity has been well thought out, and making the dresses at home. Our claim that there will be real need for a dress like the one illustrated will be acknowledged as just by any mother who looks at the model.

Right away we are attracted to the front panel piece made of plain goods, to better show the trimming held at either side of striped material but this; the collar is pretty in plain material, and the sleeve, which may be either long or short, has a roll cuff in matching goods. The fastening is at back to a lowered waistline.

The plaited skirt, joined to the waist, has a panel front, following the line of the blouse. A belt of novel shape and button trimmed adjusts itself by closing with snappers at right side.

Tub fabrics are desirable for this type of frock, but materials like serge and plaid combined, silk and serge and similar goods and 4½ yard 36 inch plain combinations are equally satisfactory.

7956

The pattern, No. 7,956, is cut in sizes 8, 10 and 12 years. To make a size 10 of frock, but materials like serge and will require 3¼ yards 36 inch stripe plaid combined, silk and serge and similar goods and 4½ yard 36 inch plain combinations are equally satisfactory.

You may obtain the pattern by sending to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Girard-Hawkins Plant

How It Was Saved From Ruin

By BARBARA PHIPPS

The firm of Girard & Hawkins was organized for the erection and operation of a large manufacturing plant. Edward Girard, son of the head of the firm, soon after the work was begun went abroad for a tour previous to settling down to his life's career. On his return he was to enter the service of the Girard-Hawkins company. He had not been away long when his father died suddenly. After several cablegrams between Edward and his mother it was decided that he should finish his tour. Mr. Hawkins was abundantly able to supervise the erection of the factory and to start its operation.

Six months later Edward received a letter from his mother announcing the death of Mr. Hawkins just as the works were finished and were about to be operated. Mrs. Girard was much worried as to the further development of the Girard-Hawkins company. It was impossible to find a good business man with experience in the same line to take an interest in it and run it. But Hawkins' share had fallen to his only child, Isabel, who was still a minor. She was under the control of her guardian, a brother of her father, who seemed bound to wreck the enterprise. He had failed at numerous business efforts and was now bent on establishing himself as full manager of the Girard-Hawkins company. This Mrs. Girard believed would bring the company to grief, and she would not consent to it. The consequence was a deadlock, with the prospect of a foreclosure under a mortgage on the property.

From an irresponsible gadabout Ned Girard suddenly found himself called upon to extricate a valuable property from ruin. Many a man has been developed by such a situation, and young Girard had in him the makings of a successful man. Realizing that he had suddenly been plunged into a great responsibility, he sat himself down to think what he should do.

There are persons who have the faculty of diving into questions and ferreting out the meat while others are looking for it in the substances which contain it. Where was the kernel of the nut in this instance? One-half of it was in himself, the half owner with his mother. What constituted the other half? The guardian uncle? Ned looked beyond him and straight at this minor daughter heir. Mrs. Girard had described her as a schoolgirl, seventeen years old. She was being educated abroad, and at the time of her father's death was at school at Geneva, Switzerland.

When Ned began to study the problem before him he was packing to return to America. When he finished his deliberations he was packing to go to Geneva, his object being to get control of his business partner. That is to say, he aimed to get such an influence over her as would enable him to circumvent her guardian uncle and thereby save the Girard-Hawkins company from wreck.

Ned, on his arrival at Geneva, made inquiries as to Miss Hawkins and found that she had received news of the death of her father and was looking for an escort to return to America. Ned at once wrote to some American friends of his who were at Lucerne and were about to leave for home. These persons were two maiden ladies whom he had known since he was a boy. He asked them to stop over on their way home at Geneva, where he would join them and escort them to the United States.

Only too glad to have his assistance and his company, they did as he desired. When they reached Geneva he told them he had heard that a young girl, an orphan, who had just lost her father in America was anxious to find an escort across the Atlantic. The ladies sent word to the school where Miss Hawkins was, stating what they had heard and offering to take her under their care. The offer was accepted, and Ned felt that he had made a beginning.

Now, these ladies had engaged passage on a steamer that was to sail from Naples. Therefore Miss Hawkins, to avail herself of their care, must also sail from Naples. It mattered not to her what port she sailed from, and the party, Ned included, left Geneva for Naples via Milan, Florence and Rome. Ned knew that the vessel on which they had engaged passage would not sail for several weeks, which the ladies would put in between Florence and Rome. His advantages were thus trebled as to the time he would spend traveling with Miss Hawkins, but far more than trebled in another respect. The young lady might be confined to her room by seasickness on the voyage, while on land this was not to be expected, and a couple with nothing to do but to see sights are in a fair way to fall each under the other's influence.

The partnership between the late Mr. Girard and Mr. Hawkins was purely a matter of business, and their families had not met. Indeed, there was only one person in Mr. Hawkins' family, his daughter, whom he had left abroad when she was twelve years old. She knew nothing about his business affairs, not even that he was part owner of the Girard-Hawkins company.

Therefore when Ned Girard was introduced to her he was simply Mr. Girard and nothing more. He did not enlighten her or any one else that on the successful management of a manufacturing enterprise their future status in respect to wealth or poverty depended. Nevertheless it was not likely that a girl of seventeen could be dawdling through the picture galleries of Florence or over the seven hills of Rome with an attractive fellow of twenty-three without feeling any interest in him.

It is not only the fact that young couples traveling for pleasure have nothing to do but enjoy each other's society that conduces to their becoming attached to each other. There is something in the novelties they see together that adds to the enthrallment. This is especially true of Italy. The enchantment that prevails in the medieval city of Florence is enough to bring about a love affair between a Cyclops and a Medusa. There is the river Arno that runs through it, the bridges, including that antique structure, the Ponte Vecchio, and the historic associations, all inclosed within a circle of beautiful hills which look as if they had been retouched by a divine painter with higher colors than nature is wont to lay on.

And Remel Girard, who had been there before and was well versed in its historic lore, took the girl to the Pincian hill and showed her the panorama of the city, the old Campus Martius, the tomb of Hadrian, colossal St. Peter's, flanked by the long hill range, the Janiculum. He may have had business in mind, but his tongue told of the building of the Eternal City. Then he took her to the Forum, the Coliseum, the baths of Caracalla, and all the while he made these structures live again with a people of 2,000 years agone.

There was time before sailing from Naples to visit Pompeii, where not far distant a light smoke was curling from the mountain that had poured forth fire and smoke, followed by the white ashes which had buried the city, to be forgotten for eighteen centuries. At Sorrento there were the ever changing colors of the bay of Naples spread out several hundred feet below them. In the quiet of an orange grove Girard told the little girl his "story." Naturally she listened to it with rapture.

The ocean voyage over, the party separated at the dock at New York. Girard did not tell his fiancee of the business relationship existing between them. He did not care to run any unnecessary risk. They would be brought together in a business way soon enough, and then the struggle for mastery between her lover and her guardian would commence. Girard told her that he lived in the same location as herself, but nothing more.

"Goodby for the present," he said at leaving her. "In a few days I will be with you again."

Gerard on reaching home sought the guardian of the half interest in the Gerard-Hawkins company at his office and in an interview flatly declared that he would not consent to the gentleman assuming control of the enterprise.

"Very well," was the reply. "I will not consent to any one else than myself assuming the control."

"You are not the owner of the property. You are merely the guardian of a part owner. She may not assent to your claim. If she represents to the chancery court that she believes your management will wreck her property she will be protected."

"My ward has every confidence in me."

"So be it," replied Gerard, risking all on the love he had won. "Bring me to your ward and let her choose between us. If she supports you in your claim I agree that you shall become president and manager of the company."

"Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock she shall be here."

Whether the strength of young love for a stranger would be stronger than reliance on an elderly man, her father's brother, Gerard did not know, but he did not believe that the guardian would not long struggle successfully against the young love. At the appointed hour he went to Hawkins' office, and the ward arrived a few minutes later. On seeing Ned she stood for a moment like a statue, then threw herself into his arms.

Her guardian did not then call upon her to choose between himself and Ned. There had been something between these two of which he was ignorant. Ned and his fiance left the office together and Hawkins proceeded in due time to investigate what had happened. But Ned was in every respect ahead of him. The lovers had no sooner left the office than Ned told his fiancee the whole story. But this was not necessary to win her to his purpose. Love was quite enough for that.

After an interview between the lovers Isabel consented to leave everything to Ned, and he was authorized to tell her guardian that Ned was her duly appointed agent to carry out any plan that he considered to be a benefit to the property. But the guardian could not be seated till Isabel came of age, and that would not be for half a year at least.

Hawkins advised Ned of dishonorable conduct, but it was of something. Under instructions Isabel should consent to nothing her uncle insisted upon, giv-

MUSIC'S RE-CREATION---what is it ?

MUSIC'S RE-CREATION is Thomas A. Edison's new art. The word Re-Creation was adopted by America's leading music critics to distinguish from talking machines the perfect musical result accomplished by Mr. Edison's new invention

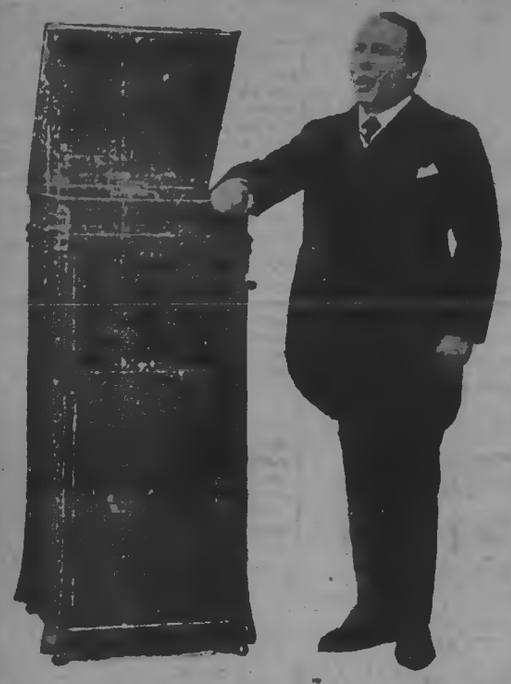
We want you to hear examples of this new art. Come to our store, and let us play literal Re-Creations of the world's great singers and instrumentalists.



Zenatello has recently been knighted by the King of Italy

"A voice of golden tone, prodigal in its expenditure, yet responsive to every emotional shade." This great Italian tenor's voice has just been Re-Created by Edison's wonderful new art. In this picture you see the great Zenatello actually singing in direct comparison with Edison's Re-Creation of his voice, and proving conclusively that his living voice and Edison's Re-Creation of it are indistinguishable. Zenatello is one of the many great artists who have similarly proved the absolute perfection of Edison's new invention. Hear Edison's Re-Creation of Zenatello's voice and then hear Zenatello himself when you have the opportunity.

Toronto Men Went To Hull For Booze

Every Cell in Police Station Filled and More Men Needed on Force

OTTAWA, Oct. 4.—"We were absolutely at a standstill last evening to know what to do," stated Chief Greuls of the Hull police force to-day. "We did not have a rough-house, but we sure did have a full one. Every cell in the station house was occupied and last evening we broke all records since prohibition went into force in Ontario. We just managed to pick up eighteen drunks off the streets, and everyone of them paid a heavy fine this morning."

Recorder Desjardins had pity on one poor fellow who came all the way from Toronto for his glass and was fined $10 to go with a fine of five and costs, saying that he would give him more, but he did not want to stop him from clearing out for home."

"The council will have to take some measure to curtail the sale of liquor after night or the crowd will get here and our central men should they come to duty men. We must have a man always on for 'rush'."

The man whom the police claim came all the way from Toronto for a drink is J. A. Gavin. Thirteen of the number to appear in police court were residents of Ottawa.

Wife Offers To Pay Half For Divorce

Love For Another Man and His Motherless Children Prompts Her Action.

DETROIT, Oct. 6.—Love for another man and his two motherless little girls, led Verna Adair Baugher to leave her husband, Charles, and later beg him to get a divorce from her, saying that she would gladly pay half the expenses if he would set her free, according to evidence presented in Judge Knowlen's court Monday.

"I am trying to mother two of the dearest children in the world," ran Mrs. Baugher's letter to her husband. We have taught them to call me mother. I could stand anything save destroying their innocent belief in me. Wishing you success and happiness through life. God bless you.

His wife was a clerk in the Interurban cigar stand in La Porte, Ind., according to Mr. Baugher's testimony. They were married in Benton Harbour, Mich., April, 1909, and in July, 1912, Baugher testified that he asked his wife to go housekeeping. Whereupon he said she declared, "I'm going away and I won't come back." Judge Knowlen took the case under advisement.

Paradoxical as it may seem, kerosene is the best extinguisher known for fire in baled cotton. Owing to the fact that the cotton is highly compressed water will penetrate to a depth of only an inch or so. Fire in the baled cotton does not blaze, but smolders slowly, eating its way into the bale. Kerosene quickly penetrates to the centre of the mass. Owing to the low temperature at which the cotton burns, however, and to the absence of flames, the oil does not take fire, but instead chokes and smothers the fire already started. When the fire has been extinguished the bale is opened. The oil then evaporates quickly, leaving the cotton practically as good as ever.

Irish Regiments Are All Irishmen

DUBLIN, Ireland, Oct. 5.—The charge that the Irish regiments, and particularly the Dublin Fusiliers are being filled up from reserves of Englishmen and Scotsmen, is repudiated by the Colonel lately commanding the Dublin Fusiliers Battalion recruited from the commercial young men. There are, he says, not twenty men in the battalion who are not Irish and these had come in because they had Irish friends in it.

Irishmen who had been serving in English regiments had applied for transfer to the Dublin and this may have given rise to the charge. Some English regiments have been recruited almost entirely from the Irish in England, notably the Tyneside Irish which was officially called the Northumberland Fusiliers, in the lists as the 18th London regiment.

Sugar Advances Ten Cents More

The wholesale price of sugar has icreased 10 cents. It is now selling at $7.50 per barrel. The retail price will not be affected. A member of the Retail Grocers' Association stated that an increase of ten cents on the part of the wholesalers was not sufficient to warrant a raise by the retail stores.

DRIED CORN

The corn is gathered when just ready for the table husked, silk removed, and is then boiled or steamed on the ear. It is then cut off the cob and put in the drier, which consists of a wooden frame, six inches deep, of a size to fit over the top of stove. Tinned wire netting, of a finer mesh than mosquito netting, covers the bottom of the frame, the sides being solid wood. This frame is raised an inch or two above the top of the stove, so that there is a circulation of warm air under it. Put the corn on the wire netting, an inch or so thick, place drying rack on to pof stove, raised a little as advised. Turn the corn from time to time to prevent scorching, and continue the process until all moisture is evaporated, when the corn may be put away in paper bags or cereal cartons. Corn is also dried out in the sun, spread out on a muslin sheet stretched in a quilting frame, and covered with mosquito netting. The corn dries quite quickly, as the muslin stretched in the frame allows a free circulation of air. Then, when fullydry, the corn is put in a hot oven for a short time, so that it may be sterilized before putting away. The corn is cutting it off the cob for drying.

RASPBERRY CHARLOTTE.

Raspberry charlotte is made with the berries and sponge cake. Line a serving dish with little sponge cakes or ladyfingers split in two. Crush raspberries lightly and cover them with sugar. Let them stand an hour in the ice box. Then pour them on the sponge cakes and cover with whipped cream.

Frozen Tea Punch.

One quart strong tea, one-quarter cupful lemon juice, one-half teaspoonful of grated lemon rind, one and one-quarter cupfuls of sugar.

Scald the teapot; then put in the tea (the amount depends on the kind and strength of the tea used) and cover it with five cupfuls of boiling water. Let it stand for ten minutes; then strain, and, when cold, add the sugar, lemon juice and lemon rind. Put in the freezer and freeze. Serve in tall glasses with a thin slice of each glass for decoration.

Chocolate Cake.

This is an excellent chocolate cake. I wish some one would try it and report. Three tablespoons butter and one cup sugar creamed. Add two eggs, one at a time, one-half cup milk, and then one and an eighth cups bread flour, two and a half level teaspoons baking powder, one-quarter teaspoon salt and one-half teaspoon cinnamon sifted together, and last two squares of melted chocolate.

To Remove Mildew.

A good way to remove mildew is to let the article stand in sour milk or hot vinegar, and after standing about two hours, pour hot water on spot and put out in the hot sun. I think you will find the mildew all gone when article is dry.

BRAN BREAD.

One simple receipt is to make the sponge as usual with white bread, and when it is well risen knead in enough bran to make a bread dough. For another, soak one yeast cake in one cupful of tepid water and when dissolved stir it into a mixture of one cupful of graham flour, one cupful of bran and half a teaspoonful of salt. Set in a warm place and let it rise for an hour. Then beat in a quarter of a cupful of melted butter and knead in another cupful of bran. Shape into two loaves, place in greased pans and when they have risen to twice the original size bake in a moderate oven for about forty-five minutes.

BAKED POTATOES.

Maid of the Mist Breaks Down Near Falls

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT., Oct. 5.—The Maid of the Mist broke its propeller shaft when within a few yards of the foot of the Horseshoe Falls on the Steamer's last trip of the day shortly after 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Twenty-six passengers were taken off in life-boats and landed on the lower bank of Goat Island. There was no panic. A majority of the crew of seven remained on the boat.

The vessel is in no danger, being anchored about two hundred feet from the shore of Goat Island off Tindale Rock.

"The trouble with women in politics is that they do too much spite work," said Agnes Riddle, late member of the Colorado Legislature.

TO-MORROW IS TAG DAY HELP THE CHILDREN

BRITISH ARE VICTORIOUS ON THE SOMME AND ALSO IN MACEDONIA

General Haig's Troops Advance Their Positions Further East in the Direction of Bapaume---British Troops Defeat Bulgarians Who Are Retreating Before Them --Town Occupied After An Artillery Attack--Macedonian Campaign Developing Favourably.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, October 6.—British troops north of the Somme advanced their position further east in the fighting northeast of Eaucourt L'Abbaye in the direction of the Bapaume highway, it was officially announced to-day.

South of the Ancre Brook there was considerable artillerying during the night. East of Loos and east of Hohenzierres General Haig's men discharged gas successfully, and near Loos and south of Arras conducted successful raids on the enemy trenches.

LONDON, October 6.—The two Allied armies fighting their way toward Monastir, the Bulgarian base in Southwestern Serbia, have defeated the Bulgars in pitched battles driving them back in disorder. Southwest of Monastir the French and Russian detachments having occupied the village of Buf and Popli, are pushing their advance toward the Serbo-Greek frontier with the greatest vigor. The Allied and Bulgar troops are battling for the possession of the hills leading down to Monastir. Official despatches from Bucharest to-day admitted that the Roumanians have retired across the Danube after making a successful raid on Bulgarian soil, but brought no confirmation of the Bulgarian official report that about 15,000 Roumanian troops were wiped out.

Suggested Blockade of British Harbours

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, October 6.—A submarine blockade of certain English harbours was suggested to the Government by several leaders of the Von Tirpitz faction, advocating a resumption of submarine warfare, it was learned to-day. The Von Tirpitz supporters offered this suggestion as a compromise. They urged that such a course would be in accord with the Chancellor's announced determination of prosecuting a vigorous war against England, and would cut off English food and ammunition supplies without endangering the lives or property of neutrals. The Government is not impressed by the suggestion, and there is not at present any indication that it will be put into force.

As a matter of fact this style of blockade has been tried by the German submarines, but failed miserably when some of the submarines were sunk and others captured by the British patrol boats.

Violent Bombardment On Verdun Front

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official Communique), October 6.—A violent bombardment broke out on the northeastern front of Verdun last night, after several weeks of inactivity, the War Office announced to-day. The artillerying, evidently a prelude to severe fighting, was the heaviest in the Cote Poivre and Lacize Wood sectors. The artillery on both sides was very active on the Somme front. Near Quennevieres a French patrol cleaned up a German supporting trench with grenades.

Bulgarians Retreat Before the British

Examiner Special:

SALONIKA, October 6.—Bulgarian troops are retreating before the British on the Struma front, said an official statement issued by General Sarrail. At the same time violent fighting has broken out on the Allies' right wing General Sarrail reported. The battle is raging with great intensity on the entire Moorili-Kenali-Gradesnika line.

The town of Nevolen was occupied by the British with loss after a brief artillery attack.

Warning Sent By Allies To Holland

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

ROME, October 6.—The Allies have informed the Dutch Government that any move toward peace on the part of Holland would be construed as a pro-German act, it was learned to-day. (This is the first hint that Holland has been feeling out peace sentiment among the European belligerents).. Exactly when this information was sent to The Hague is not known here. The fact that such action was taken was disclosed in a discussion of the Lloyd George interview warning neutrals not to interfere at this time. Well informed circles here say that the Allies are reconciled to the probability that war will last at least three years more.

Berlin Admits The Retreat of Bulgars

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, October 6.—Bulgarian troops have evacuated several villages on the east bank of the River Struma, where the British have begun an offensive, the War Office admitted to-day. In Transylvania Field Marshall Falkenhayn has driven the Roumanian's centre back across the Homorod and Olt rivers and stormed Sinca.

Russian Attacks Most Violent of War

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 6.—The Russian attacks on the eastern front are more violent than any known since the beginning of the war, according to the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger. The despatch says that near Karytruca and Zubilno Russian infantry have attacked the German lines for the last thirty-six hours without cessation. This assault was on a front of fifty kilometres, and the cannonade continued all night.

Canadians Captured 3 Miles of Territory

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 6.—In recent advances the Canadians alone have taken three square miles of Somme River territory.

MR. JUSTICE LATCHFORD AWARDS MRS. TROMBLAY THE SUM OF $2000

An Additional $600 Will Go to Mrs. Tromblay's Husband — Judgment in the Case of Tromblay Versus the City of Peterboro' in Which the Plaintiff Sought to Recover $10,000 for Injuries Received

WILL APPEAL

Mrs. Elizabeth Tromblay 536 Charlotte street has been awarded the sum of two thousand dollars by Mr. Justice Latchford as compensation for injuries sustained by falling over a projection in the sidewalk on the north side of Simcoe street, near George street, on February last. John Tromblay, husband of Mrs. Elizabeth Tromblay, will receive compensation to the amount of six hundred dollars. Included in the award is the costs, which represent a considerable sum. The case is one that was tried in Peterborough at the fall sittings of the High Court. Mrs. Tromblay instituted an action against the city to recover the sum of ten thousand dollars as compensation for bodily injuries sustained by falling over the iron cap of a water service, which, it is alleged, projected from the sidewalk.

Mr. D. O'Connell appeared for the plaintiff, while Mr. G. N. Gordon, City Solicitor, acted for the city.

Mr. Gordon will recommend that the city enter an appeal.

MAGISTRATE SHOULD REPORT CONVICTIONS TO COMMISSIONERS

License Inspector Stewart directs attention to Clause 105 of the Ontario Temperance Act, which reads as follows:

"The magistrate, justice or justices of the peace, on any conviction of any person for an offence against this Act shall send forthwith to the Board a certificate of such conviction, for which certificate he shall be allowed a fee of fifty cents, to be taxed as costs in the case."

It is evident from this that the License Commissioners desire to keep an exact record of the convictions under the new Act and take this means to encourage the magistrates to assist them.

TWO MORE PETERBORO' SOLDIERS HAVE MADE THE SUPREME SACRIFICE

Corp. Angus McIntosh of the 21st Battalion is Killed in Action and Pte. Wm. Hall Dies of Wounds--Pte. Geo. Wilkins Who Went Overseas With 39th Battalion is Missing--To-day's General Military News.

KILLED IN ACTION.

Corp. W. Angus McIntosh, 21st Battalion, 469 Cedar Street.

DIED OF WOUNDS.

Pte. Wm. Hall, 92nd Highlanders, Brownton.

Pte. Hall is survived by a wife and six children, the youngest only two months old.

MISSING.

Pte. Geo. Wilkins, 39th Battalion, 147 Lake Street.

The death of two more Peterborough soldiers at the front is announced to-day, while word has also been received that a third is missing. So far this week there have been twenty Peterborough casualties reported—four killed in action, three died of wounds, one missing, and twelve wounded.

CORP. ANGUS McINTOSH.

One of the three Peterborough Canadian-born brothers who donned the khaki and went overseas to fight for liberty, Corp. Angus McIntosh, of the 21st Canadian Battalion, and son of Mr. Angus McIntosh, 469 Cedar Street, the veteran ice-maker of the Charlotte Street Curling Rink, has made the supreme sacrifice. A message from Ottawa states that Corp. McIntosh is officially reported killed in action between September 15th and 17th. Corp. McIntosh enlisted here in September, 1914, with the 21st Battalion. He was a chauffeur by occupation, and first offered his service with a draft of motor car drivers that was being raised in this division. About a dozen local men enlisted, and were at Port Hope on their way to Kingston when a wire was received to the effect that no more men were needed, and the squad returned to Peterborough, the majority of them, including Corp. McIntosh, enlisting in the 57th quota for the 21st Battalion. Corp. McIntosh had been at the front for many months. His elder brother, Corp. Wilbert McIntosh, has recently been invalided home from the front as the result of wounds. He enlisted with the First Contingent. Still another brother, Lionel, is overseas with the 93rd Peterborough Battalion. The bereaved relatives of Corp. McIntosh will have the sincere sympathy of the community.

PTE. WM. HALL.

Mrs. William Hall, who lives in Brownton, opposite the Salvation Army Hall, received the tragic news last evening that her husband, Pte. William Hall, who went overseas with the 92nd Battalion, Toronto Highlanders, has given his life for the Empire. The official message, which was conveyed to her by Adjutant and Mrs. McElheney, was to the effect that Pte. Hall is reported died of wounds at No. 3 Casualty Clearing Station on Sept. 22. Pte. William Hall was a well-known member of the letter carriers' staff of the Peterborough Post Office. He enlisted here in the spring of last year with the local contingent to the 93rd Battalion, but when the medical examination was made at Belleville Pte. Hall was rejected and returned to Peterborough. A medical board here confirmed the diagnosis of the 39th medical officer, but the gallant letter carrier was determined to get to the front. Accordingly he went to Toronto and was accepted for the 92nd Highlanders, training with them last winter as a member of the machine gun section. Pte. Hall leaves a wife and family, residing in Brownton. He was popular with a large circle of friends, and the sad news will be deeply regretted.

PTE. GEO. WILKINS.

An official message from Ottawa this morning conveyed the sad news to Mrs. Geo. Wilkins, 147 Lake St., that her husband, Pte. Geo. Wilkins, who went overseas with the 39th Battalion, is officially reported missing between Sept. 15th and 17th. Pte. Wilkins enlisted here early last spring with the local detachment to the 39th Battalion, an went overseas with that battalion. He was at Sandling Camp for some time, and then was transferred to another battalion at the front.

Pte. Claude Montgomery of the 235th Battalion, Northern Fusiliers, is down from Camp Borden, on leave

FLAVELLE'S PLANT STILL BURNING A TOTAL LOSS

Peterboro' Fire Dept. Rendered Good Services---Butter and Eggs Poured From Building.

MAY REBUILD ELSEWHERE

LINDSAY, Oct. 6.—The fire that broke out Thursday morning in the big cold storage plant of Flavelles Limited was still burning this morning. About 6.30 p.m. yesterday the thick south wall of the main building tumbled out across the tracks, precipitating a repulsive smear of eggs and butter and other produce that spread out in the consistency of a batter to which it had been reduced in the burning plant.

Mr. J. W. Flavelle stated last night that nothing was saved, and at that time the fire had reached the freezing rooms. He added that the building and stock was practically covered by insurance, which is held by Lloyd's.

May Leave Lindsay.

It is generally believed here that Lindsay will lose this important industry that has long been a feature of the town's business. The company may move to Toronto or to Peterborough, but there is nothing definitely known yet in this regard. It will be a big loss to this town if the Flavelle firm decides to rebuild elsewhere, as there were one hundred and fifty employees on the payroll.

Produce For Export.

The plant was packed to the roof with this summer's stocks of produce, which were being held for export to the Old Country, where Flavelle Limited have an extensive and direct connection. Butter, eggs, cheese, and other valuable goods, including furs, were either consumed or rendered valueless by the fire.

Peterborough Brigade's Assistance.

The Peterborough Fire Department, in charge of Chief Howard and eight men, arrived here yesterday afternoon and within forty-eight minutes after their departure from Peterborough, they had two streams of water playing on the fire. It is generally regarded here that had Peterborough's aid been solicited early in the morning the fire would have been overcome in a short time. Chief Howard and his men worked all night, and at 10.30 this morning had accomplished all that was possible, as the building was far gone when they reached here. The Peterborough engine was loaded on the truck at 11 a.m. and preparations were under way for the return trip over the C.P.R. Chief Bell of the local department, thanked the Peterborough brigade, and in reply Chief Howard complimented the Lindsay firemen upon the manner in which they had fought the fire.

The fire was confined to the Flavelle was splendid, but the singme, probably from protracted desuetude, did not work smoothly at first, appearing to be somewhat tight. However, Lindsay appreciates the aid that was so promptly rendered, and the Peterborough firemen were well received.

The fire was confined to the Flavelle plant, which it completely destroyed, at a loss that runs close to $300,000.

This afternoon the mass was still burning, but had almost spent itself.

HARD FIGHTING FOR CANADIANS IN PAST WEEK

Germans Reinforced by Fresh Troops Have Opposed a Desperate Resistance, but Canadian Line Was Materially Advanced, Says Eye-witness

HAND-TO-HAND FIGHTING

Special to The Examiner.

OTTAWA, Oct. 6. — Reviewing the fighting of the past week, the Canadian eye-witness on the western front, says in part, that severe fighting continued almost without cessation on our front during the past week. The Germans brought up reinforcements and fresh troops, and opposed at times a desperate resistance to our advance. Attacks were succeeded by counter-attacks and certain portions of the trenches were the scene of sanguinary hand to hand struggles. The artillery duel and the artillery concentration upon the infantry trenches was terrible, nevertheless the endurance, courage and cheerfulness of our men were beyond praise, and their attacks were delivered with an unabated fury. In the east and north of Courcelette our line was materially advanced. There for the first time since the Canadians have participated in the war, cavalry patrols were employed to maintain touch with the enemy.

Tickets In Scalper's Hands

Marquard Will Face Leonard or Ruth in First Game

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 6.— Despite the precautions of the National Commission hundreds of coveted pasteboards for the Red Sox Dodgers' opening have found their way into the hands of scalpers, and they are plying their trade with little or no restraint. Five dollars is being asked and received for tickets admitting one to the two dollar section. The majority of the betting to-day is ten to seven that the Red Sox will win the series.

The umpires for the first game to-morrow are Quigley and O'Day of the National League, and Dineen and Connolly of the American League. For the first game the probable batteries are For the Dodgers, Marquard and Meyers, and for the Red Sox, Leonard or Ruth and Carrigan.

Just give a hand to make the Children's Aid Tag Day the very biggest success the Society has ever accomplished.

Tea was served at 5:00, Miss Sue Kelly acting as hostess assisted by Misses Lillian Simons and Irene Dorris. 20 YEARS FOR DUCKWORTH

Man Once Sentenced to Death Pleads Guilty to Manslaughter.

ORANGEVILLE, Oct. 5.—Thomas Duckworth, of Grand Valley, was sentenced to twenty years' hard labour in Kingston Penitentiary by Chief Justice Falconbridge.

Duckworth pleaded guilty to manslaughter. He shot his brother-in-law, Harry Strutt, during a quarrel that took place when Duckworth was to be ejected by his landlord from his home. He was sentenced to death last spring when first tried on a murder charge, and his execution was set for May 12th last. A new trial was granted. Duckworth has been a model prisoner in jail.

Duckworth, who is 20 years of age, had expected a much shorter sentence.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, OCT. 6, 1916

ONE THING ESCAPES.

It is a matter for thankfulness that there is one thing that has escaped the clutch of high prices. It is remarked that the [illegible] of life insurance is about [illegible] thing that is not advanced in [illegible] This is stated by an insurance company; but it forgotten to mention that another important element in our living, the newspaper, except in a few instances, has not increased in price, though the cost of almost everything entering into its production has greatly advanced in price. If newspapers should be compelled to advance prices, they have the excuse that the question of existence is involved—a legitimate excuse that does not apply to the exaggeration of price of other things, especially food products.

THINK OF THE CHILDREN.

We should not only think of neglected and dependent children in the abstract but we should think of them to-morrow in the concrete matter of dollars and cents. Money is required to [illegible] certain number of rescued children in the Shelter till they are put into happy and comfortable foster homes. When one is approached to-morrow by a fresh wholesome, happy, and of course, pretty, girl, asking to pin a decoration on one's lapel, she should be welcomed as giving the opportunity to do a deed of mercy and humanity at a moderate cost. By donating even a few cents it is within the possibility that one is helping to give to society in the future another as healthy happy and wholesome girl as the one who solicits one's largess—some fortunate unfortunate doomed to a life of suffering, physical and moral, except for the intervention of the Children's Aid Society, which systematically does for neglected and dependent children what no private benevolence, however large, can do. A little donated by all who can do so, will realize the [illegible] aimed at by the officials of the society. Everyone should come into the scheme to-morrow, provided with small change—there is no hard and fast stipulation that it shall be small [illegible] the beneficent assault [illegible] some kind solicitor.

THERE ARE REASONS.

There seems to be ample justification for asking why the Borden Government, not content with discouraging and virtually killing recruiting [illegible] by encouraging, by tolerating the campaign of the Nationalists, organized by Bourassa, must go one [illegible] and kill the recruiting spirit on its own official action. It is reported and is a fact, that Oliver Asselin, a noted journalist and Nationalist, broke with Bourassa on the war issue, and sought permission from the Government to raise a battalion. He completed his battalion, which was recruited, and expected [illegible] to go to the front. But by some sort of juggling the French Canadian regiment was degraded to the level of the comic opera military force, the "home-guard." It was sent to do the tiresome and tedious and insignificant work of garrison duty at Bermuda. In this connection, the Toronto Star pertinently says:

> A question that calls for an answer and to which a correct answer will yet be found, is this: How is it that Bourassa and Lavergne were able to exercise in the Borden Government and the Militia Department sufficient influence to cause Oliver Asselin and his battalion to be banished to the West Indies to a quiet and inglorious garrison duty instead of being sent to the firing line of Britain, Belgium and France, where they all were expected to go?
>
> How was this worked? How did it happen that in this way Into Bourassa's hands, banishing and disappointing Oliver Asselin and his volunteers, who might have gone to Britain and France, but were instead subordinated to an officer-of-the-war-office whose duty would be [illegible] and [illegible] and there discontent would naturally grow up in the ranks.

Was this merely a dunce-head play on the part of the Government or was it something worse?

Is it any surprise that, with an action like this—wet-blanketing a French-Canadian battalion and marooning it on an island as far as possible from the glorious strife of the battlefield — recruiting is slow in Quebec, when it is thus discouraged after it has been blasted and blighted by the disloyal and hostile element of Nationalism strongly represented in the Borden Government?

We pour out money in double measure to permit the Government to help win the war. We do our part, and have a right to ask if the Government is doing its part in taking no practically active part or interest in recruiting, and doing and permitting things to retard recruiting. Only the dullest and most mischevious partisanship can condone or defend such things, as well as condone the partisanship and patronage that leads to such incidents as the trouble in the Norfolk battalion, and interferes in battalion organization not a thousand miles from the 3rd Military District? The only "pull" that is to be tolerated in this war game is the pull-all-together of the government administrators and the people of both parties. In this world crisis the words of Macaulay, slightly revised, should be made true:

Now none are for a party;
Now all are for the state.

CHERISH OUR PULPWOOD.

We have good cause to urge upon the governments of the country, especially the government of Ontario, the important necessity of preserving our forests, particularly our pulp wood forests, from destruction by fire. It is to be remembered that pulp is a very important thing in our scheme of national production. A despatch to the New York Sun from Washington says:—

> "Over two-thirds of the more than a billion pounds of wood-pulp imported into the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and used in the manufacture of paper, came from Canada," according to a communication to the National Geographical Society from John Oliver La Gorce and issued by the society as a bulletin in connection with the government's inquiry into the increase in the cost of newspaper.
> "The pulp importations for 1915-16 have been 180,000,000 pounds less than for the previous twelve months, yet the amount shipped to us from Canada during the past year was 130,000,000 pounds in excess of her 1914-15 shipments.
>
> "During the year just closed nearly 70 per cent. of our 1,135,000,000 pounds of pulp came from our neighbor to the north, while most of the remainder came from Norway and Sweden."

Canada has immense pulp wood resources; but they are not inexhaustible, unless better conservation and reforesting methods are practiced than we now have any reason to hope for. Canada seems to be unable to overcome the mania for reckless exploitation of our forest resources that have been inherited from the time when, in our early days the forest that stood thick on every acre of fertile soil was regarded as a enemy to be dealt with by, blade and blaze, the axe and fire. The people, however, show some signs of returning sanity in a disposition to economize, perhaps in a weak and ineffective way; economy and care in the exploitation of our forests. They begin to realize the fact of their value all the greater from their rapid disappearance. But our governments, especially the Ontario government seems to have no practical sense of the value of our timber resources, or they would have taken some really useful steps to prevent destruction from forest fires, which as has been done this year, have in a few hours destroyed more pulp wood stands, more potential paper, than years of cutting for manufacturing purposes even with the present abnormal demand. After the great forest fires of 1911, the government was approached virtually on bended knees, and besought to enact legislation that would, as experience elsewhere had proven, very greatly prevent forest fires. They were urged by legislation to prevent the putting out of settler's fires for clearing purposes, without a government permit, whose issuance would take cognizance of the condition of minimum danger that would justify a permit to issue. Such legislation was indicated and has been justified by the great fire of last summer, due without any reasonable doubt, to settler's clearing fires being put out in the wrong season and further justified by the fact that similar legislation has been effective in precipating to a very great degree, the occurrence of fires in British Columbia, the Maritime Provinces and Quebec. In some way governments are necessary evils—more conspicuous, in some things—as demonstrating agents of how not to do things, than for effective accomplishment.

INFLUENCE OF SILENT VOTE ON PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION

While there seems to be a prevalent view that Mr. Wilson will be defeated for the United States presidency, the President himself relies a good deal upon "the silent vote", which he expects to be more in evidence this year than it has ever been before. A very general breaking away from old political lines is recognized, but the indications would seem to be that this break is more likely to benefit the Republican candidate than it is the Democratic nominee.

Referring to the existing perplexities, The New York Times says:

The spring primaries showed apparently chaotic results if viewed in any other light. In one congressional primary, held in January, one of the candidates appealed for votes as an opponent of President Wilson on the issue of 'militarism.' This was the Fifth Mississippi where Congressman Witherspoon, whose death has left a vacancy, had taken the same attitude, and this candidate believed it popular in that district. The issue was clearly made, and his opponent, Mr. Venable, was elected. Then came the anti-conscription spring primaries, which bewildered the politicians, but which should have not bewildered them if read by the only lamp they refused to use. Senator William Alden Smith, who expected as a matter of course the empty compliment of a nomination as Michigan's favorite son, was defeated by Henry Ford, who was not in any real sense a candidate, but whose name was on the ballot, and therefore offered an easy alternative for the protest vote against Smith; Senator Thummings, the regular and apparent unopposed candidate in Nebraska, was a minority nominee and nearly defeated by Ford, while thousands of voters took the trouble to write other names on their ballots—more than half as many, in fact, as voted for Cummings; La Follette was at first reported defeated in Wisconsin; Nebraska denied to Bryan even the pleasure of going as a delegate to the convention. The theory that Ford's vote indicated that the voters were crazy over pacifism was discounted by the defeat of Bryan, a pacifist, and the theory that the liquor interests accomplished that feat encountered the objection that Bryan's candidate for the Senate, was I. J. Dunn, attorney for a brewery, opponent of the early closing law, and also defeated. Nothing seemed sure except that the voters were registering their deep disapproval of something—something, to the politicians, as yet unknown.

Republican hopes of success cluster about the German-American vote, but that vote, too, is very puzzling, in Ohio. This was Frank S. Monnett, ex-attorney general of the state, whose services to Germany had been so great as to lead to his indictment by the federal government; not only a pro-German, but a pro-German martyr. He ran for the vice-presidential nomination against Marshall, and the German-Americans had a chance to register at least a protest vote against the administration. He was beaten by about four to one. He also ran for delegate to the St. Louis convention, still as a pro-German candidate, and was decisively beaten even for that. Another interesting "puzzle" presented itself in the September primaries in New York state. The candidate for the Republican nomination for governor were Senator Calder, who pussy-footed to the German vote, and Robert Bacon, who entered the field at the last moment on a stalwart American platform. The result was that Calder's expected majority of 75,000 was reduced to about 5,000. In Calder's home town, despite the exhortations of the Staats-Zeitung, Bacon ran better in the German districts than in most of the others.

In Ohio, Myron T. Herrick, ex-ambassador to France, ran for the Senate, Harry M. Daugherty, his opponent, thought to capture the German vote by attacking Herrick as the friend of France. Daugherty is popular, widely known, and one of the keenest politicians in the state. He was defeated. On the Democratic side ex-Congressman John J. Lentz ran as a pro-German candidate against Senator Pomerene, and made a campaign entirely on that issue; he, too, was defeated. Again, as in the spring, Ohio proved that the Germans, in the main, vote as Americans, and not as Germans, and that whether they do or not, the man who truckles to them must be prepared to meet the loss of more American votes than he can gain from the hyphenated.

And so, because of the silent vote, and the apparent refusal of the German-Americans to deliver the goods expected of them, American politicians are greatly mystified, and, despite the "straws" of The New York Herald and the result of the Maine elections, are none too certain how the presidential cat will jump in November.—Brantford Expositor.

NO BACK SEAT FOR SIR SAM.

The London Daily Sketch says Sir Sam Hughes is fond of driving about the streets there in a big open car, sitting with the chauffeur on the front seat. Did it think that Sir Sam would take a back seat?—Hamilton Times.

THE GEATEST PEOPLE.

Take them by and large, the bad with the good, the crooked with the straight, the English seem to have the best claim to be rated the greatest people now on earth. They combine more power with more character, more vigour with more wise corruptions, than any other people.—Life, New York.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Canada is requested by the Governor-General's proclamation to observe next Monday as a day of Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings of the harvest. That implies, necessarily, offering thanks for the opportunity to gather the harvest in peace, due to the Providential oversight which enabled our Navy and Army to check the onslaught of the enemy, who had planned the subjugation of our whole Empire.

We have been brought warningly near to the total destruction of our invaluable wheat crop by rust, and delivered from the ruin that would have brought to thousands Our grain crops are really well up to the average of the years, now apparently so far away, before the war. Our fruits have done well for us, the sea has probably never yielded a more valuable harvest.

And the long growing time discipline of waiting in patient resistance at the battle-front is over at last. Our noble troops are now pushing back the brutal and treacherous enemy out of the countries he ruthlessly devastated in his mad rush for world domination. Our foodstuffs will be converted into the capital Canada needs, without serious interference from him.

One day in the year is little enough to set apart for the expression of thanks for mercies such as these, and for the acknowledgment of our entire dependence upon the beneficence of our father's God.

There will be some huskiness, a little faltering, some moisture about the eyes, in some homes as the offering of thanks is made, but the obligation of sheer duty will lead us all alike to cry:

> "We thank Thee then, O Father,
> For all things bright and good,
> The seed-time and the harvest,
> Our life, our health, our food."

tor a few days. Pte. Montgomery will be remembered by hockey fans as goal keeper for the Electrics Hockey team last year, and also as goalie for the 63rd team in their exhibition game at the end of the season. He says the 39th Battalion have lucky talent fighting with a dozen professionals in their midst, as well as a dozen of crack amateurs. They will be stationed in Toronto this winter, and will have a team in the N. H. A., and probably junior and senior O. H. A. teams as well.

PTE. MURPHY DEAD.

Mr. J. Murphy, Smith street, has received word that his brother, Pte. Frank Murphy, who went overseas with a British Columbia battalion, has died of wounds sustained in the recent fighting. Pte. Murphy was a resident of Peterborough until a few years ago, when he removed to Arrowhead, B.C. He enlisted with one of the British Columbia units. Two other brothers are in khaki, one overseas and the other at Camp Borden. Pte. Frank Murphy was well known here and many friends will regret to hear of his death.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

PRETTY SOFT FOR BYRON

Former Local Bank Clerk, Member of Sam Hughes Overseas Militia Council —Incidentally He is Sam's Son-in-law

JUST INCIDENTALLY

Major Byron Green who a few days ago was a member of the local branch of the Bank of Montreal and was prominent in local sporting circles is breaking into prominence in a new line An Ottawa despatch says:

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 5.—The appointment of Col. A. D. McRae, Brigadier-General Lockie, Col. F. Reid, and Major Byron Green as an acting overseas militia council is news to the authorities in Ottawa. The appointment of the council has apparently not received the sanction either of the Militia Council or of the Privy Council here and the personal of the new council has not received their approval.

While there has been talk for some time past of appointing such a council to cooperate with the Canadian Militia Council, it is not believed here that constitutional authority by order-in-Council has yet been given for its creation. In other words, the new body which contains General Hughes' son-in-law, Major Green, as one of its members, has been appointed by General Hughes himself right off his own bat. It is considered very unlikely that the new body will assume its new duties until official sanction has been received from Ottawa.

Col. McRae was formerly connected with the Canadian Northern, with headquarters at Duluth. The cable received to-day states that Col. McRae will be Acting Deputy Minister on the Council, Brigadier-General Lockie, Acting Chief of the General Staff, Col. F. A. Reid, Acting Quartermaster-General in the absence of Col. George Murphy, and Major Byron Green, Acting Director of Personal Services.

Byron Green was a banker before the war and married Miss Robie Hughes, daughter of the Minister.

C. P. R. OVERHAULING ITS BIG LINERS

The C.P.R. is going to [illegible] its tarns-Pacific liners at the beginning of the new year. The boats will be laid up at dry[illegible] for renovation a[illegible] The Empress of Asia will be the first to be laid up. She will be out of commission for about a month. The Empress of Russia and Empress of Japan will be laid up in turn—the former having a month and the latter 20 days at Hong Kong. The big liners are kept in the best of trim, being all thoroughly overhauled once a year. The Empress of Asia and Empress of Russia have not been completely overhauled since they were released from the Admiralty service, toward the latter part of last year. The Montcalm, which is now on her way across the Pacific, was recently overhauled at Hong Kong.

SAYS BARN BURNING NOT HUN WORK, BUT DUE TO COMBUSTION

Says Local Authorities Should Wake Up—Earl Clay Delinquent.

Sarnia, Oct. 6.— Deputy Fire Marshal Dickie, of Toronto, who has been investigating the cause of the numerous fires throughout this district, left for Watford, and stated before leaving that there was no truth in the reports that pro-Germans were in a plot to curtail the food supply of Ontario, but that most of the fires resulted from combustion.

He also stated that this county contained more weeds than any other county he had visited, and that some steps should be taken by the authorities to have these weeds destroyed.

AGED WYOMING MAN IS KILLED ON FARM BY GRAVEL CAVE-IN

Discovery is Made by Daughter Not Far From Home. Funeral Friday.

WYOMING, Oct. 6.— Moses Simmons, aged 72 years, met a tragic death on his farm, the result of the caving in of a gravel pit in which he was working alone.

The discovery was made by his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Wilkinson, with whom he lived the fatality occurring not far from the home.

Mrs. Wilkinson summoned help, and the body was promptly released, and Dr. D. Reid summoned, but life was extinct. Dr. Reid being coroner, decided an inquest was unnecessary, as death was obviously due to suffocation.

Mr. Simmons was well known in Middlesex County. He was born near Delaware, and lived many years on the second concession of Caradoc.

Mr. Simmons is survived by his daughter, Mrs. Wilkinson, a granddaughter, one sister, Mrs. Bowering, at Lambeth, and two brothers, Willis and Donald of Michigan.

VIEWS GERMAN LINES THIRTY YARDS AWAY

VISITOR PICKS UP MANY SOUVENIRS, INCLUDING AN ODD CONTRIVANCE FOR MAKING FIRE IN RAIN.

London.—The battlefield of the Somme, as seen through a periscope, from the first line trenches of the British, or to be more exact, German trenches which had been captured by General Haig's men in the great Anglo-French advance, is described by an observer who was permitted to visit the lines. The observer's story has just been made public by the Official Intelligence Bureau. The description is as follows:

"Thirty yards from the Germans — such was my privileged situation when in the company of a distinguished cavalry captain I took stock of matters at the outer edge of a system of trenches which eight days before was captured by an Anglo-Scotch combination of our troops.

"The captain and I had the place to ourselves, and a more peaceful spot no one could desire. Less than a stone's throw away, with only a few barrowloads of clay as an intervening shield, was the mighty Prussian military machine, which must be credited, no doubt, with an earnest abstract desire to kill, no only my military associate, but also my civilian self. On the other hand there was I unprovided with so much as an umbrella wherewith to defend myself; and I must confess to a momentary curiosity as to the probable course of events if that military machine were suddenly to let loose its power and fury against us, or at any rate, if some of its more venturesome spirits were to scramble on to the level and come vaulting over the earthworks.

"'Ah!' said the captain, when I put the suggestion before him. 'I only wish that they would try it on.'

"And having let slip the word 'level,' in allusion to the narrow belt of land occurring between the hostile front trenches, I must hasten to explain that so far as surface conditions are concerned, no word could be more grossly inapplicable.

"Grass hillocks we know. Sand dunes we know. Plowed land we know. But they reveal elements of symmetry and uniformity, and that fire swept belt of No Man's Land was wholly unlike any of them. It had been smitten, crumpled, lashed, upturn and scarified by cascades of exploding shells until its surface of lawless irregularity found no parallel in the aspect either of land in any accustomed condition or of water in any familiar state of disturbance, whether as a whirlpool, cataract or temptuous sea. It was a landscape, desolate and dead, without leaf or grass blade—indeed, one could not but suppose that even the worms, insects and seeds had been involved in the general doom.

SEEN THROUGH A PERISCOPE.

"Some fifty yards back we had come upon an officer taking observations through a periscope; and he had courteously placed the instrument at my disposal. Thus I had my first vision of a paradoxical region which while it looks to be lonely and empty, happens to be no less densely populated than a congested city.

"In that first revelation of the enemy's front, the only outstanding features were gaunt relics of trees that had been murdered and maimed. For the rest, it was a khaki-colored foreground of clay, wherein the German advanced line was indistinguishable as a cutting that held a dark streak of shadow. Moreover, in front of that streak of shadow was a squalid higgledy-piggledy of tins and tatters that had been flung over the parapet to get them out of the way—discarded articles that did not stand forth conspicuous by any distinction of color or tone but which having been churned up with the landscape by high-explosives, had become muddied over by the clay in which they were partly imbedded.

Not, however, that the image in the periscope enabled me to grasp all that detail. But a minute later without the aid of reflectors, I saw on the other side of the trench a belt of clay which, if not actually No Man's Land, had been No Man's Land eight days before, and has not since undergone alteration. At least some trifling modification had now begun on the further fringe, where a party of Tommies were engaged in abstracting from the earth the muddiest of rags and nondescript oddments. That at any rate represents the impression made upon the eye by articles of equipment which had been buried by bombardment but which, it seemed, would be once more serviceable when cleaned and renovated.

"Presently my attention was called to the ground level. The captain picked up and handed to me the trenching tool of a German soldier—a tool which in size, was a compromise between a spade and a trowel, and which besides being of no use as a pick could not be carried so easily as the English tool made in two parts. That little alien spade, however, was noteworthy for its structural strength, the sturdy ash handle being firmly fixed in a double collar of steel, and the shoulders of the blade being of twofold thickness and heavily riveted.

"'If you like,' said the captain, 'you may keep it as a souvenir.'

"But my eager acquaintance was interrupted by a cheerful lad who, preferring me another German trenching tool, said:

"'Perhaps you would rather have this one, as I think that it is rather a better specimen.'

"Nor was his judgment at fault. The handle instead of being of uniform thickness throughout, ended in a knob (on which by the way, the letter 'W' had been roughly carved).

"Rummaging about in the mud the Captain and I found other articles that the former occupants of the trench had left behind them.

"One was a round metal box with a hinged lid which when opened disclosed fixed contents covered by wire gauze, suggesting that those contents were destined to be saturated with a fluid giving off fumes available either for heating or for healing. This mysterious little apparatus supplemented a mask, the captain said, as a remedy against gas. From the interior, when at last I had succeeded in prying it out, there dripped a liquid which caused deep discoloration in a pool of muddy water.

AN ODD FIRE LIGHTER.

"I was better able to appreciate the ingenuity shown in another contrivance of which we found several examples. I refer to the German fire lighters. Much rain had recently fallen and the trenches thereabouts held a quantity of water; so, instead of keep their fuel dry, our foes had provided themselves with waterproof combustibles. Sticks saturated with bitumen, accompanied by strips of celluloid, were swathed in shavings, the whole being bound together by a covering of wire netting. Such fuel could be in the water one minute and in a blaze the next; and note that, instead of that inflammable bundle swiftly flaring away through falling apart, its mechanical cohesian insured slow combustion.

"Suddenly my attention was recalled to regions above. A group of aeroplanes was in view, being attended, as usual, by those puffs of woolly whiteness that glow so prettily, like dainty little clouds. And here, perhaps, I may mention that the sight of such aircraft maneuvring overhead, apparently not caring twopence for the shells sent up after them, had been of daily occurrence—it would scarcely be an exaggeration to say, of hourly occurrence—during the succession of fine days I had spent at the front; with the result that an exhibition which at first was fascinating enough, had by repetition lost the power to hold my attention. True, a brisker interest was always stimulated, when instead of shells, opposition took the form of rival planes; and the air battle under consideration swiftly developed that character.

"No schoolboy could have been more interested than was my friend the Captain. He brought his glasses to bear on the affair, and was soon making noteworthy discoveries.

"'That's a fine machine just coming up,'" he was presently exclaiming. 'How wide the wings are, and what a pace she is going at! Have a look at her,' and most obligingly he handed me his glasses."

GERMAN COLONEL SAYS MEN SCARED

Tells Troop Couple Englishman Can Frighten Crowd.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—A despatch to the Daily Mail from the Somme says:

"The following order, signed by a German colonel, has been found:

"The demand for our artillery barrage fire and the nervous fire of our rifles, because an unseen bomber throws a few hand grenades, reveals a state of great excitement. We waste an enormous quantity of ammunition, and when we want it it is gone. Secondly, we damage ourselves in the eyes of the enemy. I have the impression that a few Englishmen throwing grenades from their trenches can thoroughly frighten a crowd of Bavarians. This is why we always silently acknowledge the superiority of the enemy without reason. This fright on the Somme front must be dispelled and calm must take its place."

A Work of Charity and Helpfulness

The giving of Charity is a work that is fraught with serious consequences. There may be some good done and there may be a large amount of harm.

It is becoming recognized that Charity giving and the dispensing of the proceeds of efforts is a profession calling for an insight into human nature.

When you give to help give to the Children's Aid. There is the security that every cent will be most worthily expended. The object, the succor of friendless and defenceless children should appeal as above all other objects.

Why Not Put it in the Hands of the Children's Aid Society?

"As careless families become educated to the fact that there is vigilant Society in existence the neglect of children will become steadily reduced, until in the future we can look for a large reduction in the number of children found in circumstances warranting removal to the care of the Children's Aid."

TAG DAY SATURDAY October 7

"The work of the Society is to receive and investigate all complaints bearing on the neglect of or cruelty to a child. This in itself is a large field. It can be fairly claimed that the work is dealt with in prompt and careful manner, investigating thoroughly and applying the needed remedy at the earliest possible moment."

Canadian Writers Get a Firsthand Idea of Shellfire

Found Soldiers Straining to Go Forward — Had Some Narrow Escapes.

(By Thomas Champion)

Canadian Headquarters in France, Oct. 6.—The party of Canadian correspondents now visiting the Somme battlefront were Wednesday in the thick of a strenuous engagement, and their appreciation of the splendid valor of our Canadian troops has gone up a hundredfold.

The Somme engagements are like the Ypres battles, many hundred times intensified. The artillery beggars description. If the reader could imagine himself closely surrounded by the continuous rapid explosion of the largest cannon crackers ever made, above which the screech and whine and roar of the heavy shells and the howls and bursting roars of Hun missles sounded incessantly, he could glean a faint idea of the noise.

The heavens and the earth reverberated as explosions occurred high in the clouds around our aeroplanes, where, by the way, there were no enemy fliers, or the shells buried themselves deep in the earth and threw mountains of dirt on high, or else exploded just above the parapet, throwing death into the trenches.

It was an ideal day. The sun shone out on an azure sky, and it was good to live. The writer, with the others, was enjoying the novelty, when there was a sudden screeching roar, and all crouched low, but only his good fortune saved the writer, as a piece of shell whizzed past his ear. Many times the press men were struck by flying stones and bits of earth as the shells burst in their immediate proximity.

The intensity of our shelling knocks the heart out of the Hun and 'Mercy, kamerad,' is his cry now, said one soldier. Our troops are full of confidence and spirit, and yesterday the officers had some difficulty in restraining them and keeping them behind our own shell fire. The correspondents are now on their way to visit the bases.

Madoc Farmer Murdered and His Money Gone

BELLEVILLE, Oct. 5.—Walter Montgomery, a middle-aged farmer and a bachelor, whose home was on on Lot 7 in the 10th concession of Madoc, has been murdered. His body was discovered in the drive-house on his farm this morning with abrasions in the back of the skull, inflicted apparently by some blunt instrument. Money that he always carried in a strap suspended from his neck was missing. Robbery was undoubtedly the motive for the deed.

Montgomery was of somewhat peculiar and eccentric habits, residing alone on his hundred-acre farm near Eldpride Mines, in the vicinity of Queensboro'. His home was a wretched hovel, but he himself was financially in comfortable circumstances. He had no confidence in banks and carried his ready money in a sort of purse that he always wore on a strap hung about his neck and inside his clothing. He was fifty-five years of age, and as far as known had no enemies.

He was seen alive for the last time on Tuesday of this week, when his near neighbour W. J. Moorecroft saw him about his premises, but yesterday he was not seen and it was suspected something was wrong. Moorecroft this morning notified Joseph Montgomery, brother of the murdered man, who resides in the same neighborhood, and a brother-in-law named Frank McMullen and the three decided to search the premises. Montgomery was found in his drive-house stark and cold. A heavy abrasion in the back of the head told the story of the murder. The body was dressed in the working clothes usually worn by deceased. A bag of apples partly filled gave evidence that he had probably been stooping over sorting apples when the blow was struck. There were many irons lying around, any one of which might have served as the instrument of death.

Dr. Harper, the Coroner at Madoc, was summoned. An autopsy was performed, and examination disclosed two contusions, and that the skull had been fractured at the back.

A jury was empannelled with William McMeecham as foreman. After viewing the remains it was decided to adjourn until Monday next for the taking of evidence. County Crown Attorney Carnew was notified and no doubt detectives will be at once.

Conscription Not Possible in Ireland

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WATERFORD, Ireland, October 6.—Addressing his constituents this afternoon John Redmond, the Irish Nationalist leader, declared that despite the recent rebellion "with all its inevitable aftermath of brutalities, stupidities and inflamed passions," Home Rule for Ireland is safe if Ireland remains sane. Mr. Redmond also declares that conscription could never be forced upon Ireland, which would forcibly resist it.

Death Seutence For Essad Pasha

LONDON, Oct. 6.—A report on the death sentence passed by a courtmartial in Constantinople on Essad Pasha, former provisional president of Albania, has been received in Amsterdam, according to a despatch to Reuter's.

The commanding general at Constantinople says in the report that Essad aPsha, was proved at his trial to have conspired with bands against the Turkish Empire and to have declared war on Turkey. By doing so, the report says, and by his hostile attitude, he rendered service to Turkey's enemies. The sentence of death was confirmed by the Sultan.

Essad Pasha was deprived of his rank in the Turkish army after he joined the Italians in Albania in January, 1916. He later went to Rome and in March left Italy for Paris where he was received by Premier Briand. He was sentenced to death at Constantinople in June and in August was reported to be commanding an Albanian contingent which landed at Saloniki.

MR. A. K. HONE NEW PRESIDENT

Summary of the Concluding Session Today—Timely Addresses on Commercial Geography and the War—Other Topics

At this morning's session of the City Teachers' Institute Mr. M. N. Clarke, B.A., discussed the subject "Are Our Schools Efficient?" Efficiency, he said, is the fitting of children to take a place in society. Often the failures of people in society are charged up to the school. The school is only one agency in fitting up a child. There are others, such as the home, and the church. All pupils are not equally endowed, and there must be an outstripping of some over others. For this reason efficiency is only a relative term. The best of efficiency is the ability to put into the soul of the child such qualities as will stand the test in times of stress. A false test is the system of tabulating results. The true system of guaging efficiency is shown by the attitude of graduates to the public school in after life.

Mr. W. C. MacPherson, B.A., L. L. B., of Queen's University, discussed some tests of the teacher's work. He said that the conscientious teacher desires to know if there is no test to find out what success he is making. What is he contributing to the word's good How shall we test the progress that pupils are making? Many teachers try to keep some tallies upon the pupils' advancement. In the United States special investigations by outside investigators have been made in the schools. Two classes of tests are applied. First, as to the value of teachers' work on character, and second, an estimate of the pupils' knowledge. He spoke of the Thorndyke for writing. Samples of writing were sent to many individuals, and these were asked to arrange them according to their ideas of their excellence. This gave a standard as to what the public regarded as good writing, and teachers could test the writing of the pupils according to this scale.

In the development of character each lesson should have a motive, should cultivate a sense of values, that is good judgment, should give some sense of organizing value, and cultivate initiative. The cultivation of initiative should be the most important aim of every lesson, but too often the pupils just accept the matter taught or told them as matter of fact. They do not question it in any way or give out their own ideas.

Pupils should be the active parties in every lesson. The teacher should only be the guide. We should aim to develop the child's resourcefulness, and not simply force ideas upon him.

Mr. McPherson also emphasized the Courtier test in arithmetic. After all, education is a development of the soul, and many things cannot be investigated, although investigations [illegible] of this subject. It is the conscientious teacher that has the greatest value in character building after all.

Mr. Downey's Address.

Mr. R. F. Downey, B.A., B. Paed., discussed the continuous training of the teacher. A teacher should always follow his bent, as it was possible for a man to lack the ability to use his ability. Beats differ, which was a good thing, indeed. Some would be more useful if they strove for higher academic standing. The universities now have many courses outlined for summer sessions. More teachers might take advantage of these. The openings for usefulness are open to the teachers who improve their standing. Get ready for wider and grander things.

From the professional side a teacher has a right to be a teacher and more than a teacher. Too many endeavour to do a minimum of service for a maximum of reward. Do we make ourselves as useful as possible? We must read professional books, good magazines, etc. Keep abreast of the times. By doing so you can kindle and inspire your pupils. Teachers should have a professional etiquette. They should be true friends to one another. They should also play and forget their troubles. A teacher who plays will have less trouble with discipline.

On the social side teachers should maintain their dignity. Retain your finesse. Meeting with other teachers broadens you, but mingle also with the outside world. It does you good to rub up against hard-headed business men. It keeps you from becoming stale. Intercourse with others has always a beneficial effect upon people.

The Teacher and the War.

Mr. L. J. Pettit, B.A., discussed the subject of the teacher and the war. One thing that made this study difficult as the immensity of it. The teacher must realise that the present struggle is not an incident. It is a repetition of the struggle in England that resulted in the accession of William III. It is a fight for democracy.

The teachings of the German philosophers have produced the sub-stratum that authorized the actions of the Germans.

The war has brought together elements seemingly incongruous. The union of Hindu and Anzac, the Russian and the British, the Cockney and the Canadian. Many historical facts which seemed formerly insignificant are now prominent. It is thus difficult to get a proper basis in fact for all the events that have taken place. In teaching the subject we aim to arouse interest and impress the essential facts, to inculcate a love of peace and to instil a feeling of loyalty to our home nation and to the principles of righteousness.

What things are useful in getting facts? One of the chief sources are the daily bulletins. We must correlate these with the facts of geography and history. Many publishers publish synopsis of the war. The pupils read pamphlets and magazine articles; such books as "Our Just Cause," "Who Caused the War?" and "Story of the War" are very valuable. Many English magazines have excellent articles dealing with the matter. However, the teacher must tell [illegible] to carry them through the summer.

And in this connection a war map is useful. Compositions on different subjects relating to the war are very useful in testing the pupils' knowledge.

Commercial Geography.

Prof. W. E. MacPherson discussed the teaching of Commercial Geography. He said that Commercial Geography is more apt to be neglected than physical, because it is more difficult and seeming repellent there are so many disappointed facts in it. How can these facts be taught to be interesting to pupils? One great essential is that the teacher be interested himself, in it.

There is no need to start commercial geography with Ontario. Start with some foreign land, as, for example, Australia, which presents interest and charm, while continually reviewing conditions locally may become wearisome and monotonous.

In this branch of geography we deal particularly with commodities, transports and markets. Commodities are not of equal value, and all commodities of a place do not need to be taught. Compare those used commonly in the household and thus get an idea of the most valuable. To teach too many is to waste time.

In teaching this subject give the pupils problems. An illustration may be taken from an English school, pupils being provided with Atlases and railway timetables are asked to find the route from London to Bristol, what time it will take to get there and what places would we pass through on the way. Such a method can be applied very generally, and is practical and useful.

Make a plentiful use of supplementary reading in this connection. There are many books and magazines that give valuable and interesting information. Use concrete illustrations such as a collection of pictures, samples of manufactures, and products. A museum is very useful, and a free use of lantern slides very beneficial. Let pupils draw maps to illustrate what they have learned.

Officers for 1917.

President—Mr. A. K. Hone, B.A.
Vice-President—Miss Malane.
Secretary-Treasurer—Miss Walker.
Executive Committee — Misses Staples, Graham, Bennett, Cameron and O'Connell, and Messrs. Vosden and Steer.

ONTARIO INDIANS STARVE?

Trading Company Abandons Yearly Credit System.

New York, Oct. 5.—An Associated Press despatch from Marshfield, Wis., to-day says:

"Indians in the northern part of Ontario are starving as a result of the action of a large trading company in abandoning a yearly credit system, according to Howard E. Pulling and Burton E. Livingstone of Baltimore, Md., research professors in plant physiology at the John Hopkins University. The two professors arrived here to-day after spending two months in the Canadian wilds near Fort Churchill, seeking specimens of vegetable and tree life for laboratory use. Many of the Indians, they declared, were unable to obtain sufficient food before the muskrat and rabbits to carry them through the summer.

MILITARY NEWS

Word has been received that Gunner R. V. O'Brien of Peterborough, reported wounded a few days ago, received a gunshot wound in the thigh.

David Gifford and Alfred Delacour, of Peterborough, have left for Kingston to join the Canadian Army Service.

OTTAWA, Oct. 5.— Authorities in Ottawa are quite in the dark concerning the most recent promotion of Sir Sam Hughes to the rank of Lieut.-General. It is presumed that the War Office did it, though the Minister's previous promotion to rank of Major-General was made by the Militia Council, of which the Minister himself is president. It is not known here whether the latest promotion is honorary or not.

Interesting Address By The Rev. T. H. Mitchell

Pastor of St. Andrew's Church Took For His Subject, the Four Great Moral Theories: Egoism, Determinism, Prudentialism and Idealism.

TEACHERS' CONVENTION

The feature of last evening's session of the Annual Convention of the Teachers' Institute, which is being held in the Collegiate Institute, was an address by the Rev. T. H. Mitchell, M.A. B.D., Pastor of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church of this city. The theme was the four great theories of conduct.

In leading up to his theme Mr. Mitchell referred to the criticisms of our present educational system. He referred to them, he said, not by way of fault finding, but to emphasize the thought that they were induced by the greatness of the teacher's task rather than by the shortcomings of the teacher. He spent considerable time in the contention that ethics could not be divorced from metaphysics, and that a positive religion rooted in a metaphysical ground had been the parent of all ethical movements that had achieved success. He then gave an exposition and a criticism of the four great moral theories: Egoism, Determinism, Prudentialism, and Idealism. The whole conception of education to-day, he said, was in the melting pot, and the modern ideal was coming to be the same development of the man, in body, mind and spirit.

Speaking of the way to bridge the chasm between the actual and the ideal, the lecturer declared there were two methods. The first was through the power of volition, the second, through the power of receptivity.

His final question was in regard to the teachability of ethics. Plato, long ago, said ethics could be caught, could be gotten by contagion. If Plato was right then the atmosphere of the school room was of prime concern to every teacher. The atmosphere he carried with him was the expression of his thoughts and feelings. The old book was right when it said: "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he."

Mr. Mitchell's final declaration was that the teacher who conquered self had the world within the school and outside of it under his feet.

A chorus by Miss Stuart's class of the Queen Mary School, and a piano duet by the Misses Elliott and Caldwell constituted the musical end of the programme.

C. P. R. HOUSES FOR THE BOYS BACK FROM THE FRONT

The houses which the C.P.R. is building in the west for the returned soldiers will cost them about $1,000 each, with out-offices. They will consist of four rooms each — two bedrooms, dining room and kitchen. Each farm will consist of 160 acres and there will be 80 additional acres which may be availed of in the course of time, and as the settler considers that he can work it. The C.P.R. has several designs for homes which will be submitted to the intending settlers. These offer a variety of design to suit different tastes and different purses, it may be said. The settler can choose a house which will cost him $2,000, but the payments will be made exceedingly easy. In all there are probably 8,000,000 acres of land held by speculators in the West; but, apart from that, there are literally hundreds of millions of acres of cultivable land lying idle over the West — not close to the tracks, of course, but good land which many have longed for so ardently that they have sat on the steps of the land office all night to be the first in the morning to get their application in. The C.P.R. is going on on its own account with the colony homes, but it expects that the Government will shortly outline a plan of a comprehensive nature which can be generally applied to the situation.

Labour Men Point To Stored Goods In Flavelle's Ltd.

Say Government is Asleep to the Interests of the People Regarding Cost of Living

TORONTO, Oct. 6.—"The Cabinet of the Dominion Government are not that much interested that they are going to move before they are forced. They are beautiful sleepers and the time is opportune to rouse them from their slumbers. The only thing that will move them is when they begin to think of the best method of securing votes that will keep them in office for another four or five years," declared Delegate S. J. Stevenson at last night's meeting of the Toronto District Trades and Labour Council, which again voiced a vigorous protest against the high cost of living. After a spirited debate it was decided to hold a special meeting of the Council next Thursday night, when a special committee will submit a report upon the question.

How Produce is Hoarded.

Delegate Corcoran called the attention of the delegates to a newspaper despatch relative to a fire which occurred in the plant of Flavelles, Ltd., at Lindsay, yesterday, in which 25,000 cases of eggs, 500,000 pounds of butter, and 1,000 boxes of cheese were destroyed, the estimated value of which was placed at $250,000. He said that if such a large amount of produce was stored in a town the size of Lindsay, what must there be in the storage warehouses in the larger cities.

"It is the capitalists who are manipulating and hoarding up the necessaries of life and placing the prices outside the reach of the labouring classes," continued Delegate Corcoran. "It is the workers who are suffering and the Government do not appear to be anxious to offer relief. If the prices of bread, milk, meat and vegetables keep soaring at the rate they have since the commencement of the war, the workers will be forced to starve or submit to charity, a condition which should be averted if possible before it gets too late."

Council Urged To Vote $5000 For The British Red Cross

Resolution to This Effect Was Passed at Meeting Held Last Night---Voluntary Subscriptions Expected to Increase the Amount---Peterboro' Must Not Be a Shirker is Judge Huycke's View.

That Peterborough contribute to the British Red Cross fund $5,000 to be raised by the Council authorizing a debenture issue for that amount, was the resolution passed at a public meeting in the City Hall last night, on a motion by Mr. Daniel O'Connell and Alderman Dobbin.

Another resolution by Adjutant McElheney and Mr. Walter Stocker provided for voluntary subscription lists to be placed in manufacturing establishments, banks, post office, newspaper offices and other places to be selected by the committee composed of Judge Huycke, Mr. Peter Campbell and Mr. F. D. Kerr, who were appointed to arrange for the public subscription on Trafalgar Day, October 19th. Judge Huycke is convenor of the committee, and Mr. Campbell was appointed treasurer of the British Red Cross fund for Peterborough.

The meeting was attended by Judge Huycke, Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Campbell, Adjutant McElheney, Mr. Kerr, Alderman Stratton, Mr. J. A. Aylmer, Alderman Dobbin, Mr. Walter Stocker, Mayor Duffus, Mrs. Lehane, Mrs. J. Knox, Mrs. Kimberley, Miss Peck, Miss Dennistoun, Mrs. Mills, Mrs. Gardiner, Miss Rubidge, Mrs. Hill and Mrs. Dunsford.

Mayor Duffus presided and read a communication from the British Red Cross endorsed by Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, announcing that $18,000,000 was expended during the first year and that $8,750,000 was required this year. Peterborough contributed $6,841.50 last year of which $3,000 was subscribed by the city. Mayor Duffus stated that the Council last year was in a position to make its grant out of the city's current fund. This could not be done this year, without an overdraft of that amount.

Mr. Campbell pointed out that Toronto had recently declined to make a grant to the British Red Cross on the grounds that the Government should provide for this fund as for any other military necessity. Other municipalities than Toronto were taking the same view of it.

Consolidate Contributions.

Mr. Aylmer's attitude was that the time had come for the consolidation of all patriotic contributions into one unit which could be handled by the Council, representing the people, by the issuing of debentures as provided by Government sanction. The work should be regarded as a community enterprise. Up to the present some people give all their male relatives and money to the country's cause, while others give neither money or men.

Mr. O'Connell's View.

The recent meeting of the Patriotic Fund Committee at which a committee was appointed to outline a plan for this year's collection to be presented at the Council, was referred to Mr. O'Connell. This report will be presented in a few weeks, and Mr. O'Connell remarked that it would likely propose the raising of $100,000 in this county for the Patriotic Fund in 1917. Of this sum the city's share would be $53,000, and the remainder of the county $47,000. This money could be secured by 20-year debentures, and with an assessment of 40 cents per $1,000 no one would be called on to make a large sacrifice.

Mr. O'Connell held out no hope for the raising of $5,000 for the British Red Cross by voluntary contributions. The time was too short for preparing a campaign, this form of collecting funds had lost its first enthusiasm, and if other municipalities did not intend to make contributions Peterborough should wait until it was known what action the municipalities of Ontario intended to take.

His Honour Judge Huycke.

No matter what Toronto does, Peterborough should not be shirker or slacker in supporting the British Red Cross, said Judge Huycke who remarked that the general public does not appreciate the care and comfort this organization has provided for our men. Peterborough was not expected to do more than its share.

Mr. O'Connell pointed out that if it were decided how the Patriotic Fund was to be raised it would be easier to decide upon the means of contributing to the British Red Cross.

Alderman Stratton said that members of the Council were opposed to an overdraft this year, but he believed they would support a reasonable contribution by debenture issue, especially if means were provided that the burden would not fall upon property owners to the exclusion of tenants. Alderman Stratton evidently contemplated not only the $5,000 appeal, but also that for $27,000 for the city's share of the $100,000 required for the Patriotic Fund in Peterborough County next year. He supported what Mr. Aylmer broached and what the Patriotic Fund's subcommittee will endeavour to frame, a method by which tenants, munition workers and others shall bear the burden of patriotic contributions equitably and proportionately.

The O'Connell-Dobbin recommendation to the Council is dependent upon the general decision and action of the Ontario municipalities toward the British Red Cross Fund.

SAYS POTATOES ARE GOING LOWER

Grocer Reads That Trend in Eagerness of Wholesalers to Sell

A local grocer who deals largely in potatoes stated to the Examiner to-day that he was not making any extensive purchase at the present time for the reason that he expected prices to drop considerably below their present basis. This opinion he formed from the numbers of communications he has already received from wholesale potato dealers who appear anxious to unload their supplies at the present prices. In fact he stated that the number of advices he is receiving in this regard is far above the number of former years, and as a result he is convinced that the potato market is being bolstered up for reasons that do not actually exist. In short it is a factitious bull potato market in his view of it. Moreover, he asserts that he has bought some eastern potatoes which have been shipped green, apparently in the eagerness of the shippers to take advantage of the high prices. These green stocks have thus far proven unsatisfactory, being especially weakness to rot. If potatoes were scarce the natural desire of the wholesalers would be to to hold them for the very top prices, but instead the tendency is to unload while the unloading is good.

Kitchener League Has $640 in Bank

The annual meeting of the Canadian Kitchener League reported a balance of $640 in the bank. In June 145 pairs of socks, in July 98 pairs, and in September 210 pairs were sent to various units at the front. This is an evidence that during the warm weather the Kitchener League workers did not relax their efforts.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Mrs. Jos. Knox (re-elected).

The League requires the assistance of knitters for the Christmas bales which will be forwarded as during the past two years. A considerable quantity of yarn has been sent to the local knitting company, but besides this it is hoped that numbers of knitters will volunteer to assist the Kitchener League in the work it is carrying on.

The report of the year's work was presented, showing an extensive and wide range of activity in patriotic endeavour.

FAIR DIRECTORS WILL DISCUSS RIVER SITE SATURDAY NIGHT

Mr. G. A. Gillespie revisited yesterday the proposed site of the Exhibition grounds and sewage plant. He went down alone, and was practically convinced that if twenty-five acres could be purchased the entire property would make an ideal park and location for the proposed combined purpose. It has an extensive water front, is almost entirely level with a gradual slope toward the river. The twenty-five acres Mr. Gillespie inspected include the Scott-Rutherford property, Mrs. O'Hara's house, the Saunders and Newhall lots, and the Hamilton Syndicate's property. This would carry the proposed park north to King George Street.

As president of the Exhibition Board, Mr Gillespie has called a meeting of the directors for Saturday night, when the proposal will be discussed from the standpoint of the Fair's interests.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

RED SOX ARE THE FAVOURITES FOR THE WORLD'S SERIES TITLE

(By H. C. Hamilton).

NEW YORK, Oct. 5.—Triumphant after their smashing drives down the stretch of the pennant races in the two major leagues, the Boston Red Sox and the Brooklyn Dodgers are resting to-day, taking a final breath before the opening game of the world's series Saturday in Boston.

Tearing their way through every obstacle, fighting off attack after attack, holding up their heads when it seemed that victory could not be won, these teams have proved their nerve, their unflinching hearts. They go into what promises to be one of the most interesting series ever played between clubs of the National and American Leagues, after the tightest race since the never-forgotten finish in 1908, when the Cubs and Giants fought down to the last day.

The driving finish, the hitter clashes with rival teams, the nerve-wracking, heart-breaking strain of holding a lead by the margin of a few points, all have been surmounted by these two premier baseball clubs. They will go into the series with the admiration and interest of a nation behind them. Wherever there are baseball fans there will be eager watching for the returns of the crowning event of a season.

Red Sox Favorites.

The Red Sox, world's champions, last year when they pounded out four victories in five games over the Phillies, will go into the series favoured to win. Man for man, the team representing the American League stands out as a better organization than its National League rival.

This year will see no change from last, in that interest will centre in the pitching staffs of the two clubs.

The Dodgers have a powerful attack. The Red Sox have a wonderful defence, backed up by a pitching staff that has pulled the club to the top of the league over time when it seemed they might falter.

The Pitching Staffs.

It is hard to make a comparison of the pitching staffs, for American League pitching has been conceded to be stronger than the National brand for several years. Also, it is held that American League pitchers have to face heavier batting than their brothers in the Tener circuit. In the past American League hurlers have borne up well under heavy assaults from the older organization, and it seems reasonable to believe they will do so this year.

The Brooklyn hurlers have done remarkably well. They have had a powerful scoring machine to help them out, but there have been times, as there are in the life of every baseball club, where the issue depended upon tight pitching—and they rose to the occasion.

It will be up to Shore, Ruth, Leonard, Foster, and Mays to hold down the slugging bats of such wallopers as Casey, Stengel, Jake Daubert and Zach Wheat, not to speak of Chief Meyers and some of the smaller fry, who are not considered small fry by National League hurlers in any sense of the word.

Against Marquard, Pfeffer, Coombs Smith and Cheney, the Red Sox hitters, although their batting averages are not so imposing as those of their National League rivals, are expected to manufacture enough runs to win a majority of the games. With an infield defence second to none, the Red Sox probably will with the aid of their classy pitching staff, hold Dodger scoring to a minimum.

Boston Excels in Catchers.

In the catching department the Red Sox have the edge. In Agnew, Cady Carrigan, and Thomas they have four excellent receivers. Cady probably will do all the big series work unless Carrigan himself elects to take a hand. Brooklyn must depend on Chief Meyers and Otto Miller, neither of whom compares favourably with the Boston wind-paddists. Meyers is low, and so is Miller. Both are good hitters, but very slow on the bases. Cady, Carrigan and Agnew are dependable hitters, star receivers, and are fast in fielding bunts.

Each of the competing clubs has two first basemen. Merkle and Daubert are Dodgers' doorkeepers, and Hoblitzel and Gainor do the same duties for Boston.

In spite of Daubert's fame as a hitting and fielding first baseman, it is doubtful if he has much of an edge over his American League rivals. He is not a hitter of the clean-up type, while both American Leaguers are. Hoblitzel and Gainor, too, are good fielders. It would be interesting to watch the work of Daubert compared with the American Leagues in a world's series.

Merkle is reckoned a better hitter of the clean-up type than Daubert, but Daubert's all-around usefulness seems to preclude the possibility of Merkle's entry into the title series. Gainor probably will see duty when the Red Sox are opposed by a left-hander.

Harry's Sixth World Series.

George Cutshaw and Jack Barry both are great fielders and fine generals. Barry, however, because of his experience, is given a wide edge in usefulness in a world's series conflict. Cutshaw is known as one of the game's most efficient hitters when the hits mean runs, but Barry's reputation is only slightly less brilliant. This will be Barry's sixth world's series, and he never has failed to give a good account of himself.

There is no way to compare Scott and Olson in favour of Olson. Scott is a more brilliant fielder, and is much faster. Olson's greatest value lies in his fighting spirit and quick thinking. He is a much better hitter than Scott, but, as has been remarked, he probably will find it much more difficult to make this asset overcome Scott's brilliance in other departments.

Both clubs are well fortified at third base. Mike Mowrey's steady fielding and Mike Mowrey's hitting in the pinches has been a big factor in the Brooklyn success. He fields just as well a Larry Gardner, his Red Sox rival, but his batting average is not so high. Gardner has consistently hit .300 or better all season.

Utility Fielders.

Boston has a big edge in utility infield men. McNally and Janvrin both are high-class performers, able to step into a breach at any point. Janvrin acceptably filled Jack Barry's position when the latter was injured late in the season. Gets and O'Mara make up the infield reserve for the Dodgers, and neither of them is highly rated in either attack or defence.

Zach Wheat of the Dodgers is an outfielder who compares very favourably with most of the high-class outfield guardians in either circuit. He is a slugger of the most dangerous type. Unlike most clean-up batters his hitting is consistent. Recently he went 29 games without missing at least one safe hit in each contest. Besides his hitting prowess, he is a good outfielder and fairly efficient as a base runner.

Wheat, however, is only one of the Brooklyn gardeners who compares favorably with the famous trio gathered by Bill Carrigan. Meyers and Johnston have been taking turns in centre field, and neither of them is above the average. Johnston's fielding at times is atrocious, and his hitting has been weak. He also is weak as a base runner, in spite of the fact that he once stole more than 10 bases for the Pacific Coast League. Meyers is a much better fielder than Johnston, but is a good hitter only when facing left-handed pitching. He and Johnston have been shifted against right and left-handers.

Casey Stengel, who holds down the right field station for the Dodgers is another dangerous slugger, and is a clean-up hitter feared everywhere in the National League. He has become an adept at his position. He is popular with Brooklyn fans. He is considered by what eight-hundred experts in Boston.

A Splendid Outfield.

Hooper, Walker and [illegible] credited everywhere to be the greatest of defence. They cover every spot in the outfield with marvelous efficiency and every one of them wields a bat that carries fear to the hearts of opposing pitchers. Hooper twice laced the ball out of the Philadelphia Park last year for home runs, winning the contest by his efforts alone. Lewis is another slugger, and is rated one of the nerviest of pinch hitters. Walker is spending his first year with the Red Sox, and has done well in Tris Speaker's shoes, both as a batter and a fielder. He hasn't turned in a .300 average, but his hits have been timely and many of them of the long-distance variety. Henriksen and Shorten are available for duty in the outfield for the Red Sox if needed.

Henriksen has done ginod hitting for the Red Sox for several years and only occasionally gets into the game as a regular. Shorten is a newcomer.

WHITE FIRES MANAGER.

Chicago Lightweight and Nate Lewis Sever Relations.

Chicago, Oct. 6.—Charles White, who recently found Freddie Welsh for the lightweight championship, and his manager, Nate Lewis, have severed relations. In short, White fired the man who had guided his pugilistic affairs for the last five years.

"Nate's a bad manager, not only for me but for himself," said White. "He can't handle his own affairs much less mine, and had to make a shift."

It is believed Emil Thiry, former manager of Packy McFarland, will succeed Lewis.

OBITUARY

MATHIAS STRATFORD.
The death occurred in Brantford of an old and highly respected resident in the person of Mathias Stratford, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. John D. Hutchinson.
The deceased, who was in his 85th year, was born in the County of Hastings, Ont., and at the age of two years, moved with his parents to Brant County, having thus lived there continuously for eighty-two years.
The late Mr. Stratford at one time conducted a coal and wood business on Wellington Street, Brantford, but on the death of his wife, who predeceased him 25 years ago, he retired from active work.
In religion he was a Methodist, having first been connected with Immanuel Church, later Colborne Street Methodist. A staunch Conservative in politics, Mr. Stratford followed the doings of his party with great interest, and in spite of his advanced age, cast his vote regularly. Five daughters and two sons survive, viz: Mrs. David Secord, Oakland; Mrs. Edward Hutchinson and Mrs. John D. Hutchinson, city; Mrs. Muirhead, Rebo Place; Mrs. Stephen Wiles, Toronto; Sylvester, Oakland, and Edwin of Hamilton.

Bread should not be put into a too hot oven. It should not brown for the first ten minutes, and then only gradually.

Y. M. C. A. NEWS

The Bowling Alleys are being refinished and will be open on Saturday. The billiard tables are being recovered in preparation for the season's use.
Mr. George Mulligan will address the men's meeting on Sunday at 4.15 o'clock and will also furnish special music. Every man and boy is invited to attend.
All of the gymnasium classes are now under way with the exception of the business men's class, which is to start shortly. Attendance at all classes is very good. Letters are being sent to men who have applied for enlistment and have been rejected for physical reasons. These men are being invited to form a special gymnasium class to be conducted in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium with a view to overcoming, as far as possible, the physical handicaps which prevent acceptance for military service. It is thought that this will prove a popular class and any man interested should apply at the Y.M.C.A. building during the next few days.
It is with a great deal of sorrow and regret that we have learned recently of the death of Lieutenants Harold Matthews and William Morris, who, before leaving for the front, were two of our most active members. The casualty list of the local Y.M.C.A. is now a long one as we have about 225 enlisted members.

WAS KILLED BY SNIPER

Corp. Angus McIntosh and Another Soldier Charged Two Germans Who Had Wounded Vic Hagerman of Peterboro'—McIntosh Was Shot

BUT WAS REVENGED

The following letter from Lance Corp. Alan MacNab, of Peterborough, received by his father, Mr. Alan MacNab, G.T.R. station agent, tells how Corp. Angus McIntosh, to-day officially reported killed in action, met his death in a bayonet attack on two German snipers, who had wounded Pte. Vic Hagerman, of Peterborough:

In France, Friday, Sept. 15, 1916.

My Dear Folks,—Just a few lines to let you know that I am quite O.K. We had a scrap up here to-day, and Fritz came out second best. Our boys went over at 6.00 a.m. and reached their first objective by 8.00 a.m. and have been pushing along here and there ever since.

While going up this morning, about 9.00 o'clock, I met Vic Hagerman coming down as a "walking case," with a sniper's bullet in his right shoulder. He told me that he was almost certain that poor McIntosh had got "his" from the same sniper. There were two "Fritz" in a shell hole, and when they got Vic in the shoulder, Mac and another chap went at them with the steel. However they "got" Mac before he got close, but the other chap cleaned them both up with the bayonet. So Mac is revenged at least.

Vic could not make sure about Mac because of his own wound, and the shell fire going on at the time. Just a little later I was caught in "Fritz" heavy shell-barrage fire, but came through safely after three quarters of an hour dodging. I am safe enough now, down in the bomb-proof shelter, where I am writing this. Just a year ago to-day since we landed. Will write again on Sunday. Hope all are well.

Your loving son,
ALAN.

MR. ED. ARMSTRONG'S LINDSAY STORE WAS BURGLARIZED

Examiner Special:

LINDSAY, Oct. 6.—Mr. Ed. Armstrong's clothing store was burglarized last night, entry being forced through a rear window. Suits of clothes, sweater coats, rain coats and other valuable furnishings were missing, and Mr. Armstrong recollected a visit yesterday afternoon from two strangers. He described them to the police and about ten o'clock this morning Chief Shortt had roundde up two suspects clad in "glad rags," which they donned after discarding their old suits. The rest of the swag they had bundled into parcels and were preparing a getaway. They gave their names as Ross and Keyes and stated that they had worked for a few hours in the morning on the new arsenal and then decided that was about enough.

Impossible To Search For The Missing Crew

Special to The Examiner:

NANTUCKET, Mass., Oct. 10.—A forty mile northeaster and dark weather has made further search impossible for the missing crew of the sunken liner Kingston practically impossible off the lightship here to-day.

Little hope is held that any of the Kingston's crew who might still be riding the waves in open boats, will survive the weather.

PASSENGER STEAMER AND SEVERAL FREIGHTERS WERE TORPEDOED OFF MASSACHUSETTS

German Underseas Fighter Arrived at Newport R.I., Saturday Afternoon, and After a Short Stay, During Which Mail Was Delivered, Put to Sea Again—Had Plenty of Food and Did Not Take on Fresh Supplies

RETURNING TO HOME PORT

NEWPORT, R.I., Oct. 10.—Despite the boast of Captain Rose, of the submarine, that the U-53 had fuel and provisions aboard to last for a three months' cruise, local submarine officers believe the vessel was ready to descend upon her prey and then make a quick dash for home. These experts place her cruising radius at 5,000 miles, so far as fuel supply is concerned. There were few who doubted but that she was already speeding across the Atlantic on her way to her home port.

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 10.—Lying off Nantucket Sunday afternoon, where every liner leaving or entering this port must get her bearings, the German submarine U-53, aided probably by one or two other war submersibles, torpedoed and sank six ships. Four of them were British, one a passenger carrier. The other two were neutrals—one Dutch and the other Norwegian; an American steamship was held up, but was allowed to proceed.

Admiral Knight, commander of the naval station here, says that the Nantucket Lightship reports a second German submarine nearby. Naval officers say they expect a fleet of German submarines will blockade every Atlantic harbour from which munitions ships leave.

One Day's Record.

The record of submarine warring, as brought to land by wireless despatches, follows:

The STRATHDENE, British freighter, torpedoed and sunk off Nantucket, crew taken aboard Nantucket Shoals lightship and later removed to Newport by torpedo-boat destroyers. The vessel left New York for Bordeaux, and was attacked at 6 a.m.

The WESTPOINT, British freighter, torpedoed and sunk off Nantucket. Crew abandoned the ship in small boats after a warning shot from the submarine's gun. Officers and men were taken aboard a destroyer. The vessel was attacked at 10.45 a.m. She was bound from London to Newport, News.

STEPHANO, British passenger liner, plying regularly between New York, Halifax and St. John's, Nfld. Torpedoed south-east of Nantucket while bound for New York. Reported still afloat. Passengers and crew, numbering about 140, were picked up by destroyer Drayton and brought to Newport.

KINGSTON, British freighter, torpedoed and sunk south-east of Nantucket. Crew missing and destroyer searching for them. This vessel is not accounted for in maritime registers, and may be the Kingstonian.

BLOOMERSDIJK, Dutch freighter, torpedoed and sunk south of Nantucket. Crew taken aboard a destroyer. The steamer was bound from New York for Rotterdam, having sailed Saturday night. The Bloomersdijk carried a crew of 50 men and a cargo of grain valued at $500,000, consigned to the Government of the Netherlands. International complications may arise.

CHRISTOPHER KNUDSON, Norwegian freighter, torpedoed and sunk near where the Bloomersdijk went down. Crew picked up by destroyers. The vessel sailed from New York Saturday for London.

The Stephano had 44 first-class passengers and 30 second-class passengers on board. The message also stated that she had a general cargo of about 3,000 tons, consisting of fish oil and canned goods. The crew numbered 75.

The steamship Bloomersdijk was a Dutch merchantman flying the flag of the Holland-American Line. She was in charge of Captain Mohr, and carried a crew of about 35 men.

The Bloomersdijk left her pier at Hoboken Saturday afternoon with a general cargo. She was bound for Rotterdam by way of Kirkwall.

The steamship Christian Knudsen was a tanker, and flew the Norwegian flag. Her consignees are Funch, Edye and Company. She was in command of Captain Grotness, and had a crew of about 35. She took on a cargo of oil at Tuxpam, Mexico, early in September, and came to Perth Amboy. She remained here a few days, and sailed for London with her cargo Friday afternoon. She had a tonnage of 2,583 tons.

Began at Daybreak.

The German submarine began her depredations at daybreak Sunday morning. So far as is known there has been no loss of life. But the crew of one steamer, the Kingston, is in open boats.

Seventeen of the fastest destroyers in the United States Navy are plowing through the fog in search of them.

The innocent-looking little engine of war which lay at anchor for a few short hours in the inner harbour here Saturday afternoon, became a death-dealing demon no sooner than she had sped past the three-mile limit.

She first sighted the American freighter Kansan laboriously making her way through the dim light of early morning from New York to Boston.

Captain Rose, the commander of the U-53, personally stood on the bridge and hailed the Kansan. The freighter was not detained long. After inspecting the ship's papers, Captain Rose apologized and allowed the vessel to proceed. The Kansan was 50 miles away from the scene when her wireless operator picked up the dreaded S.O.S. It was from the British ship Westpoint.

From station to station along the coast the distress call was repeated. The captain of the Kansan instantly heeded the call. It was followed by a message briefly saying the Westpoint had been attacked by a submarine and was in danger of sinking. Her crew and passengers had taken to the boats ready to put to sea.

Twenty minutes after the call was flashed to the naval training station here the torpedo-boat destroyer Jarvis had left her moorings and was headed for the open sea. She was rapidly followed by the other boats of the flotilla. Crowding their boilers the boats started on the 100-mile journey of mercy.

But the Kansan was first to reach the rapidly-sinking vessel. She beat the navy boats in the first race in American waters to save the lives of persons imperilled by the ruthless undersea warfare.

Two hours later the U-53, still loitering in the lanes of steamships on their way to Boston from foreign ports, sighted the British freighter Strathdene, bound from New York to Bordeaux.

Laden With Munitions.

The Strathdene was said to have been loaded with munitions of war for the Allies. She proved easy prey. Twenty minutes after the crew had taken to the open sea in small boats she lifted her nose towards the sky and sank. Pluckily battling the waves, the crew of the Strathdene managed to reach the Nantucket Shoals Lightship. There 17 of them were found by the destroyer Balch.

Leaving the balance of rescue work to her sister ships, the Balch was ordered to return here by Admiral Knight. It was soon after that the wireless at the training station told of the torpedoing of a third ship. It was the Red Cross liner Stephano, bound for New York and Halifax and St. John's, Nfld.

It was reported she was attacked nearer the Long Island shore than Nantucket.

The Stephano received her vital blow at 4.30 o'clock. It was more than an hour later before the word had been received here. In rapid succession then the wireless sputtered its tales of disaster to the other ships. The Kingston was the first to sink. Then followed the Bloomersdijk and the Knudsen.

Naval officers say the U-53 had only six torpedoes aboard when she left here Saturday. Normally the submarine carried eight, but two of these were spent on the voyage to these shores.

Three full divisions of the Atlantic destroyer flotilla are engaged in the work of rescue. Admiral Knight, commandant of the Newport Navy Yard, has given orders that all survivors picked up by navy boats be brought here. Those aboard the Kansan are being taken to Boston.

A wireless has been received from the destroyer Drayton saying she is returning, under forced draught with 68 survivors of the Knudsen.

It was freely commented upon that for the first known time every destroyer anchored here was put under full steam during the night. Whether this had any significance or not would not be admitted by naval officers. Certain it is that none expected the U-53 so cut across the lanes of neutral shipping so soon.

"The Little Fortune"

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

"When I arrived at the house the next day I found the old man sitting up in bed, with the coins in a tray on his knees before him. He had been cleaning them preparatory to my arrival. He seemed weak and excited. He asked, as an especial favour, that he be permitted to withdraw from his collection one coin, a franc piece of the period of the first Napoleon. The coin had no particular value, except as one of a series of pieces of similar denomination; naturally I at once assented and paid him a sum for the remainder of his collection, sufficient to defray all the expenses which seemed to cause him so much anxiety.

"When the transaction had been completed he enclosed the one-franc piece in an envelope, together with a letter, and directed the same to his daughter, Miss Estelle Mercier, Hotel Rochambeau, New York City.

"It seemed that Miss Mercier was his only relative. He was very fond of her, and explained that he wanted to send her the coin as a keepsake and token of his love. He seemed to attach great importance to the matter and made me promise to give the letter to his daughter in person.

"I took the package and agreed to see that it was safely delivered. When I came on board I deposited it with the purser, together with another and larger package containing a diamond brooch and some smaller articles of jewelry which I was taking home as presents for my wife and daughters."

"The two packages were separate?"

"Yes."

"What was the value of the contents of the second package?"

Mr. Morris smiled. "It was rather high," he said. "I had an unexpectedly successful trip, and my wife's birthday occurs in September. I valued the brooch and the smaller presents for me daughters at thirty-five thousand. They are, you tell me, quite safe?"

The captain rose, went to the safe, opened it, and took out a sealed package.

"This is yours, is it not, Mr. Morris?" he asked.

"Yes; that is the box containing the jewels." "It looks to me as though the thief had be mistake taken the wrong package."

M. Lefevre shook his head.

"It isn't likely," he said. "This quite evidently contains jewelry, or articles of some size at least. The other package, from what you tell me, was merely an envelope."

"Yes—a plain brown paper envelope in which I had enclosed old Mercier's letter."

"And any one taking it could remove the coin, read and destroy the letter, and defy detection?"

"Undoubtedly."

"Who knew of your transaction with Mercier?"

"No one—except possibly the physician who was attending him. He was a young man with a pointed red beard. I did not learn his name."

"He was in the room at the time?" asked the perfect.

"Yes. Old Mercier was close to death. The doctor had been with him, he told me, all the morning."

"How long," said Lefevre, turning to Captain Bonnot, "has the purser, Vernon, been in the employ of the line?"

"For several years, I understand. He is a very reliable man. He was assigned to the Richelieu when she was put into commission last month."

"Where does he make his home when ashore—in Havre or New York?"

"In New York, I understand. They will have that information at the New York office of the line."

"Can I be of any further service to you, gentlemen?" asked Mr. Morris, rising.

"Not at present. We are greatly obliged to you for what you have told us although," the captain concluded, "it only adds, I fear, to the strangeness of the case."

"It certainly doesn't seem to help matters any. I am sorry, very sorry, that the package is gone. I gave the old man my word on his death-bed that I would see that it was safely delivered to his daughter. Believe me, I would gladly spend a considerable sum to make my promise good. I suppose," he added, turning to the captain, "that the officials of the line will have the matter thoroughly investigated."

"Undoubtedly. Our first duty at present is to find the purser, or determine if we can what has become of him."

"I wish you every success, gentlemen." Mr. Morris went to the door. "I presume you would rather I did not mention the matter to any one."

"Please be careful, Mr. Morris," said M. Lefevre, "to speak of it to every one on board that you know."

"But, monsieur—why?" began the captain."

"Let every one on board know. Offer a reward for any news of the missing man. The passengers are bound to learn of his absence as soon as any of them have business with him. By taking them into your confidence and offering a reward of, say, a hundred dollars you will turn every one on board into an amateur detective. Meanwhile, I will make some investigations on my own account. I am certain that if the purser is on board we shall find him."

"And if not?"

"Then we must find his murderers. May I ask, Captain Bonnot that you will be so good as to furnish me with a list of the first and second-class passengers?"

The prefect had the list in his possession within a short time. He made it his business during the remainder of the voyage to meet or personally speak to every passenger on the boat. He spent four days in fruitless investigations. When the vessel sighted land he went to Captain Bonnot somewhat crestfallen.

"I have discovered just nothing, monsieur," he said. "The purser is certainly not on board. Whether he jumped overboard or was thrown into the sea by others is something I very much fear we shall never know."

Captain Bonnot was disposed to agree with him. "A mystery," he said, "that may never be solved. God rest the poor fellow's soul!"

CHAPTER II.
The Rheumatic Passenger.

The big liner Richelieu swung majestically inside Sandy Hook and slowed up to receive the visits of the customs and health officers.

M. Lefevre watched the boats as they put out from shore, as though he expected some one.

When a tall, powerfully built young man came over the side the prefect rushed up to him and greeted him with true Gallic fervor: "My dear Duvall!" he exclaimed; "it is indeed good to see you. And how is my dear Grace—your wife?"

"Splendid. She will meet us at the pier. I got your wireless and came off to join you, as you requested. What's up? You're not bothering with any detective work, I hope, now that you are on your vacation."

The prefect lowered his voice. "I confess," he replied, "that something has occurred on board which has interested me greatly. Come to my stateroom and I will tell you about it."

Duvall followed him, somewhat mystified. As they crossed the deck a portly gentleman in silk hat and frock coat came up with Captain Bonnot and Mr. Morris. "May I have a word with you M. Lefevre?" the captain asked, and then proceeded to introduce his companion. "This is Mr. Germaine, managing director of our line in New York. He came aboard in connection with the matter of the purser."

Lefevre presented his companion to the others. "Mr. Duvall, gentlemen," he said. "An old friend and former assistant of mine. We have handled some exciting cases together—in Paris. Eh mon ami?"

"Could you come to my cabin for a moment, M. Lefevre?" asked the captain; "Mr. Germaine has something he wishes to say to you."

"Certainly. Mr. Duvall will accompany us, if you have no objection. I will vouch for his discretion. In fact, I was about to place the matter before him when you stopped me."

"We shall be happy to have Mr. Duvall join us," the managing director said, with a smile. "Although I have not heretofore had the pleasure of his acquaintance, his name is not unknown to me. If I am not mistaken," he said, turning to the young man, "you rendered a great service last year to my friend Mr. John Stapleton. His child had been kidnaped in Paris I believe."

Duvall and the prefect glanced at each other and smiled. "We both had a hand in that case," the former said "to say nothing of my wife. In fact I believe she did more than either of us."

"Mon Dieu!—yes," said the prefect, as they followed the captain to his cabin.

"I am informed by Captain Bonnot," said Mr. Germaine, after they had seated themselves; "that the Richelieu's purser, Mr. Vernon, disappeared five days ago, along with a package placed in his care by Mr. Morris and that since then not the slightest trace of him or of the package has been discovered."

The captain nodded. "Not the slightest," he said, with much chagrin.

"It is of the utmost importance that this mystery be cleared up, not only in justice to Mr. Vernon and to my company, but also because the package which was entrusted to our care by Mr. Morris is one, which, on account of the sentiment connected with it we are unable to replace. I was a message from a dying man to his daughter.

"Mr. Morris had obligated himself to deliver it. He, of course, feels deeply his inability to do so. He has offered to go to any reasonable expense to locate the person or persons who have been guilty of the crime. In that my company heartily join him. I am her, M. Lefevre, to ask you, on behalf of both Mr. Morris and the Trans-atlantic Line, to take up this case and apprehend the guilty persons. You may name your own terms."

The prefect moved uneasily in his chair. "I am afraid, gentlemen," he said, "that I cannot do as you ask."

"Why not?" Mr Germaine asked.

"I will tell you. I am coming to America a very tired man. It is my vacation—the first in several years. My physician directs that I shall rest. Ma foi!" He shrugged his shoulders expressively. "What is there for me to do but obey? Further, I have for over two years promised to make a visit to my dear friends, Mr. Duvall and his wife. They expect me. I cannot permit myself to disappoint them."

Mr. Germaine appeared to be greatly disappointed. "I had hoped, monsieur that you would accept," he said. "We all know of your wonderful skill in matters of this sort."

"Perhaps my friend Duvall would care to undertake the case," said the prefect with a smile.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

"Good Morning" And "Sweetheart"

By SAMUEL E. BRANT

I had been running a locomotive for ten years, my runs always covering those hours when persons are free to mingle with one another sociably.

I was getting old—that is, what I thought was old in those days. I was thirty-four, and I didn't like the prospect before me. I'm a domestic man, and home is the only place for me when I'm not busy. I used to envy every snug cot I passed on my line, and my heart sank that I couldn't have one of my own. I had the money saved up, but if I got the house I had no woman to put into it, and what's a house without a woman? And, what's more, there's no use in a man's trying to make a home without a wife.

There was one place beside the road that I thought if I got a wife I would like to buy and fix it up to live in. It wasn't far from my starting point, and between runs I could spend my time there in comfort. Ever since I had gone on to the route it had been shut up. It was a two story cottage with a big porch. I thought how nice it would be to sit on the porch in summer and smoke my pipe while my wife was clearing away things after getting supper.

But one morning when I passed the house I saw that my dream had been spoiled. Some one had taken my prospective home away from me. At any rate, a man was repairing it, another was painting it, and a third was mending the fence. A few days later when I went by I saw an old lady sitting on the porch.

One Sunday I saw a young woman fixing up the grounds. I concluded that she was the old lady's daughter and was at work in a store or an office, leaving Sunday her only day free for working about the house. When July came on she used to work about the place Saturday afternoons, but when September came she stopped this. I didn't see any man about the place and concluded the young woman was a spinster.

One day during the winter she was starting out from the house just as I was drawing near it. I didn't give her time to cross the track, for I wished to see her close by. When I reached her she was waiting for my train to pass, and I looked right down on her from the cab window. It happened that she looked up and saw an expression of admiration on my face. It was only a passing glimpse for either of us, but it was enough.

After that I saw the young woman quite often when I passed. I noticed that on my outward run on Sunday, when I passed her house about 11 o'clock, she was always on the porch with the old lady or working in the garden. But this was when the weather was warm. And I could see that she knew my train, and I fancied she was looking out for me.

When spring came on I noticed her out making a flower garden. When she had got the ground in order she put in some seed. In March the plants began to come up, and it looked to me as if they were going to make letters. And so they did. They were tulips and spelled "Good morning."

Now, there was no reason to suppose these words were intended for me any more than any one else, but somehow I couldn't get it out of my head that they were. At any rate, I just thought I'd risk making some sort of reply. There was an embankment not far from the house and in plain sight from it. One night I went out with some seeds and, making a bed on the side of this embankment, planted them. In a couple of weeks they were up and spelled "Sweetheart."

I took my train out one Sunday morning about the time my letter flowers got big enough to be read from the house. The girl was on the porch and as I passed threw me a kiss and ran into the house.

This was all the flower courting there was, for it was too slow. At any rate, it was too slow for me. I didn't want any more encouragement. The first spare time I had I got myself up in a clean bolled shirt and a decent suit of clothes and went to the house to get welcomed or snubbed, as the case might be, for there are girls who will be up to a lot of skylarking that won't stand to be approached except in the regular way.

The only weapon I took with me to make a fight with was a posy. I knew she was fond of flowers, and I relied on this considerably.

I went to the door and knocked. It was opened by the girl herself, and when she saw me she sort of shrieked and was going to shut it when I held my posy under her nose.

That did the business. She laughed and blushed and invited me in.

The old lady was there, and the girl introduced me to her, calling her mother. I began by saying a lot of nice things to the old lady, telling her what a cosy place she had and how often I had admired it.

Well, there isn't much more to tell. The rest of the courtship was very much like other courtships, I reckon although ours was, I fancy, a little more delightful than any other. At the end of it I moved my traps to the house, my wife stopped work, and now I have a run that lets me off at 4 p. m., and about 5 I go into the gate for the rest of the day. The click of the latch is the signal for a lot of little pots to come out and climb all over me.

SUGGESTIONS TO SICK WOMEN

How Many Are Restored To Health.

First.—Almost every operation in our hospitals performed upon women becomes necessary through neglect of such symptoms as backache, irregular and painful periods, displacements, pain in the side, burning sensation in the stomach, bearing down pains, nervousness, dizziness and sleeplessness.

Second.—The medicine most successful in relieving female ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It regulates and strengthens the organism; it overcomes disease.

For forty years it has been making women strong and well, relieving backache, nervousness, ulceration and inflammation, weakness, displacements, irregularity and periodic pains. It has also proved invaluable in preparing for childbirth and the Change of Life.

Third.—The great number of unsolicited testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time published by permission, are proof of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, in the treatment of female ills.

Fourth.—Every ailing woman in the United States is cordially invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for special advice. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

TENDING BRITISH GRAVES

King George Thanks French People for Work Done in This Matter.

King George took advantage of his recent trip to France to visit some of those sacred spots which are the last resting places of fallen British soldiers. If anything were lacking to cement the sympathies of the French and English it would be supplied by the care with which the French people are tending the graves of the British. Long before the French Government decided to constitute the British burial grounds British territory for all time, the people of France took it upon themselves to tend these graves.

King George, during his recent visit to France, himself saw how this had been done, and specially thanked some of th Maires and cures who had helped. Many burials took place out of consecrated ground, and although the work of transferring buried bodies from casual graves to recognized cemeteries, wherever possible, is proceeding, there remain many graves yet untouched. The British Red Cross Society has caused all these graves to be marked with a permanent cross, and the French people keep them freshly supplied with flowers.

King George had a quick eye for these wayside burial places, and every time he saw one he never failed to raise his hand to salute. Once, standing bareheaded at a nameless grave, he quoted Rupert Brooke's matchless lines:

There's some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England.

Only freshly boiled water should be used for making hot beverages, and only freshly drawn water for making cold beverages.

Don't throw away old stockings. Fold them and put them in a convenient place. They make good fillings for holders.

Before pouring hot fruit into a glass dish or jar, place the receptacle on a cloth wet with cold water. This prevents the glass from breaking.

WAR AVIATORS HAVE TO LEARN DISCIPLINE NOW

There was a time when an aviator was expected to become an air fighter in much the same way as a boy is taught to swim by being thrown into deep water and expected to strike out to save himself from drowning.

So the pilot had a quick-firer placed on his aeroplane, and was turned loose into the air with the expectation that he would get as near as he could to an enemy avion (an avion is a military aeroplane) and shoot him down before being shot down himself.

As a matter of fact, after firing his first disc (forty-seven shots) very rapidly, he dropped his second in trying to put it in place, received several bullets in his machine from his foe and was glad to move away at a good speed. This, however, was an exceptional case, as he had been allowed to join the escadrille on its being sent to the front before he had been through shooting training.

The training that army pilots now undergo lasts some five months and the many Americans who have taken it or are taking it will, if they survive the war, form a valuable asset to the American nation if "preparedness" is carried out to the extent of forming aviation corps.

Aviation Schools Specialize.

It was soon found necessary to specialize aviation schools and devote each to some particular work. Four or five are solely for learners, where they begin on "penguins," rollers which do not rise into the air on which they run in straight lines to half a mile.

As soon as they can run with the tail of the machine in the air they pass to a three-cylinder Bleriot, which leaves the ground, rising about a couple of yards. On this machine pupils learn to leave the ground, to control their motors, regulate the gas, etc., and then pass to a six-cylinder Bleriot, which can rise 12 to 20 yards, on which they practice landing.

Landing is the most difficult part of the work, so that it is during this stage that most "wood is broken," as French fliers say of smashing machines.

A forty-five horse power Bleriot, which mounts to between 150 and 300 feet, then enables the learner to make "virages" (turns) to the right and left, and trace out figure eights and circles. He is then promoted to a fifty horse power Bleriot (600 to 900 feet altitude)), when he learns to shut off his motor at the highest point and descend to 400 feet, and then to restart the motor. He also learns to make a quarter spiral, a half spiral and full spiral with his motor shut off.

He is then ready for his official tests for his license. He has to make an official spiral with a barograph attached to his back to record his descent from 1,500 feet. The barograph will show a straight line for a perfect spiral but an irregular one for a badly made descent.

He then takes a voyage machine, sixty horse power, on which he makes two trips sixty miles and ninety miles. Then on an eighty horse power voyage machine he makes a triangular flight of 150 miles, during which he has to land once to take on a new supply of gasoline. An eighty horse power or parasol machine is used for two height tests above 6,000 feet, with a barograph to register the altitude.

Having successfully negotiated these tests, he is awarded his "brevet," or pilot's license, if he has put in at least twenty-five hours' actual flying during his training.

Aviation Schools Specialize.

The newly licensed pilot is then sent to the finishing-off school at Pau. He has now said good-by to slow machines and will start to perfect his skill in landing, probably on a three-cylinder Morane as the Morane has the same kind of landing fitments as the Nieuport, and it is much cheaper in case of "smashing wood."

He is promoted to six-cylinder and ten-cylinder Moranes until he has made ten perfect landings. He then mount a sixty-foot Nieuport, a ninety-five foot spread) Nieuport as a passenger with a monitor, who shows him what a Nieuport can do.

Then he takes his Nieuport alone and when he has made twenty perfect landings on it he is allowed to mount a sixty-foot Nieuport, a smaller but more powerful machine. On this he makes spirals and a test altitude of 6,000 feet.

At this school at the present time are about eighty graduates, almost all officers, a few non-commissioned officers and a few Americans.

A little salt added to gasoline before using it to clean fabrics will prevent rings from forming.

Apply kerosene to tar stains before wetting them, then wash them with warm water and soap.

Fish can be fried in fat which has been used for frying fish before, and the flavour will be better.

A great Help on a Busy Day

ONCE a week at least there is a big day cantering around the kitchen range. The boiler takes up a lot of room, and there is the dinner to cook—because no woman wants to serve "wash-day dinners."

The range should take care of both the dinner and the washing. And if you have a Pandora, it will.

Set the boiler on the long way of the Pandora—not on top, but right down in the pot holes. That leaves two of the hot front holes free for cooking and at the same time keeps the boiler on the boil. Should you have to add coal to the fire, you can do so without taking off the lids or disturbing your cooking.

This is the sort of range every woman should have—one that saves her time on busy days. It is almost as important as the saving of coal for which the Pandora is famous.

McClary's Pandora Range

Before you invest in a new range investigate the Pandora. If you would like to know why the Pandora gives a lifetime of perfect service, why it saves coal, why it saves time, we will be glad to place the reasons clearly explained in your hands. The Pandora has a glass oven door, a white enamel removable reservoir, wonderfully smooth working grates and dozens of features that are illustrated in our new booklet, "The Magic of the Pandora." You may secure one by mailing the coupon to the factory.

MRS. HURD'S BEST SCORE.

Former Canadian Golf Champion is Medalist at Boston.

Boston, Oct. 4.—Mrs. J. V. Hurd, of Ittaburg, who as Miss Dorothy Campbell was champion woman golfer of this country, Great Britain and Canada, was medalist, in the qualifying round of the women's national golf championship at the Belmont Spring Country Club. Her score of 68 was four better than those of her nearest competitors, Mrs. W. A. Gavin, the noted English sportswoman, who held the eastern title; Miss Georgianna Bishop of Brooklawn, Conn., and Mrs. John H. Papham, of San Antonio, Tex.

Scores of 102 and better put 32 players into the first round of match play for the championship that began yesterday.

If Mrs Gavin had putted with any degree of accuracy she would have at least equalled the card of Mrs Hurd. Mrs. Hurd played fine golf, her use of the wooden clubs being particularly good.

Among those who qualified was Miss Alexa Stirling, the sensational young Southern champion, who turned in a card of 92. Mrs. G. M. Martin, Stoke Pogis, England, was beaten by Mrs. Caleb F. Fox, five up and three to play.

Mother Do you know that an ointment applied to your child's skin is absorbed through the pores and enters the system just as surely as though it had been swallowed into the stomach? That is why only the very purest ointment should be used.

For purity of ingredients, Zam-Buk is without equal. This has been proved, not only by the thousands of satisfied users, but by chemical analysis. The famous English chemist, W. Lascelles Scott, having made an exhaustive analytical examination of Zam-Buk says: "I have no hesitation in certifying its purity and inestimable value for skin ailments and injuries."

There is nothing can equal Zam-Buk for skin diseases—nothing so soothing and healing, and nothing that allays inflammation and ends pain so quickly. Mothers who have once used Zam-Buk will have no other, and children who have once had Zam-Buk applied, will cry for it again because they know it ends their pain.

As a "first aid" in the home, Zam-Buk is invaluable. Being a strong antiseptic, if applied to a cut, burn or wound of any kind as soon as sustained there is no danger of festering or blood-poisoning.

Mrs. L. Wilson of Sarnia, Ont., says: "I could not do without Zam-Buk for my family. We find it so splendid for burns, sores, etc."

Mrs. J. Knox of Pine Creek, Man., writes: "My little daughter, while teething, was troubled with a rash. Applications of Zam-Buk, however, kept the skin soft, ended the inflammation and irritation, and very soon the rash had entirely disappeared. I have used Zam-Buk for other skin troubles—always with the same satisfactory result."

Mr. L. B. Andresen of 1407 E. 22nd St., Minneapolis, writes: "For seven years we have used Zam-Buk in our home and could not get along without it. Whenever any of the children, my wife, or self meets with an accident, we always use Zam-Buk, and it has never been known to fail. It has saved us many a doctor's bill."

Zam-Buk is composed exclusively of herbal essences and vegetable extracts, with none of the animal fats and poisonous mineral drugs found in ordinary ointments, and can be used with perfect safety on the most delicate skin—even the skin of a baby. If you have not yet tried this wonderful herbal ointment, we invite you to try it now at our expense, as per following coupon.

Passenger Steamer and Several Freighters Were Torpedoed, etc.

Thus it was with surprise and astonishment that naval officers learned the tiny man-of-war had only delayed until she was safely past the three-mile limit before she began her warfare against enemy vessels.

The naval officers admitted the destroyers sent to sea were not alone on a mission of mercy. Their decks were cleared for action, and each commander had strict instructions to determine that the utmost neutrality had been maintained.

May be in United States Waters.

There was no official word that any of the attacks were perpetrated inside the three-mile limit, but the curious line of the coast here gives rise to the gravest speculations. The ships went to the bottom, it is believed, within the radius of five miles. It is believed this circle of activity centred about 10 miles south of the Nantucket Lightship.

From all along the coast came word of mysterious messages being relayed between the French and British warships rushing to this vicinity. None has given an inkling of her whereabouts, but within 24 hours a cordon of battle-grey steel will be thrown about the waters for miles up and down the coast. These patrolling vessels scattered between Trinidad and Halifax have been converging on the waters of Narragansett Bay since they were apprised by wireless of the U-53's audacious appearance.

Little Boy Nine Months Old HAD DYSENTERY

Dysentery is one of the worst forms of bowel complaint. The pains in the bowels become intense, the discharges occur with great rapidity, and are very often accompanied by blood, and the sufferer becomes very weak and languid.

Unless these discharges are checked, death may ensue in a very short time.

There is only one remedy to use in all cases of dysentery, and that is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It will cure when all other remedies fail.

Mrs. J. Leslie McKee, Redvers, Sask., writes: "I used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for my little boy when he was about nine months old. He was awfully bad with dysentery. I had not laid him down for three days and nights, only when his father took him for a few minutes. He had both the diarrhoea and vomiting. I had tried everything until my husband got "Dr. Fowler's, and three doses cured him."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy you want. Don't take any other when you ask for it.

Manufactured only by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. Price 35c.

THE BRITISH TROOPS CROSS SERES AND ADVANCE TOWARD MONASTIR

Italians, French and Serbs Are Also Continuing Their Successes Against Bulgars on All Sectors of Macedonian Front--German Campaign on the Atlantic Coast Pronounced a Violation of the Munro Doctrine---Roumanians Defeated is Berlin Report.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, Oct. 10.—British troops in Macedonia have crossed the Seres Railway and captured Kalandra, and are advancing on the Bulgarian positions at Monastir from another direction. Italians, French and Serbs are also continuing their successes against the Bulgars on all sectors.

British cavalry are swiftly pursuing the Bulgars, who are retiring to the hills, leaving large stores and some prisoners behind. Topalova has apparently been evacuated by the Bulgars.

Berlin Says The Roumanians Are Beaten

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

BERLIN, Oct. 10.—Roumanian reinforcements, rushed up in an effort to block the Austro-German drive through Transylvania, were halted and defeated south-east of Marienburg, said an Austrian official statement.

The Roumanians everywhere are in retreat, says the statement.

U.S. Destroyers Look For Sub's Victims

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEWPORT, R. I., Oct. 10.—Strung out five miles apart, a line of American destroyers swept the Atlantic in the vicinity of Nantucket Shoals Lightship to-day in a hunt for survivors of the Kingstonian, supposedly sunk by the German U boat.

CHRISTIANIA, Oct. 10.—A Russian destroyer sank two German submarines and crippled another in an engagement off the Murman coast on Saturday, the Morgenbladet reported to-day.

American Ambassador To Berlin Returns

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—Returning from Berlin aboard the liner Frederick VIII., Ambassador James W. Gerard to-day refused to answer any question relating to the purpose of his visit to America at this time, saying that even the simplest question "might involve" him.

Artillery Active On Somme Front

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, Oct. 10.—(French Official).—Artillery on both sides was very active south of the Somme last night. The Germans started curtain fires on the Deniecourt section and bombarded Libons with lachrymose shells.

Allies Prepare For a Winter Campaign

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES ON THE SOMME FRONT, Oct. 10.—Despite the almost constant rain of the past ten days, the Allies have methodically and uninterruptedly continued their north-eastward rush until they have finally captured the dominating points of Sailly-Saillisel, on the crest of the ridge over which runs the Bapaume-Peronne road. With the advent of the autumn rainy season, the Allies are employing vast armies of men constructing permanent corduroy and macadam roads. These will permit the continuation of operations both fall and winter, and will not permit the Germans to take advantage of a winter lull to retrench and re-fortify themselves.

No Time For "Weasel Works" Says U.S. Paper

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—The New York Herald this morning, in its leading editorial, under the caption, "This is time for action, not for weasel words," says: "This is American territory—this North American Continent—and, thank God, the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine lives in American hearts. Can anybody doubt that the United States would rise in its might to repel a Prussian invasion of Canada? This warfare instituted by Prussian submarines in American waters is just as much an attack upon the Monroe Doctrine as would be a Prussian attempt to invade Canada."

French Comment on New Sub. Activity

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS, Oct. 10.—The torpedoeing of Allied steamships off American ports by German submarine forces is regarded as the most important war news of the day. Under headings of "Blackmail and Defiance," newspapers indicate the general sentiment that Germany is challenging the United States with a conviction that the challenge will not be taken up, and that neutrals must see to-day that they acted unwisely in not "nipping" the submarine warfare on commerce in the bud.

Music & Drama

MARKS BROTHERS.

The old favourites, the Robt. Marks Company, with May A. Bell Marks as the star, opened a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House, yesterday, and played to two capacity audiences, hundreds being turned away. The Matinee attraction was "Within the Law," while the offering at night was "Tess of the Storm Country." The Company did good work, in both productions while the specialties highly pleased the large audiences. May A Bell Marks added to her laurels in both plays.

Record crowds will undoubtedly greet the Company during the week.

Total Amount Accounted For To-day Is in the Neighbourhood of $1,200 —Two Boxes Turned In Since Bulk of Collection Was Counted

APPEALS THROUGH MAIL

Twelve hundred and fifty dollars represents a portion of the amount that was collected on Saturday for the Children's Aid Society. Two boxes were turned in to-day that have yet to be counted, so that the total amount will be very much higher. In addition to this one thousand appeals have been sent out through the mails. At least one thousand dollars is expected from this source. The result of the one-day campaign is very encouraging to the executive committee. The large corps of ladies who sold tags on Saturday have many interesting experiences to relate. A complete list of the amounts collected by each team and the total amount, will be published to-morrow.

Fair Board Endorse Scheme

Directors Favour Proposal to Establish Exhibition Grounds Adjoining Scott-Rutherford Property Which Has Been Selected for Sewage Disposal Site

The directors of the Peterborough Exhibition Board met on Saturday evening and endorsed the City Council proposal to purchase additional land adjoining the present authorized site of the sewage disposal plant with a view to converting it into a public park suitable for exhibition purposes. Public opinion in the area effected is inclined to favour the Council's latest effort to solve the difficulty of securing a location for the disposal plant. If the scheme goes through the plant and the exhibition grounds will be situated in the same neighbourhood on adjoining properties. It is claimed by engineers throughout the world that the activated sludge system of the sewage disposal is odourless, so that such a plant in close proximity to the fair grounds should hardly constitute a nuisance.

ACCIDENT NEAR FOWLER'S CORNERS

While motoring near Fowler's Corner last evening a car driven by Mr. Hall of Warkworth turned turtle and precipitated the occupants into the ditch. Mrs. Hall suffered and injury to her back which necessitated her removal to Nicholls Hospital. To-day she was removed to her home. It was while endeavoring to pass another car on a narrow road that Mr. Hall's car slid down a steep embankment and turned over.

CAPT. ROBERT McCAMUS FAIR.

To be caught by a German sniper after being slightly wounded by a fragment of shell, was the fatal experience of Captain R. M. Fair, whose death at the front has been communicated to his mother, Mrs. G. L. Fair, 4 Sandford Road, Toronto. The communication from the officer commanding, relative to Captain Fair's death, contains the following:

"We had just completed a successful attack and your son was walking through a captured town when he was hit by a fragment of a shell, but not badly wounded. This caused him to expose himself and a German sniper caught him. He died instantly."

The officer commanding also makes the following comment respecting the services rendered by Captain Fair at the front:

"His work both with me and the Stoke Gun Battery was splendid. The General Officer commanding on many occasions congratulated him on his efficient work."

Captain Fair was a son of the late George L. Fair. He is survived by his mother and three brothers namely, Lieut. Walker Fair of the 168th Battalion, Hugh Allan and George Lynden, all of whom reside in Toronto with their mother. Mr. Robert Fair of this city, is an uncle of the deceased. The late Captain Fair enlisted as a lieutenant in the 20th Battalion, Victoria Rifles, in Montreal, February 1915, and was subsequently promoted to Captain for efficient work at the front. He was a graduate of the Department of Applied Science at McGill University. His matriculation was obtained at the Peterborough Collegiate Institute. During his college career, Captain Fair was in the employ of the mechanical department of the Grand Trunk Railway at Stratford, Ontario.

The late Captain Fair formerly resided in Millbrook. He was twenty-two years of age and well known here.

PTE. ARTHUR G. S. TOMS.

Pte. Arthur G. S. Toms, who enlisted in Peterborough with the 57th Regiment's quota to the 2nd contingent, has laid down his life for the Empire. Pte. Toms went overseas with the 21st Battalion, and is officially reported killed in action. Before enlisting he was a member of the staff of the local branch of the Bank of Montreal, and during his year's residence in the city had made many friends, who will regret to hear of his death. "Tommy," as he was affectionately called, was a favourite with all who knew him. His relatives live in England.

PTE. A. MOSCROP.

Still another member of the gallant squad which left Peterborough in March, 1915, to join the 39th Battalion, has been wounded in the person of Pte. Arthur Moscrop, whose name was in the official list on Saturday. Pte. Moscrop enlisted in Peterborough on December 31st, 1914, New Year's eve, and was in the first half dozen to join what was then termed the third contingent. He boarded at 390 Queen street, and has relatives near Millbrook. Pte. Moscrop was drafted to another Canadian battalion after going overseas with the 39th.

GUNNER STANLEY SMITH.

Mr. W. H. Smith, 189 Hunter street east has received word that his son Gunner Stanley Smith, Canadian Artillery, is officially reported admitted to No. 12 General Hospital, Rouen, on Oct. 4th, suffering from a gunshot wound in the abdomen. Gunner Smith, who formerly worked at the Auburn Woollen Mills, is a well known local boy. He enlisted here with the 33rd Battery and went overseas with that unit.

PTE. CHAS. W. JEFFRIES.

Pte. Chas W. Jeffries, who enlisted in Peterborough with the 57th Regiment's first quota in August, 1914, is officially reported wounded, Pte. Jeffries went overseas with the 2nd Canadian Battalion, and this is the second time he has appeared on the casualty list. At the battle of Langemarck in April of last year when Major Bennett's men charged the Germans at daybreak, Pte. Jeffries was shot through the mouth and slightly injured. He was in hospital for a long period before returning to the front. No particulars have been received as to how badly he has been wounded now. A brother of Pte. Jeffries resides at Indian River.

THE SCORE BY INNINGS

EBBETSFIELD, Brooklyn, Oct. 10.—The weather man stepped in as a pinch hitter in the world's series this afternoon. If any additional pep were needed in the big tussle after yesterday's record breaking game it was injected by zippy and snappy brand of weather. The sun was shining brightly but there was a distinct snap in the air that threw all kinds of ginger into fans and players and at the same time was not uncomfortable.

Back in the home hailick and just as gritty and full of fight as ever the charging Dodgers faced the Red Sox in the third game of the title tilt with early indications that Jack Coombs would attempt to turn back the Boston batsmen.

PTE. ROSS KENDREY TELLS OF SOME HOT FIGHTING IN FRANCE

Peterboro' Boy Describes a Bayonet Charge and Also Some Warm Work With Grenades at Close Quarters

THE HUNS' COMPLAINT

Mrs. T. E. Kendrey has received the following interesting letter from her son, Pte. Roscoe Kendrey, with No. 1 Grenade Section, 2nd Battalion.

France, Sept. 12, 1916.

My Dear Mother,—Your very welcome letter received all O.K., a few days ago and so glad to hear from you again; also the parcel dated Aug. 9th, which was dandy. The tobacco was very acceptable. Many thanks for same.

That little Bible of which I spoke I have mailed to you, on the 9th of this month, and I hope you recive it O.K. I mailed it in the box which you sent the tobacco in.

Was glad to note that all at home were enjoying good health and taking everything into consideration am feeling pretty good myself.

The weather has been, for the most part, fine, so we have no kick coming that way.

At the present I am sitting out in an orchard and will have to hurry thus. I want it to go when the mail is collected in the a.m.

Maybe you'll be surprised if I tell you I have been through another bayonet charge, and came through the thickest of it without anything more than a few scratches, but just where this came off I can't tell, but we were successful in taking Fritz's trench and repulsing several of his counter-attacks. We galloped across "no man's land" under our own artillery fire with the first wave, and were in mixing it up with Fritz before he realized what had happened. Our bombs did great damage to him, and it was very much a case of "mercy kamerade" from him all the way down. Our section and part of another bombed our way down his trench and cleared everything in the form of a Hun out for over seventy yards of front. All the boys had some kind of a souvenir, from the Prussian Guard helmet to a button. Just as it was becoming dark he sent out a strong bombing party, and, as they advanced in three lines, one on each side of the trench and one in it with the intention of cutting us off, but all the bombers with rifles and bayonets got up out of the trench, and we had it out in the open for a while. Gee! What a shower of explosions, as the grenades burst. As you know, they are all filled with high explosives and I can tell you one's fate hung by a mere thread many times. I can tell you, mother, your prayers have not been in vain.

I have a Hun belt with an inscription on the buckle "Gott Mit Uns," which means "God with us." Also an eagle of a Prussian helmet.

It has been stated that the Huns claim we do not fight fair, as they say our artillery grounds them until the guns wear out, or the gunner goes sick, or gets tired firing, and then the infanty comes over and finishes up the dirty work. We should worry, though, of course they don't take into consideration how when they had the upper hand with shells, last summer (1915), and when we started something about all we could do was to make a noise like a mole, and sit tight, wondering when he was going to shoot; or when a "coal box" started with the old monotonous whine on it had your number on it, but those days are past.

The same time as I sent the Bible to you I sent Harold a little shoulder strap; something like the one I sent you.

Now, mother, I think I will have to close for now, hoping to hear from you again soon. With best love to all at home, as if named, I will say bye-bye, for now, remaining as Ever.

Your loving son,

Roscoe.

Two Fires and An Accident

The Peterborough Fire Department had more than its share of excitement last night, with two fires and an accident at the fire hall. Fireman John Drummond was the victim of the accident. In sliding down the pole from the sleeping quarters to the ground floor in response to an alarm shortly after 11 o'clock, he slipped and came down heavily, with the result that a bone in his leg was fractured. He was removed to his home on Wolfe street in an ambulance.

The first alarm was at 11.17, a call to the home of Mr. W. C. Ackerman, 380 Park street, where the cement and tile at the bottom of the fireplace had become overheated to such an extent that the roof of the cellar caught fire and the brigade had to be called out to deal with the situation.

At 1.42 this morning an alarm was sent in from the home of Miss Crowley, 86 Hunter street east, where a cupboard in the kitchen was on fire. It is thought that mice gnawing at matches in the cupboard caused the blaze. The damage was slight.

BITTER-SWEET

The New York Sun prints the following as its opinion in regard to Germany's slim chances for success or rather certainty of defeat:

Germany is plainly at the end of her rope. All the rest of the war for her must be the facile decensus. What is the use of prolonging the agony? Every day she delays the terms she will have to grant must grow harder and her means of meeting them and recovering her old prosperity less. Why should she not vote for peace at once, confess her guilt, pay the penalty and start a new career?

This is the opinion of a neutral and with a clearer perception of facts, or absence of sentiment, than perhaps ourselves, who are more directly interested in the outcome. Some of us are liable to be somewhat discouraged over recent events. We have for many months been so accustomed to reading only of success, that such incidents as the recent submarine activity of the Germans is disquisting. We must expect such things. Germany and the other central powers are so surrounded with an irresistible ring of steel and fire that they must be expected to use the only means left to show their belligerency with anything like success. We must not expect the course of the victory, which is assured, will be all smooth sailing. With the continuous successes of the allied armies there will be mingled reverses—not substantial enough, however, to divert or stay—the inevitable trend of events towards ultimate triumph of the armies of Britain and her allies. We must expect the bitter with the sweet.

ROWELL AND LAURIER.

Under the above heading, the Toronto News makes the following remarkable but charsoteristic statements:

According to Mr. N. W. Rowell, New Zealanders will recall with pride and gratification the fact that they are represented in the British navy by the battle cruiser "New Zealand." But for the party which Mr. Rowell supports at Ottawa, Canada would now have three such battle-cruisers in the North Sea. It was Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with whom the Ontario leader is to appear at London next week, who used his followers in the House of Commons and his appointees in the Senate to keep Canada out of the British navy.

The News is not quite honest in its expression of the conditions. It is insincere and deceptive summary of the conditions. It is incorrect to say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers "kept Canada out of the British navy." It was Mr. Borden and his government and followers that are responsible. The Senate did not kill the Borden gift ... scheme; it only demanded that the question should be submitted to the people but the government ... in spite of public condemnation of ... policy of sending ... ships to Britain—something ... represent Canada any more than sending $50 of Canada's money to Great Britain to make a ... holiday; sending a soldier to ... it would be having Canada represented by the army. But if the insinuation is to be admitted, that Sir Wilfrid and his followers were responsible for keeping Canada out of the British navy, who put it in his power to do so? Who is responsible for the fact that Canada like Australia, hasn't a battle fleet of her own, built in Canada by Canadian workmen, and manned by Canadian mariners? Where the hundreds of millions of Canada's ... Mr. Borden to utilize for ... naval plant and builders from ... ships or a Canadian navy, as a dominion ... of the Imperial navy; to be built in Canada, ready to be dealt with. Why did Mr. Borden discard those schemes and subject Canada to the humiliation of substitution of ... for permanency ... the consent of the Navy League, the price of their support ... the killing of the Laurier Navy Bill. They would stand for money contribution, but for no contribution of Canadian manhood. The News had better keep the naval matter out of discussion. The more it is talked about the more it is emphasized that the Borden government sold the Canadian built navy of Canada for a mess of pottage—the support of the Nationalists whose malign influence is dominant in the councils of the government to this day.

NO NEW PARTY.

The Toronto World is clamouring for a new party, a third party. It inveighs against the Conservative party, and being Conservative, denounces also the Liberal party. It cannot take a sharp enough curve to approve it. Its reproaches are specially directed to the Conservative party, probably because that party is in power, and partly because its leaders have not a fine enough perception of merit to call the proprietor of the World to the counsels of its party as a regenerating element, what would be, ipso facto, a sign of saving grace. The World knows better than any outsider how far the Conservative party, as led, deserves the reproaches it heaps upon it. The World denounces the Borden government in no measured terms. It declares that the government and the party it stands for, has become, bad in almost every way. It declares that the government has got things into a hopeless mess; that the disclosures in Manitoba and other Conservative spheres of influence, show that things are "wretched"; that the political—the party—outlook is hopeless, and that the cabinet is full of "rotten timber and deadwood." There may be a good deal of disarmulement behind these charges on the part of the proprietor of the World, but there is no doubt that the World is honestly disgusted with our present government, as are also thousands of the thinking rank and file of the party.

The best remedy for this condition does not consist in a new party. The experience of the United States with new parties is not encouraging. A new party arose there and had influence enough to lose the Republicans an election, but its course was short and it is now back in the old party ranks. If the World wants to work a real reform, it will not do much by organizing a new party. It will work its greatest success in reforming its own party. The historic Conservative party is good enough if it is kept good. The first movement towards the reform the World considers so necessary is to get the party out of the muddle it has worked itself into by its leaders failing in the responsibilities of office. In opposition it will have space for repentance and reflection on the folly of the discrediting of the ideals of the party by its leaders. It will see the advantage of ending the drift to a perilous lee shore that has been going on for the past five years, especially, through inveterate leadership and perfunctory administration.

In Canada there is no room for any new parties, nor for more than the two existing parties. The need is to keep them up to the standard of the respective democratic ideals they represent. Keep the Conservative party conservative and it is all right. But it is not strong enough to stand the bedevilment that comes from giving factions a controlling influence. The Conservative party, as led and manipulated now, does not give Conservative principles a fair chance. It is wrong to add fro by vacillatory leaders yielding to the insistence of factions rival in principle, but one is getting the ear and— to drop into slang—getting the goat, of the government. An Ontario faction in Ontario, hostile in professed principles to another faction in Quebec, jointly seeks to control the government. There is no agreement in principle between these factions, but the agreement in practice is perfect. They both stand by the government, and the government in straddling to please both, makes a miserable muddle of national interests.

If Mr. McLean and the World can persuade the Conservative party or its leaders to free itself from the influence of these dual factions, it will regenerate the Conservative party and fit it for occupying its true place in our national polity. But this can't be done by the organization of a new party, but the regeneration of the old. The first step in regeneration consists in disciplining the party that has been steered astray by ineffective leadership, and turning over the government and administration of the country to a party that has shown its fitness for the responsibility of office by giving Canada fifteen years of the best most progressive and prosperity-producing government the country has ever had.

WANTED—A STATESMAN.

Industrial Canada, the organ of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has an editorial headed, Wanted—A Statesman. It would seem to look upon the Dominion Government with contempt, and the "men who compose the Government of Canada" as "slackers of the worst kind." This is the unkindest cut of all; for while the Government may be slack in serving the people's interests they have been the devoted friends of such privileged interests as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—even to the extent of increasing the tariff against British trade during the war.—Ottawa Citizen.

THE RECOGNITION AND REASONABLENESS OF LABOUR UNIONISM

The New Republic is not a labour organ nor does it aim to make any special appeal to working men except as thinkers upon public questions, and its article on unionism has therefore special significance. Here is the key sentence:

"It should be a policy of the American nation to discriminate in favour of unionism, to recognize its merits, to define its functions, and to make it an essential part of the national industrial system."

Such a policy, it say, does not demand the coercion or intimidation of non-union labour; but it does imply popular and official discouragement of any attempt by employers to outlaw unionism. No progressive social adjustment of the conflict between wage-earners and their employers is possible, it contends, so long as the labour unions are required to fight for their very lives. Fear, suspicion, and violence are engendered by the situation thus created.

Even national integrity says the New Republic, is threatened by allowing the issue of unionism itself to be raised. Unionism is an indispensable condition of economic independence of the wage-earners as a class. It is as indispensable for industrial freedom as the vote is for political freedom. Only by unionism can workmen safeguard themselves "from being victimized by economic forces which may indeed operate beneficially to them, but which always operate irrespective of their inclinations and wills."

Industrial conflicts involving the recognition of unions are bitter and intense, because the issue is one which both sides refuse to arbitrate. When they occur, something like civil war breaks out. Strike-breakers are sanctioned by unionists and protected by gunmen. The social atmosphere is poisoned by recriminations, fear, and hatred, and the beaten party retires sullenly to obscurity, fully determined to renew the conflict at the first favourable opportunity." Public safety is compromised by the warfares.

The writer then addresses himself to the employer who fears that the nations' promotion of unionism would surrender him, bound hand and foot, to a grasping labour oligarchy. Once the unions obtain the security of recognition, he says, their attitude will change. Hitherto they have been struggling to survive and to grow, and their policy has been determined by their position as semi-outlaws. But if a frank and loyal attempt be made to incorporate unions into the national industrial system, unionism will become an educative and helpful influence.

To this recognition must be added permanent boards of investigation, which will scrutinize labour problems and suggest solutions. The argument which we have summarized may not be regarded as absolutely convincing, and the writer does not make quite clear what he means by national recognition. But the analogy of the union with the vote is illuminating, and so is the description of the evil result of the lack of such means of assertion. The vote is a safety-valve. Unionism may be made to serve the same purpose.—Toronto Star.

Dear Editor,—The silent drop wears the rock, and a little leaven, leavens the whole lump—the public are waking up and are asking me why the council has passed such a by-law and is the petition and influence of 70 people to over-ride a community of 20,000 citizens, whose interests and conveniences are to be sacrificed to a whim or a fad of a few.

Is the farming community to be taken into account, who find it a great convenience to drive into town in the evening after a hard day's work and get whatever groceries they require. At the present time they are greatly handicapped for want of help, pressed with work, and sometimes unfavourable weather conditions—will such action be for the best interests of the city? I do not think so. Of course, there are some people who care only for their own interests and I am sorry to say that the number seems to be increasing and private interests seems to be the objective of a great number of persons; the personal pronoun, I seems to loom up at the present time—if people would size up the situation and look a little to the other sides, and consider what influence this by-law will have on the interests, the best interests of the city—not the interests of a few, this is what we put men into the council for, and they take the oath of office and promise to give their best care and attention to the general welfare—well we do not think it was wise to pass such a by-law for the previous reasons that we have already given, and these reasons are shared in by a large number of the intelligent ratepayers of the city. What will be the effect on strangers and visitors, when they come into our city and find all the stores closed up—oh, nothing only a fifty dollar fine or six months in jail by-law for selling a few groceries to a poor person that cannot dress up like other ladies and has to slip out in the gloaming for any little thing she needs—They would think that we were crazy. Another reason why this law should not have been forced through in such a short time, without the public being made aware of its provisions, was the necessity that there is for every person able to do a day's work to do it with all their might—no slack or loafing will do at the present time, no stand easy or loitering will do, government is working in Britain night and day and the more money we make we will be less burden on others and may be able to help our noble nation in her struggle for liberty and righteousness, then why should any council force a by-law on a loyal and free people—the people are only now learning what has taken place and are much put about by it. I hope the matter will be brought before the council and the by-law quashed. Thanking you for your courtesy in allowing me space in Voice of the People's Column.

Yours truly,
JAMES SUTHERLAND.

THE BURDEN OF AGE.

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing strength. Many people of advanced years have restored health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They restore the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

GERMANS WELL FED BY ENGLISH CAPTORS

Prisoners Praise Treatment Received —Allowed Maintain Own Discipline—Huge Camp Described

A correspondent for a United States newspaper writes from London: At Leigh in the County of Lancashire, I unexpectedly came upon an internment camp for German privates and, showing my papers, I had no difficulty in getting permission to visit it. Leigh, although called a camp, has no likeness whatever to the tented field. The "camp" I found is really a weaving mill, which had been finished but not yet used when the war broke out, and which was then taken over by the government. A few slight alterations have made it into a very comfortable airy barrack for two thousand prisoners of war. That was the number of men which I found there, and as they all were taken in the early stages of the war they were almost all men of splendid physique. A very well nourished crowd they looked and those whom I asked what they thought of the food they received all declared it excellent and plentiful, though of course rather monotonous. They declared that they got more meat than they ever had been used to before, and certainly more than they got in the German army, where the ration is about three-eighths of a pound per man. The prisoners came from all parts of Germany, and there were many Brandenburgers among them.

The commander of the camp, Colonel Blagrove, told me discipline is very easily maintained and that as a matter of fact the prisoners themselves looked after that. "From the very first," he said, "I have encouraged the sense of responsibility and authority in their non-commissioned officers, who are really a splendid lot of men.

Games and Education

"I have allowed the 'feldwebels' (senior non-commissioned officers) certain small privileges and they more than make up for this by keeping things running smoothly. The prisoners have their own educational committees, and many of the men have taken up the study of English. Others, less ambitious, work at wood carving or play cricket, a game of which they knew little or nothing before they came here. The men have also organized a fine band and we have two theatres where performances are given three times a week."

Nearly all the men were in the habit of receiving remittances from home, generally in small weekly sums, but many of them have now written to their families that they get everything they want and that it is absolutely unnecessary to send them anything. Food parcels have become a thing of the past entirely.

GRANT AND THE ALLIES

Civil War Cited To Show Parallel With Great War

Frank Mr. Simonds of The New York Tribune finds a parallel to the war in the American Civil War. From 1861 to 1863, from First Bull Run until the third day of Gettysburg, the Confederacy fought for a victory by successive offensives; the North, with greater numbers, resources, and command of the seas, failed to coordinate the movements of its greatest armies and to obtain the mastery that permitted it to control the offensive. In 1864, however, Grant came east with one clear intention—to attack on all fronts, and simultaneously there was to be equal pressure on all fronts, continuing casualties, never-ending wastage in men and resources until attrition, if nothing else, should end the war. In 1864 Grant in Virginia, Thomas in Tennessee, and Sherman from Atlanta to the sea, struck their simultaneous blows. Next year the Confederacy collapsed.

Quick, Direct Results.

There is nothing to equal newspaper advertising for quick and direct results.

Watch the advertising columns and see the class of merchants and manufacturers that use this method of publicity. You will find they are the most successful in their respective lives. Many of them have tried other methods, but experience has shown them that newspaper advertising has no equal in bringing results. The reason for this is that the paper is read in the home, when the mind of the reader is in a receptive condition, and on the lookout for anything that will make life easier or more pleasant.

"The White Flour Pinch"—have you felt it? With the advancing price of wheat "the seven-cent loaf is doomed," say the bakers. In its place we have the eight-cent loaf—in many cities only the sixteen-cent loaf. A loaf of white flour bread is not a complete ration. However wholesome and pure, it does not supply all the proteids the human body needs. In Shredded Wheat Biscuit you have all the body-building nutriment in the whole wheat grain prepared in a digestible form. It is always the same price, always the same high quality. Eat it for breakfast with milk or cream or with fruits.

THANKSGIVING DAY AT STONEY LAKE

Influx of Visitors Enjoyed the Autumn Decorations at Popular Resort—Islinda Brought a Big Crowd on Saturday.

MAY BE ANNUAL VISIT

Probably more people spent the Thanksgiving week end at Stoney Lake this year than in the history of that beauty spot. The magnificent weather added to the fact that the Stoney Lake Navigation Company had arranged steamer connections on Saturday and yesterday resulted in the biggest October influx of visitors Stoney Lake has ever seen. The steamer Islinda in command of Capt. Pat Young brought a big crowd up on Saturday and their numbers were increased by motor car parties so that Thanksgiving Sunday found many cottages occupied.

For many people it was their first visit in mid-autumn and they found new beauties in scenes that have always been beautiful. The islands and shore decked out in their autumn garb of many hues, the yellow, crimson, scarlet, red and orange of the maples, beeches, elms and poplars, standing out in vivid contrast against the deep verdancy of the evergreens, presented a vista that even to eyes which never have tired feasting on the charm of the gem of Kawarthadom, was a revelation. The weather conditions were perfect on Saturday and Sunday, and the cold weather yesterday could not spoil the effect of the preceding days. The Thanksgiving trip promises to become an annual affair, if the popularity of this year's event is to be taken as a criterion.

The week end visitors included the following: Mr. Harry Beale, Prof. Stewart of Toronto, Lieut. Gordon Grahame and Mrs. Grahame, Mr. E. H. D. Hall, Mr. T. E. Bradburn, Mr. A. Stevenson, Judge G. M. Rose and Mrs. Rose of Cobourg, with their guests, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fairbairn of Montreal, Mr. Sutherland of Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. John Nugent, Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Knapman, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Hamilton, Messrs. Ben and Joseph Yelland, Mr. R. C. Strickland of Lakefield, Mr. Jas. Donnell, Mr. J. D. Craig and family, Mr. A. Gibson, Miss Mary Gibson and Miss Moffatt and Miss Starr of Toronto, the Misses Simpson; Mr. G. W. Hatton and Mrs. Hatton, Mr. Hamilton and family of Toronto, Mr. W. G. Morrow, Mr. D. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Irwin, Mr. Felix Brownscombe, Mr. Chas. Richor.

If Stomach Hurts Drink Hot Water

A Physician's Advice.

"If dyspeptic sufferers from gas, sour or flatulence, stomach acidity or sour-stomach, gastric catarrh, heartburn, etc., would take a teaspoonful of pure bisurated magnesia in half a glass of hot water immediately after eating, they would soon forget they were ever afflicted with stomach trouble, and doctors would have to look elsewhere for patients." In explanation of these words a well known New York physician stated: that most forms of stomach trouble are due to stomach acidity and fermentation of the food contents of the stomach combined with an insufficient blood supply to the stomach. He urges that the blood supply and bisurated magnesia promptly neutralizes the excessive gastric acid and stops food fermentation, the combination of the two, therefore, being marvelously successful and doubly preferable to the use of artificial digestants, stimulants or medicines for indigestion.

"BEGIN HOT WATER DRINKING IF YOU DON'T FEEL RIGHT

Says glass of hot water with phosphate before breakfast washes out poisons.

If you wake up with a bad taste, bad breath and tongue is coated; if what you eat sours and forms gas and acid in stomach, or you are bilious, constipated, nervous, sallow and can't get feeling just right, begin inside bathing. Drink before breakfast, a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will flush the poisons and toxins from stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels and cleanse, sweeten and purify the entire alimentary tract. Do your inside bathing immediately upon arising in the morning to wash out of the system all the previous day's poisonous waste, gases and sour bile before putting more food into the stomach.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became loaded with body impurities, get from your pharmacist a quarter pound of limestone phosphate which is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except for a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant.

Just as soap and hot water set on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and freshening, so hot water and limestone phosphate with in the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels. Men and women who are usually constipated, bilious, headachy or have any stomach disorder should begin this inside bathing at once and keep it up. They are assured they will become real cranks on the subject shortly.

Washing Won't Rid Head of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three to four more applications will completely dissolve, and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

The junior work on Saturday afternoons promises to be well attended this year. Forty-six little girls from 8 to 13 were present on Saturday last.

The St. John Ambulance course, First Aid to the Injured, will begin on Monday night, Oct. 16 at 8.30. Lectures are to be given by Dr. Harvey. It is hoped a large number will take advantage of these most practical and helpful lectures.

Dr. Jessie Bernie will give a talk on Wednesday night at the club girls' meeting.

The Bible Study class will welcome all young women. Miss Edna Ferguson leader. Thursday evening from 7.30 to 8.30.

We are pleased to announce the series of meetings for girls to be conducted by Mrs. F. Rae 16 begin Oct. 16th. The first meeting to be held on Monday afternoon at 3.30.

The gymnasium classes are being well attended, but we know there are many more girls in the city who would enjoy these classes. The classes will be open to visitors during the month, and all girls are invited to come and see for themselves how interesting and helpful the work is.

The gymnasium is not only for children and the business girl. There are special classes for ladies on Tuesdays and Fridays.

Prepare This for a Bad Cough—It's Fine

Cheaply and Easily Made, but Does the Work Quickly.

The finest cough syrup that money can buy—costing only about one-fifth as much as ready-made preparations—can easily be made up at home. The way it takes hold, and conquers distressing coughs, throat and chest colds will make you enthusiastic about it. Any druggist can supply you with 2½ ounces of Pinex (45 cents worth). Pour this into a 16-oz. bottle and fill the bottle with plain granulated sugar syrup. Shake thoroughly and it is ready for use. The total cost is about 64 cents and gives you 16 ounces—a family supply—of a most effectual, pleasant tasting remedy. It keeps perfectly.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the inflamed or swollen throat membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough will disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, whooping cough or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, combined with guaiacol and is known the world over for its prompt healing effect on the throat membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions, and don't accept anything else. A guarantee of absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

THANKSGIVING SERVICES IN GEORGE ST. CHURCH SUNDAY

The Thanksgiving services in the George Street Methodist Church on Sunday were very largely attended, especially in the evening, when a social musical service, including anthems, solos, quartettes and a violin solo by Miss Mignon Telgmann, was held. At the close of both services contributions were received for the sending of Christmas gifts to the enlisted members of the congregation.

Rev. Mr. Peever announced that the ladies of the congregation who were working on behalf of the Red Cross, had collected $986, during the year, and had sent nearly 5,000 articles to the hospitals and to the trenches.

The total contributions of the congregation to the Albert College Fund on Sunday, Oct. 1st, amounted to $1,098.

The Women's Missionary Auxiliary of the George Street Church is meeting this afternoon at 3.30 o'clock in the church parlour.

The mid-week service will be held on Wednesday evening, at 8 o'clock. At its close there will be a regular meeting of the Trustee Board.

An Unfailing Way To Banish Hairs

(Beauty Notes)

Ugly hair growths can be removed in the privacy of your own home if you get a small original package of delatone and mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the hairy surface. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes, then removed and the skin washed and every trace of hair will have vanished. No harm or inconvenience can result from this treatment, but be sure you buy real delatone.

At the remnant counter bits of lace insertion can be found. These will be good for binding the seams of thin fabrics.

Peterboro' Pioneer Has Passed Away

Rev. David Tully, D.D., Dies in Media, Pa.

There passed away recently at his home in Media, Pa., one of the early residents of the district of Peterborough, the Rev. David Tully, D.D. Mr. Tully lived to an extremely old age, having entered upon his 90th year on the 27th of August last. He remained in the active ministry and preached every Sabbath until two months ago.

The family were connected in the early days with St. Paul's church and Mr. Tully preached from St. Paul's pulpit on several occasions when he visited Peterborough. His father's name was Andrew Tully and he was one of four chosen to be the first elders of St. Paul's in 1834. His brothers, William, George and Robert Tully are all deceased. There is at least one descendant of the family still connected with the church, Mrs. William Smith, whose maiden name was Tully.

The Rev. David Tuily was born in Roxburshire Scotland on August 27th 1819, and when eleven years of age came, with his parents to Peterborough County where his boyhood days were spent.

He was educated in the United States at LaFayette College, Easton, Pa., and finally graduated from Princeton Theological Seminary, N.J., in the class of 1850. He served in the pastorates of Princeton and Ballston N.Y., and then, on the Civil War breaking out, was elected Chaplain of the 77th New York Volunteers. He went through the Peninsula Campaign with General McClellan. He was afterwards pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Belvidere, N.J., and later of First Presbyterian church, Oswego, N.Y. At the time of his death he was pastor of Media, Pa.

CHRISTIAN CONVENTION IN ASSEMBLY HALL

The annual convention in the Assembly Hall on George Street opened on Saturday evening, with a very fair attendance, a number of the visitors arriving on the morning trains. Quite a number of others coming from Toronto and other centres by the evening and afternoon trains, the conference this year, contrary to all expectations, was about the largest ever held in the city. Some one hundred of the Lord's people were present at the meeting on Sunday morning to partake of the "bread and wine," thereby keeping the "Feast of Remembrance," divinely instituted by their Lord on the "very night in which he was betrayed."

In the afternoon about one hundred and thirty-five were present to hear the word of the Lord. After much waiting upon God, several of the visiting servants of the Lord leading in prayer, Mr. D. McGeachy of Barnia addressed the meeting. Mr. J. C. Beattie of Barrie then followed with a very practical word, and Mr. W. F. Douglas of this city spoke a few words in closing.

After an open-air meeting on the corner of Simcoe and George streets, Mr. C. S. Summers of Cedar Cottage, B.C., Mr. Joseph Pearson of Deseronto, and Mr. James McMullen of Toronto, were the three witnesses who testified to the saving power of the Gospel. "A three-fold cord is not quickly broken."

A large number were present, and heard the word of life.

On Monday morning Mr. Fred Watson of Huntsville and Mr. McGeachy gave "goodly words" to the appreciation of all present.

The afternoon meeting was a little smaller as some left on the afternoon train for Toronto, but the word of the Lord was enjoyed by all, as ministered by Mr. Beattie and Mr. Summers.

The convention was brought to a close at the meeting last night, which was addressed by Mr. Watson, Mr. McMullen and Mr. McGeachy.

Some five hundred meals were served during the two days in an adjoining room and the ministry from kitchen to platform was abundant; cause for thanksgiving to ascend from the hearts of many to the Lord. Most of the visitors leave the city by to-day's trains. The regular meetings continue in the hall on Wednesday and Friday nights, and the Gospel is preached every Sunday night at 7 o'clock and all are kindly invited.—Com.

TAKE SALTS TO FLUSH KIDNEYS

Eat less meat if you feel Backachy or have Bladder trouble

Meat forms uric acid which excites and overworks the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Regular eaters of meat must flush the kidneys occasionally. You must relieve them like you relieve your bowels; removing all the acids, waste and poison, else you feel a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizzy, sleepiness and general decay of goo is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment; the channels often get irritated, obliging you to get up two or three times during the night.

To neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine and bladder disorders disappear. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive, harmless, and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then, thus avoiding serious kidney and bladder diseases.

New Toronto Aldermen Were Visitors to City

Came Here to Inspect the Incinerating Plant and Incidentally Investigate the Tax Rate

A deputation consisting of the New Toronto Council, headed by Mr. A. N. Reid of the Reid Products Company, Toronto, were visitors to the city Saturday and Sunday. The party comprised the following: Reeve Ironsides, Aldermen Lovejoy, Fraser, McKnight, Town Clerk Scott, and Mr. McBride of Toronto. The object of their visit here was to inspect the incinerating plant which was constructed and installed by the Reid Products Company. The party have returned from Camp Borden, where thirty-eight furnaces were installed. The local plant was thoroughly inspected and the deputation as a whole was favourably impressed with the results. New Toronto is one of the outlying sections of Toronto. The community boasts of many improvements and among other things are contemplating the installation of an incinerator.

J. J. HILL'S ESTATE.

Amount Grows to a Hundred Million —Son Gets Most of It.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Oct. 6.—Property left by James J. Hill, railroad builder, subject to probate in Minnesota courts, is valued at more than $100,000,000 by his son, Louis W. Hill, in an inventory furnished appraisers of the estate yesterday. The inventory does not include several parcels of real estate in the North-West, or Mr. Hill's properties in other States.

Stocks and bonds are also entered at par, and the market value will be largely in excess of figures given. Men who were familiar with Mr. Hill's holdings roughly estimated last night that the total market value of his securities and other properties listed in the inventory at par, would make his estate total around $100,000,000.

The inventory reveals that Mr. Hill was an investor in Anglo-French bonds to the value of $1,400,000.

Have You Given Thought to the Wisdom of Early Choosing of a Coat?

Have you noted the clever styles—and how smart and good looking they are? And, a VERY good reason for buying early may be gained from the experience WE had during the past week. We re-ordered one of the models which had been in such great demand and promised several customers we would have the coats in in a few days.

You can imagine our surprise when we were notified by the manufacturer that he could not fill our order because he did not have any more of the material—NOR COULD HE GET ANY.

We suggest again the early choosing of your Autumn coat.

THANKSGIVING SERVICES AT GILMOUR MEMORIAL

Harvest Festival anniversary services were held in the Gilmour Memorial Baptist church on Sunday when the Rev. Dougald Brown of Park Street Church, Peterborough as the special preacher delivered thoughtful and impressive sermons at both services.

Happily chosen and well rendered music was a pleasing and helpful feature of the occasion and it was evident that it was heard by the large congregations with great appreciation.

It was noted with pleasure that the Bridgenorth Methodist Church had cancelled its Sunday evening service making it possible for the Rev. Mr. McKee and a large number of his congregation to be present.

On Monday evening the anniversary supper provided by the ladies of the church was spoken of as being both sumptuous and tasteful while the wanting at the tables by the young people left nothing to be desired.

The programme at the public meeting reflected the greatest possible credit both on those who arranged it and all who took part. The items were as follows:

Opening—O Canada.
Prayer—Rev. Dougald Brown.
Anthem—By the choir.
Chairman's address—Rev. John Galt.
Duet—Mrs. Joe. Mann and Mrs. Albert Nicholl.

SERGT. DENISON WOUNDED

The Sergt., F. B. Denison of Coldwater, Ont., reported wounded in today's list is thought by his local friends to be Fred Denison, the well-known Peterborough hockey player. "Deunie" went overseas with a Guelph battalion. His father formerly proprietor of the National Hotel, moved away from Peterborough several years. The family formerly lived at Coldwater. The Examiner has received no definite particulars about the casualty.

Sergt. H. M. Smith of the Canadian Engineers whose home is at 247 Wescott and who will be remembered by football fans as secretary of the Nomad in the city on leave for a few days. Incidentally Sergt. Smith would like to take some recruits back with him when he goes. The Engineers need trained men of all kinds and offer fascinating work and a fine opportunity for workmen to do their bit along lines that are accustomed. Drafts are sent overseas regularly. The training depot will be at St. John's, Que., near Montreal during the coming winter. Sergt. Smith will be at the recruiting rooms, Simcoe street between 7 and 8 o'clock each evening this week.

Mr. W. H. Price of the Trade and Commerce Department, Ottawa, is spending a short time at his home, 498 Bonsecour street, before leaving to join the 74th Battery, with which he enlisted in Ottawa.

The 247th Battalion commenced drilling this morning and the new recruits were initiated into the mysteries of squad drill.

Mr. K. G. Lech has received an interesting souvenir of one of the recent air raids made on England in the shape of a piece of wood from the Zeppelin destroyed by Lieut. Robinson, V.C. The souvenir was sent over by Major Keith Lech of the 93rd. There is a very strong smell of smoke around the fragment.

Pte. H. J. Matthews, who was overseas with the 20th Battalion, and has been invalided home, has reached Peterborough, and is at his home, 492 Cambridge street. Mr. Matthews is very anxious to get employment as soon as possible, and would prefer a position as janitor.

Ottawa, Oct. 8.—It is officially announced through the chief press censor's office that the following troops have arrived safely in England: 111th, 130th, 136th and 146th Ontario Battalions; 150th and 180th French Canadian Battalions, 118th Highlanders Battalion, Alberta; 96th Highlanders Battalion, Saskatchewan; 148th Montreal Battalion; 140th and 145th New Brunswick Battalions; No. 5 Battery Siege Artillery, Prince Edward Island; No. 9 Battery Siege Artillery, Halifax; drafts — Horse Artillery, Army Service Corps, Signallers, Royal Flying Corps, Naval Ratings.

U-BOAT SAILORS GO MAD.

The nerving strain upon the crews of German submarines is so great that some of the sailors are made mad, according to an account of life in an underseas boat, given to the Aftenblad of Stavanger, Norway, by a German seaman, who writes, in part, as follows:

"Our expeditions generally lasted for two months. Oil and benzine we got from German trawlers. As we had a wireless installation on board we were able to keep in communication with Germany, and were able to say for certain at what points we would meet the trawlers.

"Sometimes we were under the sea for 15 hours at a time, but then the air became suffocating. It is very fatiguing to submerge. We used to get quite deaf, and had to shout to one another. It affected our nerves dreadfully, and two of our brave strong fellows, about 25 years old, went mad. I myself had to go to the hospital for some months.

"At the beginning of the war the English captured many of our submarines. I have been told about 20 or 30, but we soon found means of protecting ourselves against them.

"I did not take any part in the North Sea battle, but we lay in Cuxhaven when the damaged ships came in. Many of the vessels had been badly injured, almost, and no less than five hospital ships came down from Hamburg to take off the men who were wounded. At first we thought we had won a victory but when we got further information we understood that both sides had suffered equally."

TO REBUILD DIXMUDE

PARIS, October 5.—The councillors of the Commune of Dixmude began a special session here to-day to discuss plans for the rebuilding of that ruined Belgian town.

M. Geymaert, who is the acting Burgomaster of Dixmude in place of M. Beert, who died in exile in England last year, presided. As a compliment to the French hospitality the proceedings were conducted in the French language instead of in Flemish.

The town architect of Dixmude presented plans for the reconstruction of the place. The plans call for widening of the streets and raising in part the streets and buildings not yet destroyed.

WHAT DEFEAT WOULD MEAN

Circulars Warn Germans what to Expect From England.

Coincident with the peace agitation being carried on in Germany by the Socialist and many of the more liberal politicians of the Empire, anonymous circulars are being distributed which paint pictures of what might happen the German people in case of defeat in the world war. One of these circulars which is approvingly quoted by the Cologne Gazette, reads, according to a translation printed in the London Times, as follows:

"The majority of our people still have no conception of the consequences which would follow if we were defeated, and defeated by such an enemy as England. It is a dangerous mistake to regard as vain boasting the speeches of English Ministers and deputies, who after our overthrow, desire to destroy German 'militarism,' to blow up Krupp's works, and to banish the Kaiser to St. Helena. In the event of her victory England will not quite differently. 'Rule, Britannia, and destroy,' was always England's motto.

"For God's sake let us not deceive ourselves about England's determination not to force Germany to her knees that she must accept England's conditions without resistance, and be wiped out forever as a competitor in the world's markets. All classes of the people are united in this resolve, from the First Sea Lord to the humblest dock laborer at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

"It cannot be too firmly insisted that such a victory for England would mean an irreparable catastrophe for the German Empire. Not only would the German Empire be dissolved but our people itself would be most seriously threatened with extinction, especially in view of the Russian torrent pouring in from the East. Such an English victory would not only mean the bankruptcy of our industry and our overseas trade but it would be the ruin of our whole middle class.

"It would be felt especially by our trading middle class because such an English victory would totally exclude the possibility of our enemies being made to pay war costs and for generations to come our own war burdens would grow enormously. Among our workmen there would be misery which would throw them back for eighty years—back to the times when English machine made yarns drove out the German hand made yarns, and starvation fever carried away thousands, especially in Silesia and Saxony."

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH CRISIS

A Letter From the Editor of the Presbyterian Record

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—In the midst of the world-struggle for liberty and regardless of its sorrow and pain, there has been thrust upon the Presbyterians of Canada a similar alternative, either to stand for their time honoured freedom and rights or to submit to the dictation of an usurped ecclesiastical domination and control.

The Union Committee, the head centre of that domination, have just sent out all over the Church a document informing the people that the Assembly, "the Supreme Court of the Church," has resolved to break up their Church Home and drive them into a great Church merger; but staving for their comfort that while sentence has been passed, the execution will not take place for "several years." The contents of that document are chiefly fiction.

(1) Its first fiction is that because a few men in Assembly have resolved upon such a step, the question is decided. This fiction is without the slightest foundation. The Assembly cannot decide anything outside of its own constitution. The Assembly is the supreme court of the church to legislate for the church's existence, and with no power to legislate it out of existence.

Have the more than two hundred men who form the Parliament of Canada, power, in accordance with the Constitution, to sever Canada from the Empire, and unite with the U. S. A., and Mexico, in forming a new civil order on this continent? Certainly not. They take their oath to legislate for Canada. The Constitution of Canada provides for that and for no other thing. They cannot vote as a Parliament outside that Constitution. If they were so to vote it would be merely an expression of their individual opinion, of no force, having no authority.

No more have the men who compose the General Assembly power to terminate the independent existence of the Presbyterian Church in Canada. The constitution of the church makes no provision for such a thing. They cannot vote (as an Assembly) outside that constitution. Their vote beyond it is simply an expression of their individual opinion, of no force, having no authority.

Further, the Assembly has acknowledged by its own action that the question of leaving their own church for another is a question for the people. All matters within the church, the Assembly itself decides. This question of leaving their own church beyond its power by referring it to the people. But not receiving from them the answer it expected, the Assembly now usurps their rights and assumes dictatorial powers to which it has not a shadow of legal or moral claim.

(2) The second fiction in that document is that the action taken by the Assembly was authorized by a "substantial majority" of the people.

The Assembly after declaring to the people "that a union of the churches to be real and lasting must carry the consent of the entire membership"—first asked their judgment in 1911. The membership including Elders and Moderators of the Session, was then 198,916, of whom 113,000 voted "yes" and 50,733 voted "nay." The Assembly declared the opposition too great, and halved the marvage until there should be, to use its own words, the "practically unanimous action" which the people had been told from the beginning, must be a condition of union.

Four years later, in 1915, the Assembly, again submitting its previous declaration, including "practically unanimous action," asked once more the judgments of the people. The membership, including Elders and Moderators of Session, had now increased by about forty thousand, to 238,822, of whom 113,000 voted "yes," about the same as before, and 73,735 "nay," an increase of about twenty-three thousand. In the three-fourths of the church east of the Lakes, with a membership of 253,750, the vote was 80,-982 "yes" and 64,616 "nay."

In connection with this "majority" fiction, note:

(a) Majorities rule within the church but while any who wish may withdraw, no majority can compel people from one church to another.

(b) The so-called "majority" vote is only one third of the entire membership. No firm can legally merge its business with another firm without the affirmative vote of at least a majority of its stock.

(c) Even that one-third vote was asked and given upon the assured understanding that no further steps would be taken unless there were "practically unanimous action." To use that vote as has been done by the Assembly is a distinct violation of that understanding.

(d) Turn from civil law to church law. When the Assembly remits a matter to Presbyteries those not voting are counted "nay." This is a law of the church. By the same rule, when the Assembly remitted this question to the people only one third of our membership has voted "yes" and two-thirds "nay."

(3) A third fiction in that document is its attempt to reassure the unwilling by telling them that, even if they should be driven out of their church, and into another against their will, they would find no change. That fiction is a specially unworthy one in that it is so patent an untruth. No congregation can be part of a church without coming under its government and laws.

We would be exchanging a church, broad and liberal, yet with standards of Scripture truth to which it is pledged, for one which has thrown down all safeguards of truth by deliberately dropping out of the Basis of Union the one question which would pledge ministers to the System of Truth in that Basis. Ministers in the new church would be pledged to no System of Truth, not even that of its own so-called Basis.

The ordained eldership, which has been a foundation principle in the Presbyterian church, would, together with "Session" and "Presbytery" be little more than a name, a shadow of the reality.

Every congregation, from the least to greatest, would at once come under the control of the Settlement Committee. No matter what time a congregation might become vacant, it could only call a minister at one time in the year, at the annual meeting of the Settlement Committee, and if that call should fail or the Settlement Committee decline to grant it, the congregation would have to wait another year, and take such supply for the year as the Settlement Committee might choose to send.

That Settlement Committee would be a combination of wire pulling and despotism, to which the liberties and rights of both ministers and people would be sacrificed. We would be exchanging one of the freest churches in the world for a system of ecclesiastical bondage.

If Germany were to win this war, and the British Empire were merged into one world-dominant power, most of our people would eat and sleep, work and rest, buy or sell as before, and according to Germany's claim, the imposition of "kultur" would be for our good. But men and women of the British Empire, while desiring world-wide brotherhood, prefer to be Britons still, with all that the name implies.

In like manner the men and women of the Presbyterian church, while living and working in unity and harmony with all true Christians, will not surrender their church which they love, for an ecclesiastical autocracy which is being thrust upon them, the spirit of which is even now manifest in its disregard of understandings and assurances, in its complete ignoring of the increased opposition of the people, and in the fourth which ecclesiasticism has thus offered to the membership of the church, after telling them that the opposition in the first vote was too great and asking them for a second vote.

(4) A fourth fiction in that document is that this merger is needed for the wider expression of Christian fellowship.

There are two kinds of togetherness—that of cohesion and that of compression; on the one hand brotherhood of spirit with outward variety and freedom; on the other hand outward uniformity under central domination. In Europe to-day these two principles are locked in deadly embrace. And liberty will win.

In the Church there is the same conflict. Some are working for a larger outward uniformity under one dominant sway. Those continuing the Presbyterian church stand for the liberty of diversity and for unity and fellowship with all true Christians of every name. The latter have the wider expression of Christain fellowship. The only thing that would be wider in the proposed change would be wider bureaucratic control and a wider kindling of division and strife.

Let all lovers of our church take courage and rally to her help. She will continue as in the past, in unity and harmony with other churches, to do her part for Canada and the world.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

BOSTON WINS 2-1 IN A FOURTEEN INNINGS GAME

BOSTON, Oct. 9.—Del Gainer is the hero of Boston to-night. He was called upon this afternoon in the hour of Bean town's greatest need, and he responded with a smashing single which scored a Sox runner and gave the Red Sox a 2 to 1 victory in the fourteenth inning of the second battle for the world's championship.

It was a thrilling climax to a thralling baseball drama, a finish that came just when it looked like darkness would end the deadlock and sent into a frenzy of baseball madness the 41,373 persons who witnessed it.

The game abounded in startling plays. It was as different from the first affair of Saturday as are day and night. The Dodgers rose to supreme heights to-day. They played like real world series performers, and the Sox kept pace with them in electrifying the stands with amazing plays afield. All in all, it was a ball game, the kind that one reads about in action, but rarely sees.

The Dodgers were beaten, yes, but not dishonoured. They performed a come-back as they promised, and if their playing to-day forecasts what they are going to do in the future, it should inspire hope in the hearts of their supporters, even though the series counts two to nothing against them. The Dodger chief caused a surprise when he sent Smith, his southpaw, to the firing line, and a wise choice it was, because Smith pitched one of the prettiest games ever seen in the blue ribbon events of baseball.

"Babe" Ruth worked for the Sox, and hurled just as was expected of him, a masterful game, rising to the greatest heights in the pinches.

"Hi" Myers was the bright shining star of the Dodgers. He scored their only run of the game in the first with a terrific home run. In cents fieldi he was something of a Nemesis for the Red Sox batters. In the fifth he made a circus catch of Hooper's liner back of second. In the ninth his great catch and more remarkable throw killed Janvrin at the plate with what would have been the winning tally.

Janvrin was on third with one out and the score a tie. Hoblitzel shot a slashing drive to centre. Myers ran for it, judged it perfectly, and made the put out. At that very second Janvrin, a fast man, streaked it for home. It looked like a certain run for the Red Sox. Myers drew back his arm and drove the ball towards the plate with the speed of a lightning flash, and Janvrin was out.

Scott was the bulwark in the Red Sox defence. He was here, there and everywhere, killing threatened hits with miraculous stops and annihilating the enemy with beautiful throws to the bases. Several times Ruth was in tight places, and almost always it was Scott who extricated him.

Duffy Lewis saved the game for the box in the thirteenth. Mowrey was on second with two out. Smith slammed one of Ruth's offerings to short left centre. It looked like a sure 'Texas Leaguer,' and the game for the Dodgers, but Lewis raced in and, just as the ball was dropping to the ground, reached out and snared it, performing another of the hair-lifting plays which featured the afternoon.

Luck, strange as it may seem, did not figure conspicuously in the game today. Merit alone counted. Not one of the errors counted in the run making.

The game established a record for modern world series by going 14 innings. But practically every one of these sessions produced some startling plays; brought the crowd to its feet again and again in a storm of applause. Fourteen innings of baseball they played to-day — and it was baseball.

ANOTHER YEAR FOR M'GRAW.

Will Continue as Manager of the New York Giants.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—John J. McGraw will continue to manage the New York National League Baseball Club next year, despite any reports to the contrary, says John B. Foster, secretary of the club.

McGraw already has gone over the plans for next year with President Hempstead," said Mr. Foster, "and has high hopes of leading the New York club to a pennant. His contract with the New York club has another year to run, and it is not fair to him or the club to have rumours spread that he will not be with New York next year."

Despite the roasting he gave them in the game with Brooklyn Tuesday the players of the New York club are seeking McGraw to present to him a collection of Shakespeare's works, which they had purchased before his flare-up. There will be no public presentation ceremonies.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY SYSTEM NIAGARA FALLS ILLUMINATED.

Travellers passing through Niagara Falls now have an excellent opportunity of viewing the above feature During the evening a battery of electric lights having a combined candle-power of 50,000,000 play on the American Falls and Rapids, the effect produced being startling in its beauty and revealing the splendours of the Falls as they have never been revealed heretofore.

The lamps, of which there are 100 each of 500,000 candle power, are so constructed that when in operation a flood light is thrown on the Falls and Rapids. A flood light is distinguished from a search or spot light in that its rays are not concentrated but diffused and spread over a wide area. The lights are arranged so that there is no glare or blinding reflection to hurt the eyes.

Passengers routed via Grand Trunk Railway can make convenient stop overs at Niagara Falls or Suspension Bridge, N.Y., allowing time to view this feature and returning to leave either at the points mentioned or through Buffalo and New York trains.

GIRL FRAMED UP AUTO ROBBERY

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 7.—With four persons under arrest in this city and two in Camden, N.J., and the police drag net closing about four others who are now under surveillance in connection with a sensational hold-up and murder at Hammonton, N. J., the authorities here declared their belief that Millie de Marco, 19 years old, of this city, one of the prisoners and an employee of A. J. Rider, president of New Jersey Cranberry Growers' Association, engineered the entire plot.

THREE IN HOSPITAL

The de Marco girl and three Italians arrested in this city late last night were traced to the Italian colony here through the license number of an automobile in which eleven men and one woman were seen in the vicinity of the home of Rider yesterday shortly before the murder of Henry Rider of Howell, Mich., and the shooting of his brother and two others.

Rider and his daughter, Mrs. Elsie Smathers, who valiantly drove the automobile after she had been wounded, and James N. Rigby, who also occupied a seat in the Rider car at the time of the attack, are in the Jefferson hospital this city. Their condition to-day was hopeful and physicians said they would recover.

GIRL WAS EMPLOYED.

None of the men under arrest was in Rider's employ as far as the police were able to learn by a hurried investigation.

The sight of eleven men and a lone girl in an automobile aroused unusual interest among the natives of Atsion, N.J. Someone casually noted that the automobile bore a Pennsylvania license number. Detectives learned the number of the car and the description of the girl, which corresponded with that of the young woman Rider employed on his cranberry bogs.

KNEW OF MOVEMENTS.

The girl knew the movements of Mr. Rider on pay days and was aware of the large amount of money required for the pay roll of about three hundred men and women cranberry pickers. The police are working on the theory that she planned the shooting with the aid of confederates from this city. All have admitted, the police say, that they were at Atsion yesterday.

CONQUERORS OF GERMANS.

French Writer Says Troops From British Empire Deserve Credit.

PARIS, Oct. 6.—M. Joseph Reinach, in the Figaro, pays a generous tribute to the new English armies. "It is the soul of England," he writes, "which in two years has made an army that is not content to hold its ground against an army at which France has been labouring for three centuries. It is the Englishman who has beaten the German. It is the islandsman from the other side of the Channel and the other side of the sea, the Englishman from the Thames, from the quiet country, and from the industrial hive, the Scotsman faithful to his kilt, the Canadian who defends two countries, old and new, the Australian bronzed by the sun and like a young Greek god. It is these men who have put to rout the most famous regiments of the enormous empire of prey."

QUEBEC GIVES A MILLION.

To-night there will be thrown on the canvass about 800 slides of the men on the Honour Roll together with a number of other interesting ones. The service is free to all.

On Monday evening an excellent programme was provided by the ladies of the church. Rev. Mr. Bamforth gave a short address. Among those who contributed to the musical part of the programme were Mrs. Locke, Miss Wrightmeyer, Mr. Frank Whitehouse, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Iredale, and Miss Dickson.

REPAIRS MADE TO WATER MAIN

Workman's Tools Were Found in an Excavation on George Street—Main Was Laid in 1882

Repairs have been made to the water main which on Saturday last developed a leak on George street near the corner of Brock street. It was necessary to cut four holes in the asphalt before the source of the leak was discovered. It was found that the lead had blown out of one of the joints in a ten inch main that was laid thirty-four years ago. A number of caulking tools were found in the excavation. The water bailed up through the asphalt in several places so that it was impossible to locate the actual source of the leak. Two holes were cut at each end of a pipe length and before the job was complete two more holes had to be cut in the pavement.

JAPANESE BASEBALLS FLOODING U.S. MARKET

New York, Oct. 5.—An Associated Press despatch from Washington today says: On the eve of the baseball world's series, news came to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to-day of a Japanese invasion of the American manufacturing business which has leaped over the protective tariff trenches into American markets.

In appealing to the Government to repel this invasion of a trade so purely of American origin a western baseball manufacturing firm asserted that Japanese manufacturers, despite a protective tariff of 40 per cent., are selling five-cent baseballs in this country for 30 cents a dozen.

"The danger of the Japanese competition," says the letter, "is that through the leverage of the five-cent baseball they eventually will enter the market with the better grade of goods."

RUSSIA A HIVE OF ACTIVITY

New Shell Spreads Heat of 3,000 Degrees over 300-yard Radius.

Under the caption "The Spirit of the New Russia," the Russian-American Journal of Commerce calls attention editorially to what it terms "the feverish activity to be observed throughout the length and breadth of the Russian Empire." All travellers coming out of Russia, it is stated bear testimony to the wonderful reawakening everywhere noticeable in the Empire.

"Americans in particular," the Journal says, "seem most deeply impressed with the changed conditions in Russia and are most sanguine as to the future of that country. They say thus there is something akin to the old call of the West in the fast-opening opportunities and the wide reaching resources of Russia which sends an anxious tingle through the veins of every American business man or prospector who has delved into Russian conditions as they exist to-day and is far sighted enough to see the prosperity that is in store for the Russian people.

"Factories in Russia are running night and day turning out munitions of war, clothing and the varied necessities of the empire multi-millions. Americans have said that they were surprised at the large number of factories, especially between Petrograd and Moscow. Other factories are going up with feverish haste, and everywhere it seems to the traveller railways are under construction. Many of the lines are now while others are being double tracked. Men and women are working side by side on the railway, the women handling the picks and shovels with even greater strength than many of the men.

"The returning Russian travellers bring many and varied stories of the military resources of the empire. One of these is to the effect that not less than 6,000,000 men have been recently sent to the front, and that another 9,000,000 are in training. All are imbued with the absolute assurance that the weight of Russian men and material must be the deciding factor in the war. There has been told too the story of a new explosive shell being manufactured in Russia after a French formula, but not yet used on the Western front—a shell which in exploding spreads over a radius of 300 yards a heat of 3,000 degrees, a withering blast calculated to incinerate all within its fiery reach."

The Allies Are Successful in a Sudden Thrust on the West

FRENCH TROOPS CAPTURE TWELVE HUNDRED PRISONERS

Bold and Dangerous Undertaking; Editorial Opinion of the Raid

Newspapers of the United States Unite in Declaring That the Prussian Has Shown His Hand Clearly and the Issue Now is Squarely Defined For Washington to Meet

"A NEW MENACE"

Following are some of the editorial opinions of newspapers published in New York and elsewhere on the adventure of the Prussians in bringing the war to America and blockading American ports while engaged in sinking steamships, passenger and freight:

PHILADELPHIA—The Enquirer.

Perhaps the raid of yesterday on freighters off the Nantucket lightship is the opening of a campaign which will be pushed with vigor. Submarine activity is not bound by geographical limitations. It is as lawful three miles outside our coast line as it is within the English Channel. But it must be conducted in a lawful manner. The whole issue is right there. It is a grace situativon. The American people do not grasp the horrors of submarine warfare three thousand miles away, but they will quickly realize them when brought close to our own shores. The U-53 cannot violate German pledges without raising a storm of indignation throughout the United States. To bring submarine atrocities to our very door is a bold thing for the Berlin militarists to do—and a dangerous thing, unless they have made up their minds to defy the United States. Considering the weak and wobbly policy pursued by the administration a tWashington, it would not be at all singular if this is what Berlin has decided to do. Germany has not in the past had any cause to fear President Wilson. Why should she have in the future?

BOSTON—The Advertiser.

The exploit off Nantucket brings the whole submarine issue more vividly before the American public than it has been at any time since the reported abandonment of the original submarine campaign against passenger vessels. It is too early to predict whether this new menace to the commerce of North Atlantic ports will have any serious effect on the business of Boston or New York.

The Herald — The European war has been trasferred to our own shores. Germany is, for practical purposes, blockading the ports of the United States. This raises the whole submarine controversy afresh, and in a much more acute form. The administration's presumed purpose to make a grand stand play against British aggression just before the election thus appears frustrated by events. We protested against Britain's vessels holding up ships outside our ports and she modified her policy in that regard. What shall we now say to Germany?

The Globe—To have made known his presence on this coast most openly by going into Newport Harbour before making any attempt to raise havoc among the munition bearing fleet of the Allies Lieutenant Rose showed himself as bold a sailor as Captain Kidd or John Paul Jones. It may be that if the Kaiser is anxious for President Wilson to urge the Allies to make peace he has chosen a dramatic means of impressing upon us some of the possibilities of a continuance of the war.

The Journal—Again this country is dragged to the very verge of the war. If loss of American life is caused, directly or indirectly, by the German submarine exploits off this coast the United States will have no other course than to declare war. The final note to Germany last April, was definite. What may come of the new campaign is a matter for worried conjecture. Advantage to Germany and disadvantage to England are lost to sight for the moment in contemplation of a sudden renewed menace to America peace.

The Post—The sinking of the passenger steamer Stephano was a gratuitous and useless outrage. There was not even the poor defence of contraband carrying to palliate such an assault. And the whole day's work, performed at our very doors, will strike most Americans as an impudent procedure and an attempt to bring the war almost into American waters for the purpose of embarrassing this nation fully as much as for striking terror to Great Britain and her allies. But it is imperative and inevitable that if the doings of yesterday contravene in the slightest degree our final demand upon Germany and Germany's promise to us the threatened action by the United States must be taken.

WASHINGTON—The Post.

So long as American vessels and American citizens are not involved the United States need not concern itself with the ravages of the U-53 unless operations are conducted within the three mile limit or supplies are sent to the vessel from this country. An act of Congress makes it a crime to supply a belligerent vessel off the American coast. The purpose of the German Admiralty evidently is to intercept and destroy enemy munition carriers near the source of supply. Possibly the British government will endeavour to convince the United States that this is a crime against civilization, and perhaps American munitions manufacturers will ask the government to protest against the extension of the war zone to Western Atlantic waters. But munitions are contraband of war, subject to capture or destruction, and the manufacturer and shipper have no recourse. The government cannot protect such traffic.

NEW YORK—The World.

In Newport Harbour the U-53 was a lawful and well behaved ship of war. She stayed twenty-one hours less than her allowance. She did not ask, as she might have done, for fuel or supplies enough for a voyage home. She sought no delay for repairs. Her polite and considerate people did not in the least encroach upon their rights.

Now that she has reached the open sea and begun serious work as a raider, new questions arise, and with them difficulties. It will usually be impossible for her to capture merchant ships in the manner contemplated by internationaly law, first putting their crews in safety. The ships taken must be sunk; the submarine has neither prize crews to spare nor ports to which prizes may be sent, and setting seamen adrift in small boats in an October sea is far from providing such safety as has hitherto been considered proper.

Berlin's Sussex note pledged the German submarine to spare "liners." Was the Stephano sunk yesterday with many passengers on board, including Americans, a liner? In the rich harvest of tonnage gathered by the single submarine in one day no lives appear to have been lost either of seamen or passengers, which shows that plenty of warning was given for all hands to get away in boats. But for the first time in history the war vessels of a neutral Power were used in numbers and with the utmost effort to follow in the path of destruction a belligerent ship and make sure that lives were saved which had possibly been consigned to inadequate means of safety.

The U-53 showed yesterday that she is instructed to pass ships under the American flag. But if a mistake should be made in the case of an American ship, or if American citizens lose their lives under the flags of belligerent ships destroyed, questions will arise for the United States government which Germany's Sussex note never sufficiently covered.

New anxieties for the Entente Powers are created by the daring voyage of the U-53. Their seamen cannot set nets and traps in our harbours, and in open sea it is not easy to find a ship that sinks at will. Before she must put into port for supplies the big craft may do much damage. A number of such long radius undersea cruisers might tremendously affect the world's commerce, creating for neutrals as well as combatants practical questions of utmost importance.

MR. WILSON CALLS ON LANSING AFTER DAY OF "WATCHFUL WAITING" IN PRUSSIAN SUBMARINE MENACE

Raid on Commerce and the Blockade of Atlantic Coast Give Rise Again to the Question Whether the Shock of Crime Must Be Awaited Before Action is Taken by the United States

NAVY AS A LIFE-SAVING FLEET

(From The New York Herald.)

WASHINGTON, D.C., October 11.—Word that Robert Lansing, Secretary of State, has been requested by the President to come to Shadow Lawn for a conference on the submarine situation gave to Washington a promise of action.

Rumours of the appearance of submarines off Norfolk tend to confirm the opinion of naval experts here that the Prussians purpose to carry their campaign down the entire Atlantic coast Three British cruisers were reported off the Virginia Capes on Saturday afternoon, and it was reckoned on the navigation charts of the Navy Department that they should have had ample time to reach the scene of Sunday's operations near the Nantucket lightship.

The fact that the allied cruisers did not appear there is accounted for on the theory that the Allies are anxious to protect shipping from other ports, which is of even more importance to them. Fuel oil cargoes for the British navy are now constantly leaving through the Florida Straits, and it is believed here that the submarines before they quit their work on this side will have extended their operations from Nantucket to Key West.

With such a situation confronting them, President Wilson and Mr. Lansing will be obliged to formulate a policy seeking to protect vital American interests which are considered certain to become involved in the operations.

President Wilson's declaration that "Germany will be held to the complete fulfillment of its promises to the United States government" did not serve much to clarify the air here.

This is for the reason that Germany's promises never have come up to the measure of America's demands. In the Sussex note Germany made her last and most complete promise. She said:—

"The German government notifies the government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders:—'In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared as a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or to offer resistance.'"

Now the Prussians interpret this promise in the operations of the submarines off Nantucket lightship by placing women and babies in open boats sixty miles out at sea.

There the Prussian submarines have ended their responsibility for the safety of these women and children. By sending its own destroyers to their rescue the United States has shouldered the burden which international law and all the dictates of humanity place rightly upon the Prussian naval commanders to provide for the safety of these innocent non-combatants.

Germany has not fulfilled her obligations under international law. She has not lived up to the responsibility placed upon her. The United States has had to do that port of the Prussian task.

Many persons are asking this question here:—"Why, if the Prussian submarines complied with international law, was it necessary to rush practically the entire North Atlantic torpedo destroyer fleet out to sea to 'save' the passengers and crew of the torpedoed ships?" That act itself is construed in some quarters as proving that the navy at least did not believe that they had been "placed in safety." Approval of this "rescue" work by the administration would seem to be an admission in high quarters that something is wrong with the Prussian method of saving life.

And yet the suggestion heard here that the United States can find no grounds for action in this situation. "What can we do?" is the plea heard in official circles.

In the earlier days of the U-boat issue the United States did not hesitate to state this fact, namely, that the requirement of international law "that before the vessel is destroyed all persons on board must be placed in safety is not satisfied by merely giving to them an opportunity to escape in lifeboats."

And what red blooded American would think that his baby was in a place of safety when in an open lifeboat six miles off Nantucket Island?

It took seventeen destroyers to rescue these survivors of one day's operations. Is the United States to set a precedent for submarine operations which may convert the whole United States Navy into a life saving fleet for the purpose of keeping these Prussians from violating their promises so that the administratibn can escape an international issue? This is the question now being asked here.

The menace of life is too plain to be missed in these submarine operations. It is American live which is endangered. Does that not give some basis for action? Must the shock of crime again be awaited from the Prussians before the United States can act?

And again it is being asked of the administration, "Would it not have been the more sensible course to have taken action some time ago which would have deterred the Prussians in this latest venture in frightfulness?"

THE LITTLE FORTUNE

BY ARNOLD FREDERICKS

The suggestion did not appear to interest Mr. Germaine. "Without wishing to detract in any way from Mr. Duvall's abilities," he said, "he would himself I am sure, be the first to acknowledge your superior experience and skill. You name, my dear sir, is known to every one. We beg that you will reconsider your decision."

The prefect glanced toward Duvall, who leaned forward and spoke a few words to him in a low voice. "I will talk the matter over with my friend," he announced, "and let you know finally in the morning."

"Good" said Mr. Germaine. "And now let us hear, if you will, just what you have found out since the disappearance of the purser was first discovered."

"We have found out just nothing," Lefevre returned; then in a few words went over the facts in the case for Duvall's benefit.

"Then we know no more than in the beginning," Mr. Germaine was clearly disappointed.

"The ship has been thoroughly searched, not once, but several times" said Captain Bonnot. "I am ready to stake my life on the fact that the purser is not on board."

"The only possible conclusion, then, Captain Bonnot," remarked Duvall, speaking for the first time, "is that the purser was murdered and thrown overboard by some person or persons now on the vessel."

"Either that or he committed suicide."

"But the theft of the package would seem to preclude that possibility, would it not?"

"Yes—unless, indeed, there was something in the package—some letter or information which the purser wished to make away with."

"But it appears that no one knew of the contents of the package, except possibly the physician who attended the dying man, Mercier. His name, I understand, you do not know. You cannot connect Vernon with the theft of the package unless you can also connect him in some way with this physician." He turned to the prefect. "That has occurred to you, of course?"

"Assuredly. I sent a wireless to my office in Paris the Day the purser disappeared. The people in the house where old Mercier died did not know the physician's name. He came regularly every day to see his patient. They described him, as Mr. Morris does, as a man of medium height, about thirty years of age, with a pointed red beard. There are many physicians in Paris who might answer the description. I instructed my office to continue their search, and it may be that on our arrival we shall have further news."

Mr. Germaine looked about him rather helplessly. "It seems then, that we can do nothing. There is in all probability a desperate criminal aboard this boat, and yet we must let him get away in safety, because we have no evidence which would warrant us in holding him. It is shameful."

"Is there any one at all on board?" asked Duvall, turning to the prefect "that you regard with suspicion?"

"I cannot rightly say that there is. At least two-thirds of the passengers we were able to dispose of at once. They are either regular patrons of the line, and known to the Captain, or else persons sufficiently well known to render them safe from any suspicion. Of the remainder, all of whom I have carefully observed, there are but three or four who might be said to be questionable. One is a stout, elderly man, who says he is agent for a silk house in Lyons. Then there are two young men who describe themselves as automobile salesmen, and a woman."

"Why do you suspect them" asked Mr. Germaine eagerly.

"I do not suspect them. I merely say that they might possibly be open to suspicion."

"Why?"

"The elderly agent of the silk factory, because, from his conversation, and from an examination I have made of his room, I am convinced that he knows no more about the silk business than I do."

"And the others"

"The two young men who say they are automobile salesmen have been particularly solicitous in their efforts to assist me. I overheard them talking in their room one day, and distinctly heard one of them say, 'They will never catch us,' or words to that effect."

"Ah! That sounds promising. And the woman?"

"A mere supposition. She has the room adjoining the purser's bedroom. She has been on deck very little. I am informed that she claims to have been seasick. The food, however, which has been taken to her, I learn from the room steward, has been quite sufficient for a very able-bodied appetite."

"That's queer. And there no others?"

"Two or three, perhaps. Nothing definite against them, however. No grounds, in fact, that would justify holding any of them."

"No. You are right." The managing director regarded his cigar critically. "We would not dare to lay charges against any of these people without stronger evidence." He turned to the prefect. "What further action, if any, would you suggest?"

"I can only recommend that these several persons whose names I have already given to the captain be kept under observation after they land by the detectives you undoubtedly have in the employ of your line, of by the police, whom you will, of course, notify at once. Meanwhile, I will talk over my plans with Mr. Duvall, and advise you at your office to-morrow morning what I decide to do. I may receive word from Paris to-night which will assist me in arriving at a decision." He rose, and Duvall did likewise. "Until then, adieu!"

As they were about to leave the Captain's room Duvall turned to Mr. Morris. "The package you left with the purser—the one which was stolen—was sealed, I understand?"

"Yes." Mr. Morris drew the large package, which he had secured from the purser's office, preparatory to landing, from his pocket. "The seal was like this. I placed it on the envelope myself. My crest you observe." He pointed to the seal, a mass of green wax containing the imprint of a seal ring.

"May I have that?" Duvall asked.

"Certainly. I am obliged to open the package, anyhow, for the inspection of the customs officials." He detached a section of the brown paper wrapper containing the seal and handed it to Duvall, who placed it carefully in his pocket-book. "Good morning, gentlemen," the latter said and left the room.

A few minutes later he and M. Lefevre had betaken themselves to the latter's cabin, where they went thoroughly over the whole affair.

"What is your opinion my friend?" Lefevre asked when Duvall thoroughly understood all the facts. "Do you think Vernon is really dead?"

His companion smiled. "What else is there to think?" he replied. "Captain Bonnot says that he is certain that he is not on the vessel. Then too, it appears that you have checked up every member of the ship's passengers, steerage, and crew, and all are accounted for except Vernon. Unless he is in hiding, somewhere, it seems clear that he has either been thrown or thrown himself overboard."

"Where could he hide?"

"That I confess I do not know. There may be some place—some unused room."

"And why should a man be murdered, for the sake of twenty sous?"

"It is those things, indeed, that make this an extremely interesting as well as difficult case. There is no motive; there are apparently no clues. I confess that I am becoming very much interested."

The prefect laughed. "I thought, my friend," he said, "that you had quite given up detective work and were content with your charming country estate, with your horses, your cows, and your pigs. At least so we—Mme. Lefevre and I—have been led to believe from the letters of your wife."

"Content—yes," said Duvall with a laugh. "But I must confess that when an affair of this sort comes up, my professional instincts get the better of me." He drew out the seal Mr. Morris had given him. "Pretty, isn't it?" he said.

"You regard this case as unusual, then?"

"Highly so. I fancy it was not the francs piece that the criminals wanted, but the letter which accompanied it. I will wager anything you like that it contained information of extreme value to old Mercier's daughter, and also to others, else they would not have gone to such lengths to obtain it. I am very anxious to make an examination of the purser's office, and also of the staterooms of the various persons whom you have under suspicion."

"You will be able to do so as soon as the passengers land. We will be at the dock in a short time. Why did you suggest that I defer giving my answer to Mr. Germaine until tomorrow? Surely you would not advise me to undertake the case."

"Does not your professional pride begin to get the better of you? Duvall asked, laughingly.

"Not in the least. I care for a nice, quiet rest on your farm, my friend, and I intend to have it."

"And so you shall," said Duvall, rising. "Grace would never forgive me, I am afraid, if I allowed you to do otherwise. I suggested that you wait merely because I had an idea about this case and wanted a few hours in which to work it out. Come—suppose we go on deck and watch the passengers as they go ashore? We are almost at the pier."

Duvall, without appearing to do so, observed closely the various passengers as they descended the gangplank. Through the courtesy of the captain, Grace has been allowed to come on board, and after an enthusiastic greeting by M. Lefevre, stood aside with the latter, talking. There was a slight frown on her charming face.

"Your honeymoon still lasts, I hope?" inquired the prefect, smiling.

Grace glanced at her husband. "Yes—I think it does," she replied happily. "I only hope that what I now see does not indicate another interruption of it. You remember the last time?"

She shuddered involuntarily. The affair of the changing lights, and the peril she and her husband had run in the recovery of M. Stapleton's kidnaped boy were still fresh in her mind. "What is Richard up to now?"

"Nothing very important. A little matter which happened on shipboard." They both turned as they saw Duvall step quickly toward them.

"What is it, Richard?" Grace asked eagerly.

"Who is that man?" Duvall demanded of the prefect, nodding toward a heavily bearded gentleman who was descending the gangplank with the assistance of a younger man, apparently an attendant.

Lefevre followed his glance. "Oh—that's old Haussman, a chemist from Brussels. Crabbed old fellow. Suffers from rheumatism—scarcel able to walk. Spent most of his time in his berth."

"And the man with him?"

"His attendant—a young Swiss named Gunther. A very intelligent fellow. I talked with him a number of times."

The two had reached the pier, and the older man tottered to his trunk and sat upon it, waiting until the customs officials were ready to make their examination.

Duvall drew his wife to one side. "Grace," he said, "I am going to be busy on board with M. Lefevre for a couple of hours. Meanwhile, I want you to follow those two people"—he indicated the rheumatic and his attendant—"and find out where they go. After that come to the hotel and join us there for dinner."

"Richard," said Grace reproachfully, "you're not going to spoil every thing by getting mixed up in a new case, are you? Remember—we must entertain M Lefevre. And then, too, you said the last time, that you'd never—"

"There, there, dear!" he interrupted, squeezing her arm. "Don't blame me. I'm just trying to satisfy myself about a theory I have. Run along, like a good girl. We'll meet you at the hotel at five."

Grace left them, the anxious frown still upon her face, and they soon lost sight of her in the crowd. Duvall continued to examine the passengers as they filed ashore, but he seemed to do so with less interest than before. When the decks were empty he signaled to his companion, and they at once joined the captain in his cabin.

The latter was about to go ashore with Mr. Germaine, but left them in charge of one of the junior officers, with orders to give them every facility for a thorough examination of the vessel.

"Where do you wish to go first?" inquired the young officer, whose name they found to be Lamotte.

"To the purser's office," replied Duvall.

In a few moments they had entered it and closed the door. Mr. Lamotte watched them with ill-concealed curiosity.

"Will you be so good," Duvall asked, glancing about, "as to see if among the missing man's effects there is a whisk-brush?"

The junior disappeared into the rear room and presently returned with the object required.

Duvall took the brush, and at began to sweep the carpet which covered the floor of the office with the utmost care. Presently he placed the little mound of dust which he had collected in an envelope, and, after, sealing it up, marked on the outside the name of the room.

He did the same thing in the stateroom adjoining; then placed the two envelopes in his pocket and rose.

Lamotte looked at him and smiled. "I'm afraid you will think we keep a very dirty ship. These rooms, however, have not been entered by any one except the captain and such people as came with him since the—accident."

"You mean they have not been cleaned?"

"No. Not since then."

Duvall glanced keenly about the room. "Where was the key found?" he suddenly asked.

"Here on this desk." Lefevre indicated the place with his hand.

Duvall ran the point of his finger over the polished surface of the desk, upon which a deep dent was visible near the place indicated by the prefect. "I see," he said, smiling in a curious way. "And when you first entered the room, after opening the door with a pass key, you found everything in perfect order?"

"Everything."

"No sign of a struggle?"

SAYS BODY IS A POISON FACTORY

Urges Everyone to drink glass of hot water before breakfast.

Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken day after day leaves in the alimentary canal, a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not completely eliminated from the system each day, becomes good for the millions of bacteria which infest the bowels. From this mass of left-over waste toxins and ptomaine-like poisons are formed and sucked into the blood.

Men and women who can't get feeling right must begin to take inside baths. Before eating breakfast each morning drink a glass of real hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it to wash out of the thirty feet of bowels the previous day's accumulation of poisons and toxins and to keep the entire alimentary canal clean, pure and fresh.

Those who are subject to sick headache colds biliousness constipation others who wake up with bad taste, foul breath, backache, rheumatic stiffness, or have a sour, gassy stomach after meals are urged to get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from the drug store and begin practicing internal sanitation. This will cost very little, but is sufficient to make anyone an enthusiast on the subject.

Remember inside bathing is more important than outside bathing, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood causing poor health, while the bowel pores do. Just as soap and hot water cleanses sweetens and freshens the skin so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine loosen the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. E. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to make my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

MERCY TRIUMPHANT YET JUSTICE ABIDES

Two Important Qualities of God's Character.

God's Word Presents a Wonderful Picture of His Plan of Salvation —Mercy, or Love, Beautifully Harmonized With Justice — The Character of Our Creator Our Greatest Study—Correct Understanding of the Divine Character Arouses Admiration and Love—Heathen Theory of Soul's Inherent Immortality Responsible for Many Gross Errors of Doctrine—Trinity Doctrine Another Source of Confusion—Light Now Growing Clearer.

[This matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

PASTOR RUSSELL

Dayton, Ohio., Oct. 8.—Pastor Russell was the principal speaker to-day before the I. B. S. A. assembled in convention at the Soldiers' Home Memorial Hall for the past few days. His discourse was based upon the literal rendering of the last clause of James 2: 13—"Mercy glorieth against judgment." The Pastor said:

To the careful Bible student the Scriptures present a wonderful picture of the victory of Love, or Mercy, over Justice in God's great Plan of the Ages for man's recovery from the fallen condition into which the human race was plunged by the disobedience of Adam, the father of mankind. The Bible shows how our mighty Creator was able to provide for the rescue of the race from the penalty of DEATH, pronounced upon our first parents and inherited by all of Adam's posterity; and how this rescue could be accomplished without violation of the Divine decree or of the principle of justice, which God declares to be the very foundation of His Throne.—Psalm 97:2.

It has been said that "the proper study of mankind is man"; but we can more truly say that the greatest study of mankind is our great Creator. The character of Jehovah is the example, the pattern, for all His intelligent creatures to follow. How important, then, it is that we understand aright the real character of our God in order that we may be able to imitate Him and develop characters like His. (Matthew 5: 48; 1 Peter 1: 16.) All who are children of God are called to partake of their Father's holiness; and ultimately the standard of perfect holiness—righteousness—will be required of all.

In the past, our lack of a knowledge of the true character of God has been one of our greatest difficulties. How could we copy the character of the God of the Bible unless we understood Him? We have not properly known our God. Thus the Bible declares, "My people perish for lack of knowledge." (Hosea 4: 6.) The necessary knowledge has been supplied by the Lord in His Word; but in the main His people have permitted themselves to be drawn aside and misled by the great Adversary. (1 Timothy 4:1, 2 Peter 3:4.) The Lord has permitted this as a test to all of His professed servants.

Our Eyes of Understanding Opening.

We believe that to-day there are many honest people feeling after God, if haply they might find Him. (Acts 17: 27.) But, alas! Christian people have been misled, and have unintentionally misled others, by the terrible doctrines of the Dark Ages, introduced into the Christian Church after the Apostles "fell asleep." (Matthew 13: 24-30.) Thus harm has been done where only good was intended. Although sure that our heavenly Father will not say to us, charge that which was unintentionally done, nevertheless we cannot but feel remorse for our serious mistake, in thus maligning the character of our gracious God. How thankful we are that the light is now breaking in, and that we can see as never before the lengths, the breadths, the heights and the depths of our great Creator's Love; that we can see in clear outline in His Word His glorious Plan for the salvation of the whole world!

By nature the highest organs of our head are those that tend toward love and reverence. Spirituality, veneration, hope, conscientiousness, are the very highest qualities in our organism. The baneful influences of the Adamic fall have dwarfed these qualities in all mankind; nevertheless they have made their influence felt to some extent in our natural character. Yet despite all this, error has been creeping in. The Bible tells us that the one to whom we should charge this imperfection is "your Adversary, the Devil."

The spirit of impatience and discontent is everywhere prevalent to-day. Satan is responsible for this condition. When we speak of Satan, we mean a personal Devil. We believe in a real Adversary, once a glorious and powerful angel, created in full accord with his Maker, but later a rebel against the Divine Government. We also believe in the existence of a host of fallen angels, or evil spirits, who followed Satan's lead and over whom he became prince, as the Scriptures plainly declare.—Ephesians 2:2; 6:12, margin; Genesis 6: 1-4; Jude 6; etc.

These powerful enemies of poor fallen humanity have their mission and are working in so secret and crafty a manner that in our fallen condition we are no match for these higher intelligences, with the wisdom of ages at their command. They well know how to entrap; and they have entrapped some. In thus seeking to delude and mislead mankind, they know that they can cause humanity to dread their Creator, to hate rather than to love Him. The Apostle Paul declares that "the god of this world [Satan] hath blinded the minds of them that believe not, lest the light of the glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them." (2 Corinthians 4:4.) The Adversary knows full well that if the light of the knowledge of God's glorious character should shine into men's hearts, it would make a great transformation. God's work in the heart of the Christian is for the purpose of transforming him by the renewing of the mind.—Romans 12:2.

What a blessed thought it is, dear brethren in Christ, that we are getting rid of this blindness! The eyes of our understanding are indeed opening. The Apostle Paul thus prayed for the Church—"I pray for you, that the eyes of your understanding being enlightened, ye may know what is the hope of your calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what the exceeding greatness of His power to us-ward who believe." (Ephesians 1: 16-19.) Further on, he prays, "that ye may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and height and depth, and to know the LOVE of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God."—Ephesians 3: 14-19.

True Love Founded Upon Justice.

In our text the Apostle is showing us that in God's wonderful Plan for man's recovery from sin and death Divine Mercy, which means Divine Love, has triumphed over Divine Justice, and yet without impinging God's justice in the slightest degree. It is a very interesting and important study for us to learn just how this was accomplished; for if we do not see it clearly we shall have confused ideas of God's Plan as revealed in His Word. If we do see it clearly, many of the theological tangles which long have troubled and hindered us will be unraveled.

We remember that it is written, "Righteousness and Judgment [Justice] are the habitation of His Throne." God's whole Empire is founded upon Justice—not Love, but JUSTICE. We see the propriety of this. How else could He be the proper Administrator of the Universe! This statement does not conflict with the other Scriptural declaration, "God is LOVE." Justice is the very basis upon which true love is built. At first these two elements of the Divine character might seem to conflict, when we remember that while God's Justice demanded the punishment of the sinner, nevertheless His Love provided a way to bless that sinner. Let us see how the Word of God harmonizes these facts of theology.

This matter is very simple to understand in our day; whereas in the past our forefathers had great confusion on the subject. Many and fierce were the theological battles fought along this line. They had long arguments as to whether God's Justice would finally prevail, or whether God's Love would override His Justice, and how this could be accomplished. Here was the difficulty in our minds.

Before we can understand what constitutes God's Justice, we must rid ourselves of the errors embodied in the creeds of the Dark Ages, whether these errors be Calvinistic, Arminian, or whatsoever they may be. We are astonished to-day at the monstrous errors held by some of these well-meaning forefathers of ours. Take, for instance, Jonathan Edwards, who doubtless was a wonderful man, of wide influence. He believed in a literal Hell of fire and torture, into which the great majority of humanity were to be cast. He preached eloquently upon the subject. When asked on one occasion whether Christians would not be unhappy in Heaven, knowing that the majority of their friends and relatives were suffering agony in Hell, he replied, "No; we shall be so changed that we shall not suffer in seeing our friends in Hell. We shall look over the battlements of Heaven and see their agony; and then, turning around, we shall praise God the louder that His Justice is made manifest."

Minds Sadly Perverted.

It seems past belief that an intelligent, sincere man could have so perverted an idea of justice. Can any sane mind to-day see any justice in a God who would create billions of human beings, with powers of feeling, with capabilities of the most acute suffering, who would permit them to be born into the world under conditions of weakness, prone to sin as the sparks to fly upward, surrounded by temptation, beset by evil angels, and who would then declare that if they did not live saintly lives and love supremely the God who thus created them they should be damned to an eternity of torture? Ah, something is radically wrong with the brain of the man who can accept such a creed and worship such a God. Such is not the God of the Bible, but a monstrous Demon. The god that originated such a creed is "the god of this world"—the Devil.

No human being would ascribe such a character to any human parent. How, then, can any believe such a monstrous libel upon the character of the God of all grace! How strange that we should ever have been thus trapped by this wicked lie of Satan's!

Many who have long discarded the creeds of the Dark Ages still profess to believe them, and still retain membership in the denomination which holds one or another of these creeds. No intelligent minister of our day believes these monstrosities of medieval doctrine. We need God's leading and teaching. The difficulty has been that we have leaned upon the creeds of human tradition, instead of relying upon the Word of God.

The Root of All Doctrinal Error.

Let us see what God says of His Justice. He declares that the penalty pronounced upon man for sin was DEATH. "The wages of sin is death." "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." "In the day that thou eatest thereof, dying, thou shalt die." (Romans 6:23; Ezekiel 18:4, 20; Genesis 2:17, margin.) The entire Scriptures bear out this declaration. Only a few highly figurative statements could be so misinterpreted as to seem to teach otherwise. But when the symbolic character of such passages is recognized, they are seen to be in full harmony with the plain declarations of the Bible.

The pagan doctrines of the immortality of the soul, a trinity of gods, etc., are responsible for the great confusion of Christendom regarding the fundamental doctrines of the Word of God. There is not a word of Scripture for the almost universally accepted idea of the natural immortality of the soul. The Bible declares that man is mortal. How absurd the thought that God would so make a soul that even He could not destroy it, under any circumstances, however desirable this might later prove to be! The generally accepted idea is that man HAS a soul. The Scriptural teaching is that man IS a soul. (Genesis 2:7.) It is man's physical organism that makes him superior to the brute creation.

The Doctrine of the Ransom.

What a marvelous mind must have been possessed by the perfect man Adam before his fall! The measure of the image of God possessed by mankind to-day is only what remains after the blighting effects of six thousand years of weakness and sin. The perfect Adam, in his Maker's image and likeness, must have been a very wonderful and beautiful specimen of manhood, physically, mentally, and morally. The size and the shape of the head, the form of the features, the expression of the face, the poise and the carriage of the body, the shape of the hands, the feet—all would proclaim the glorious perfection of the first man, Adam.

This perfect man brought the penalty of death upon his posterity, however, by reason of his disobedience of God's just commands. Therefore the whole Adamic race has been born in a dying condition. All mankind came under sin and death conditions because of one man's disobedience. God provided that only this one man Adam should be condemned to death, and that through him condemnation should come upon all his posterity while they were still in his loins. By this arrangement one man could pay the penalty for all. One man sinned. One Man was to be the Redeemer.—1 Corinthians 15: 21-23.

We have never heard of anything so wonderful as the Divine Economy manifested in the great Divine Plan for human salvation. In this marvelous Plan, covering six thousand years, the salvation of twenty billions of human creatures is involved; and yet every feature is easily and perfectly poised. Justice will not be cheated out of its dues; but Love gains the victory and provides the way out of the difficulty at the expense of the One through whom the whole Plan is consummated—our blessed Lord Jesus Christ. His perfect human life offset Adam's perfect human life; and the whole Adamic race is included, because they were all children of the one sinner, merely sharers by heredity in his sin.

Mercy Finally Triumphant.

The RANSOM is the very foundation of all of God's dealings with the race of mankind. It is even through that Ransom that He is now showing mercy. The Bible assures us that to the Logos, the Word, the Messenger — Michael, the Godlike One—God made the proposition that by the purchase of the whole race of Adam through His sacrifice He might obtain the honor and glory of Messiah—the opportunity of blessing the billions who had been condemned to death in Adam; and that then, as a reward, He should be supremely exalted, even to the Divine nature—far above angels, principalities, powers, and every name that is named. —Hebrews 2:9; Philippians 2: 9 1.

In God's due time, the Lo d laid aside His glorious spirit , came to earth as a man, and by the grace of God tasted death for EVERY MAN. By purchasing the forfeited life of Adam, He purchases all who fell in Adam while yet unborn. It is only when we see the nature of man—that he is mortal, NOT immortal—and the penalty of sin—DEATH, not an eternity of torture—that we begin to see the significance of the death of our Lord Jesus Christ. He "gave Himself a Ransom [Greek, "antilutron," a corresponding price] for ALL, to be testified in due time."—1 Timothy 2: 6, 6.

For the Church the due time is in the present life. For the world it is during the thousand years of the Reign of Christ. All this is the triumph of Love over Justice. While Justice remains forever inviolate, yet Love is the victor. Mercy rejoiceth against Judgment—Justice. Christ and the Church will have the great work of uplifting the world from their degradation and of bringing them up to that full perfection, that image and likeness of God, lost by Father Adam in Eden.

The faithful Church will be associated with our Lord in all His Kingdom glory and honor. In order to be of this class, not only must we be begotten by the Holy Spirit of God, but we must be quickened by it. We must manifest the fruits of that Holy Spirit-meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love. Then in the First Resurrection we shall be born of the Spirit, and shall share with our Lord this work of love for all mankind. At the conclusion of the Messianic Reign this glorious work of Divine Mercy will have been accomplished, though all the varied features of which will be observed, operating in full harmony, absolute Love and absolute Justice.

For All Complexion Ills

If the skin be colorless, sallow, muddy, over-red, blotchy or freckled, nothing will so surely overcome the condition as ordinary mercolized wax. It literally takes off a bad complexion—absorbs the dead and near-dead particles of surface skin; gently, gradually, causing no inconvenience at all. A new complexion is then in evidence, clear, spotless, delicately soft and beautiful. One ounce of this wax, procurable at any druggist's, will remove nearly every trace of the worst complexion. It is used like cold cream.

FARMER'S "BIT" AT HOME

Dominion Government Give Advice To Agricultural Classes

A Bulletin of the Dominion Government's Production and Thrift Campaign says: The man who produces one pound of anything of value, the man who improves the breed of his own cattle, the man who makes two blades of good grass grow where one grew before, is adding to the wealth of the nation, to the richness of the country. Not alone is that the case, but he is contributing his bit to Christianity and to the welfare of the world. It is given to the farmer and breeder to serve his native land more by his individual effort than is within the power of the ordinary follower of any other occupation. The farmer by his own unaided efforts, except by the gifts of nature, can maintain his wife and family. No other worker in the world's vineyard can say as much unless he is willing to go naked and that he and his should often times suffer the pangs of hunger. And the claims upon the farmer and his fellow, the breeder, in present circumstances are not only urgent but many.

There are people who object to the assertion that the agriculturist in making the earth yield its utmost, in tending his flocks and herds with care, diligence and intelligence, is doing his bit, the same as the man in the trenches. He is not directly placing his own life in jeopardy, perhaps, but he is helping to sustain those who are. He is providing a good-sized portion of the ammunition. The fault is not in the assertion itself, but in the use that is made of it by the man who has no spirit for the fight, and who, the probabilities are, is doing his full bit neither in agriculture nor in any other form of industry. There are possibly men on the land who would be more use on the field of battle, but one thing is certain, if the men who are of value to the soil and to the farmyard are taken away some means must be found to replace them.

Trained For Forests

The detailed maps and accounts of the British advances, peppered with the names of woods and the stories of desperate hand-to-hand conflicts in their recesses, explain things which have puzzled many mind. As, for example, why the new army, or some of it, was systematically trained in forest fighting—next to street and house-to-house fighting the most terrible of all conflicts) in which infantry can be engaged. Those who speculated on the parts of the world in which our men were to bring to fruition the experience gained in our quiet homeland copses find the answer in the woods of Northern France.

WAITS FOR CONVICT FIANCE.

Girl Gives Promise to Keep Vow to Wed.

Behind the grated windows of the county jail in Los Angeles has been sealed a contract of love, whereby a young woman gave her promise that through four years she will faithfully wait for the return of the man who has her promise of marriage. The pledge was given as the prison officials were about to lead the man away to begin a four-year term at Folsom Prison.

George C. Youngman is the man on his way to prison. Miss Mae Leonard is the girl. She is nineteen, he is twenty-four. He had entered a plea of guilty to a charge of giving a worthless cheque in payment for an automobile. She worked hard for his freedom, but when Judge Willis stated, because of the seriousness of the offence, probation could not be granted she smiled and said:

"Don't you care, George. It's a long time, but I'll wait."

TOMMY AMAZES LEADERS

New Armies On Offensive Fazed Machine Gun Hail

"Never, in my life have I seen anything finer than the way our successive waves of men marched singing and cheering into that bath of lead," said a Major, whose right arm was in a sling. He was in a hospital ship with wounded in the fight south of Albert. "The more casualties they saw in front of them the louder they cheered and sang the harder they pressed into it. I've talked to dozens of officers on this ship. They all say the same. Our job was never to urge men on, but always to hold them back and check premature advance and exposure. Bless them, you can't beat them. You can kill them with machine guns and solid weight of crumping. You can't possibly beat 'em."

"With us," said an officer of the Rifle Brigade, "they opened their machine gun fire exactly 10 minutes before we started. I heard the sharp clack, clack plainly through the roar of the 'big stuff.' They timed it well with us, and there's no doubt in my mind but that if Master Boche had had no machine guns he would have stood no chance at all. The machine guns were the feature of the day, and that's why such a huge proportion of our casualties are of the slightest and least serious sort. Look at me, a neat clear hole through this forearm. In a week from now I would fire a course of musketry for a wager."

"Yes, it's mostly arms and legs and clean punctures," said another officer. "They would not be frightful at all in normal times."

"I quite agree," said an elderly captain, "the Hun machine guns were their only salvation. But wasn't it marvellous the way our chaps launched at that fire I've seen them pay far more heed to a sharp shower of rain. O, they're the salt of the earth. I've not heard of one single case of shirking. They went into it as though it was a football scrum, and behad they came out of the other side in the same spirit, even a lot who had got slipped."

BEAUTIFUL WORLD AND INFERNO FROM ABOVE

Observation Trip in British War Plane Described—From Garden to Desolation

Writing from British army headquarters in France, a special correspondent of a London newspaper describes a trip in an aeroplane over the battle area as follows:—"Under any conditions, one's first flight in an aeroplane must, presumably, be a thrilling experience, but it is not given to many to make their first flight under such a time and amid such surroundings. It was a day of bright sunshine, with a little haze and a deep blue sky, across which little clouds floated, sending their shadows curiously small and distinct, chasing across the sunlight land below us. We kept the clouds—barely scraping one now and again—at from 3,000 to 4,000 feet up, both because extra height would have meant less visibility and because, if we were likely to meet company anywhere it would be at higher levels, and it was not an occasion when an air fight in the upper sky was being invited. So we flew comfortably low, and below us spread all the beautiful land. It is really a much more beautiful world as the birds and the angels see it.

All Very Distinct and Bare

"Next to the neatness and beauty of it all, I marvelled most at the emptiness of the white roads. For some four weeks now I have spent many hours each day upon them, and nothing could have seemed more preposterous than to call them empty. From above I saw all the usual things—the long trains of lorries and horse transport, and the columns of marching men (with much more space between the ranks than you would suppose until you look down on them from above), and the individual vehicles—but what was most surprising was the immense extent of white road left on which there were no vehicles or men.

Over the Inferno

"Parallel to the line we passed from north to south and again from south to north. There was no clean cut edge to the belt of desolation; only the patchwork of ripening grain and waving mustard and growing crops ceased. There was an intermediate country of blue-shadowed ground and broken and then the ruins. Beyond was the terrible belt of smoke. Where, too, rose here and there on this side of the belt, and from where we were stationed and high explosive shell alike seemed to be bursting on the ground. No sound of gunfire or shell explosion reached us through the noise of our own propellor and the whistle of the wind. Like the farmland and the villages, it was all part of a painted picture.

"One thing which the experience made me understand as I had not understood before was the amazing value of aeroplane observation. Proof of it she has in many stories which she hears, and in the beautiful photographs with which our Flying Corps keep the army supplied. These photographs are wonderful in their detail; but still more wonderful in the clearness with which each detail down below stands out before the eyes.

BRITISH IN CHARGE

Gameness of Wounded Who Kept On Fighting

A British officer of the charge his men said: "D'y'know, some of 'em got there, yelling, with as many as three separate bullet wounds; and I give you my word that half of 'em, at least, jumped into that Boche trench without a weapon in their hands. Lots had the rifles smashed and blown out of their hands. Some bowled over like boys doing Catharine wheels, when they were hit, and rushed straight on with hardly a check. That happened to quite a number right on the Boche parapet, you know.

"They took no more notice of Boche bayonets than if they'd been spray of the sea. To see those chaps of mine tackling the Boche with their bare hands was worth living for—or dying for. They just tore their men down; and wrenched their own rifles from 'em. One big section commander of mine was just a terrier with rats. He went for his men like a blooming limplighter; stalked 'em down, grabbed 'em by the slack of the breeches and the neck, and chucked 'em back over the parapet, to roll down into the remains of their own wire.

"Fall in there! Fall in!' he kept yelling, and goodness alone knows what he meant by it. But he got 'em out of business all right, and I'sort of rounded 'em up from the little shell-hole where I lay; and in a way they did fall in, in a cluster, lying on the ground. They were docile enough; mostly stunned; and I'd my revolver in my left hand, you see. And then my lads cleaned out the dugouts, mostly using German bombs."

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic" is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, rash, ringworm, barber's itch, skin irritations or erysipelas, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic it prevents blood poisoning.

Women Once Invalids

Now in Good Health Through Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Say it is Household Necessity. Doctor Called it a Miracle.

All women ought to know the wonderful effects of taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound even on those who seem hopelessly ill. Here are three actual cases:

Harrisburg, Penn.—"When I was single I suffered a great deal from female weakness because my work compelled me to stand all day. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for that and was made stronger by its use. After I was married I took the Compound again for a female trouble and after three months I passed what the doctor called a growth. He said it was a miracle that it came away as one generally goes under the knife to have them removed. I never want to be without your Compound in the house."—Mrs. FRANK KNOBL, 1642 Fulton St., Harrisburg, Penn.

Hardly Able to Move.

Albert Lea, Minn.—"For about a year I had sharp pains across my back and hips and was hardly able to move around the house. My head would ache and I was dizzy and had no appetite. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, I am feeling stronger than for years. I have a little boy eight months old and am doing my work all alone. I would not be without your remedies in the house as there are none like them."—Mrs. F. E. YOST, 611 Water St., Albert Lea, Minn.

Three Doctors Gave Her Up.

Pittsburg, Penn.—"Your medicine has helped me wonderfully. When I was a girl 18 years old I was always sickly and delicate and suffered from irregularities. Three doctors gave me up and said I would go into consumption. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and with the third bottle began to feel better. I soon became regular and I got strong and shortly after I was married. Now I have two nice stout healthy children and am able to work hard every day."—Mrs. CLEMENTINA DUBBARNE, 34 Gardner St., Troy Hill, Pittsburg, Penn.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

Life Guards of England in the War

Writing to the Westminster Gazette an ex-Life Guards officer gives a summary of the splendid record in the war of the Household Cavalry, so often sneered at as society's darlings, etc. He says:

(1) The whole of the Household Cavalry — now, with its reserves, numbering six regiments—has been in khaki ever since the outbreak of the war, with the sole exception of the dozen troopers required to mount the King's Life Guard at Whitehall, most of whom have returned wounded from active service; (2) a Composite Regiment drawn from the three corps was sent to France in August, 1914, taking part in the retreat from Mons and in the arduous operations on the Aisne and around Ypres; (3) the Composite Regiment was then absorbed into the complete Household Cavalry Brigade sent out early in October, 1914, which immediately began to take its part with the rest of the Army in active warfare on the Western front; (4) even in the brief period covered by Lord Ernest Hamilton's well-known book, "The First Seven Divisions," all three regiments greatly distinguished themselves, their defence of the Zandvoorde trenches being adjudged by a prominent infantry officer "one of the finest feats of the war," while the 1st Life Guards' brilliant work with the bayonet at Wytschate and in the trenches near Hill 60, and the equally effective bayonet charges of the 2nd Life Guards and the Blues at Zwartelen, earned the highest praise for a performance which "undoubtedly averted the danger of a serious calamity"; (5) a further demand was made on the Household Cavalry to provide a Divisional Squadron, with Cyclist Corps, for work with the Guards' Division; (6) a number of honours have been won during the war by both officers and men in the Household Cavalry Brigade, and (7) the recruiting for these regiments has proved so successful that from their three reserve regiments it has been found practicable to form a Household Infantry Battalion for service abroad.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOY'S SUIT.

By Anabel Worthington.

7968

To show that the maximum of style may be put into a boy's suit, without taking one bit from the boyishness of the design, we illustrate No. 7,968—it would be hard to find a suit for general wear with as many good points.

The blouse, of plain and comfortable cut, is in coat style; the long sleeve finishes with a link cuff of the material cut bias, and the pocket in the lower part of each front, of course, was designed to please a manly boy. From the pocket attraction we turn to the belt, in contrasting color held in place by the extended strap of the pocket. The collar may have a row or two rows of braid, but it is well set off by the tie in matching color.

The straight trousers are of smart cut, fitted with a pocket in each back and under each front. Any mother can make this little suit from the clear directions of the pattern.

If washable materials are preferred, striped and plain galatea, linen, Indian Head and the like are very desirable. Serge, homespun and wool mixtures are the standbys among other fabrics.

The pattern, No. 7,968, is cut in sizes 2, 4 and 6 years. To make in the medium size will require 3⅛ yards 36 inch material and ⅛ yard 36 inch contrasting goods.

You may obtain the pattern by sending 10 cents to the office of this publication.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25 cents.

The Times—The waters where this most unwelcome visitors is prowling and destroying are the highways of our chief ports. Through them pass ships carrying a great part of our commerce and substantially all the American passengers who cross the seas. One rash act, a single mistake, on the part of the U-boat commander, causing the loss of even one American life, would provoke instant action by the American government. Thereafter despatches to Ambassador von Bernstorff could be handed to him in Berlin, and relations between the two governments would be at an end. This submarine has begun a wholesale, indiscriminate foray against our commerce. It appears to be almost certain that she has already sunk vessels in disregard of law.

Germany has been deprived of her power of offensive on land. Her plight is desperate and daily growing more desperate. Her Kaiser and his Ministers see the black shadow of defeat that ever comes nearer and nearer. The German people are losing heart and their rulers no longer dare to let them know the truth about battles and campaigns. They may have hoped that the news of the sinking of enemy ships in these western waters by the U-53 would give their people the courage to endure further privation and suffering. That would be a strangely shortsighted policy. Germany's rulers are looking about for a way of salvation. The unending rumours of peace overtures show that. When the time comes, as it must soon come, when they will be forced to sue for peace, they are going to stand in sore need of neutral friendly offices. Yet by sending here a war ship that vividly recalls to our memories the black crime of the Lusitania they run straight into the danger of estranging the one nation that can best serve them in that coming time when they will need a friend. The murder of the hundred Americans who went down with the Lusitania has never been atoned for. We have given our last warning. The time for forebearance has passed. The people know that they can trust President Wilson to safeguard the rights and interests of the country prudently and wisely, but firmly.

The Staats-Zeitung—Yesterday morning's bag for the U-53 off Nantucket was the British ship West Point, 2,612 tons gross; the British ship Strathdene, the steamer Stephano, of the Red Cross line, and some other vessels. The submarine brought the vessels to by gunfire, gave their crews all the time needed to take to their boats and then sank them. It was clean work, according to all reports to hand, without loss of life and unattended by any of those invasions of our neutral rights which save so often attached to the operations of British war ships on our coasts. This is a beginning creditable alike to the officers and men of the U-53 and the service which they ornament.

The New Yorker Herold—In case the brave U-53 patrols the American coast, especially before the principal ports of Boston, New York and Philadelphia and in its present district, the undersea tonnage of the British and allied merchant fleets can in a few weeks expect a considerable increase—which, in fact of the American exports of death dealing instruments, is only to be desired.

SAVING WAR'S HEROES

Massage and Electricity Used At Convalescent Home

A Convalescent Home at Toronto is described as follows: After many many months the effects of St. Julien are still to be found at the Home. One man told of receiving his "knock-out" after but a few days in the trenches. It was in a bayonet charge that a piece of shrapnel struck him in the skull and he still suffers severely with his head. There are tohers—too many to tell of—who have known the actuality of war and the extremity of pain that succeeds it, and who are now finding a haven in Toronto's Home. They were an appreciative audience—resting under the shady trees or lying on the grass while the band played patriotic airs and the "down south" melodies with all their pathos.

Altogether of 1,656 men registered at the Home, about one-half have been discharged. Them, outsiders, to the extent of three hundred, report for treatment each day. There are two nurses, three doctors and the latest surgical appliances. One especially interesting department is that of electro-therapeutics and hydro-therapy, in charge of Frank Davies. Here efforts are made to save men's limbs from amputation, and to loosen them up whose stiffness renders them otherwise useless. The very latest electrical devices have been installed here, where from thirty-five to forty-five treatments a day are given. Arms and legs are literally "baked" in cabinets containing water heated to over one hundred degrees, and then, when in a limber state, are manipulated and massaged by Mr. Davies. Within the course of two months a man, almost totally paralysed, recovered the use of his limbs through the medium of these treatments.

Fine Canadian Morale

Here is one result of the third Battle of Ypres: In one Canadian battalion only two officers survived. In some other battalions the losses have been very severe. One lost three-quarters of its strength. But the morale of all ranks was unimpaired, and the troops, who had endured this day an experience which might well weaken the purpose of the strongest and stoutest, were fit and ready at dawn on the morrow to undertake a counter-attack.

Noted Indian Chiefs

A number of Indian chiefs are serving side by side with ordinary braves in Brock's Rangers, an overseas battalion. There is Chief Clear Sky, whose vocal talent is such that he has made several successful vaudeville tours. Chief Little Bear, also of the Six Nations, is also among the volunteers of the 114th Battalion.

WILFUL WASTE AT CAMP.

Battalion Wearing Apparel is Consigned to the Flames.

NIAGARA CAMP, Oct. 6.—Three of the battalions in camp, 215th, 220th, and 234th, took an early morning route march this morning, starting before daylight out the Queenston Road, in time to get back to camp before eleven.

The burning to-day of large piles of old shoes, socks, sweaters, etc., which belonged to the 169th Battalion, has led to the suggestion that there should be a reclaiming department in connection with military camps, as much of the goods could be restored, being nearly as good as new.

STORK WAS NEAR.

Therefore Chicago Man Gave Up $810 Without a Fuss.

"Not so loud! Here, take this," said W. H. Lucas, Chicago, Ill., labour union official, to a pair of hold-up men who stopped him in front of his home about midnight, and he handed them his roll of $810. They hopped in an automobile and drove away.

"My wife's expecting the stork, and rather than cause any excitement I gave up the money without a fuss," Lucas told the police.

STEEL FOR QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Orders Have Been Placed for it in PITTSBURG.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 7.—Rush orders have just been placed here for steel to complete a new span in the Quebec bridge to replace the one which recently fell into the St. Lawrence River, it became known yesterday. The Dominion Bridge Co. has placed a contract with the American Bridge Co. to fabricate the new span, and the Carnegie Steel Co. will roll 5,000 tons of steel shapes and beams at its Homestead plant.

"I suppose you know the answer to about any questions an interviewer could ask?"

"Possibly," replied Senator Sorghum. "The fact that I know the real answer so thoroughly is sometimes what makes me a trifle diffident about expressing myself."

CLOCK IS MINUS HANDS.

Curious London Timepiece Can be Heard, But Not Seen.

A public clock which can be heard but not seen is one of London's curious possessions. It is in the tower of St. Mary Abbot's Church, Kensington, and is the only public clock in the immediate neighbourhood.

It chimes the quarters and the hours, but commits itself no further. It has the dial, no hands, no outward and visible sign of any kind to show that it is a clock. This eccentricity, it is explained, is the result of two causes, one esthetic, the other financial. When the tower was built in 1879 a clock was suggested as an after thought, but the architect protested that it would mean the addition of fifteen feet to the tower, and the ruin of its cherished proportions.

The second point was that the church, having but slender funds, could not afford a clock with a dial. A compromise was arrived at by installing the works of a chiming clock in the belfry without dial or hands.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, October 11.—British troops have arrived within two miles of the Greek City of Seres in their new offensive against the Bulgars, it was officially announced to-day. A Bulgarian cavalry detachment operating two miles south of Seres was dispersed and driven back.

Fresh Progress Made By French Troops

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

PARIS (French Official Communique), October 11. — South of the Somme, where a successful blow yesterday carried the village of Bouvent and brought the French noose tight around Chaulnes, General Foch's troops made further progress last night in grenade operations, it was officially announced to-day.

Most of the night was spent in organizing the newly won positions. The total number of prisoners now at this point is 1,377. In Champagne and on the Verdun front, several small German attacks were checked before they reached the French trenches. In the Vosges the Germans reached a few elements of French trenches near Shonhols, after an artillery bombardment, but were driven out by a grenade counter attack being heavily.

PARIS, October 11.—Anglo-French armies have taken 2,614 prisoners since October 1, it was officially announced to-day.

Monastir Is Expected To Fall Immediately

Special to Examiner:

LONDON, October 11.—Serbian troops are engaged in a fierce battle with the Bulgars for possession of Chuka Height, absolutely dominating the important town of Monastir which is expected to fall immediately.

On the Allied right wing the British are steadily driving the Bulgars back upon the Demirthishar-Seres railway, the objective of the present British advance. In Transylvania reinforcements are stiffening the resistance of the Roumanians. The fighting in Dobrudja has reached a deadlock.

Italian Troops In General Offensive

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 11.—Official reports from Vienna and Rome indicate that the Italians are making a general assault on the Austrian defences from all sides, apparently with the object of smashing through to Trieste before Christmas. The Italians report successes on all fronts, while the Austrians admit that their troops have given ground on some sectors.

Roumanians Hold Their Own In Dobrudja

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, October 11.—Though retiring in Transylvania the Roumanians, aided by the Russians, are holding their ground in the Dobrudja or seacoast region. To-day's Petrograd statement says:—"In Dobrudja exchanges of fire and scouting operations are proceeding along the entire front.

German Subs Shell Russian Radio Station

Special to The Examiner.

BERLIN, October 11.—Three German submarines shelled and heavily damaged the Russian radio station at Yepnovalok, on the Murman coast, along the Arctice Sea.

A Christiana newspaper reported yesterday that a Russian destroyer sank two German submarines and crippled a third off Yepnovalok.

No Time For Faint Hearts Says Asquith

Examiner Special:

LONDON, October 11.—Premier Asquith received a tremendous ovation in the House of Commons this afternoon when he declared in the midst of a speech in which he moved new war credits. "This war cannot end in a patched-up, precarious, dishonouring compromise, masquerading under the name of peace."

"This isn't the moment for faint hearts and wavering counsels," said the Prime Minister, when the galleries were again silent. "The Allies are not vindictive, but they will require from their enemies adequate reparation for the past and security for the future."

Great Britain's average daily expenditure is now $25,000,000, Premier Asquith informed the Commons in moving new credits. Reviewing the military operations, the Prime Minister declared that in the recent operations on the Somme front, the British have advanced their lines seven miles on a nine-mile front, and have held all the conquered ground.

NEW BRITISH VOTE OF CREDIT FOR ONE AND HALF BILLION

Thirteenth Vote Introduced Since the War Began and Brings the Total Amount to Sixteen and One-half Billion Dollars

ANOTHER SHORTLY

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Oct. 11.—The House of Commons to-day began the consideration of the serious problems resulting from the war, with the introduction by Premier Asquith of a new vote of credit for one and a half billion dollars. Under the procedure of Parliament this step permits the members to discuss any subject. It was expected the debate would cover a wide range and would include in addition to financial questions, the government of Ireland, which the Nationalists who have definitely taken sides against the Government will bring up. The vote of credit is the thirteenth since the outbreak of the war, bringing up the total to sixteen and a half billion. As to-day's credit vote is expected to last until the end of the present year, another request will be necessary before March.

City Workmen Made Special Effort On Outfall Sewer Work

The city's employees on the outfall sewer worked all day Sunday and on Thanksgiving Day, and worked at top speed on what should have been to them days or rest it a successful effort to advance the pipe north of the siding on Park street into the C.G.E. plant just above the Albert street sewer. When the company required the tracks last night to remove cars of freight the sewer had been filled in and the rails were in their old position. The spirit of these workmen deserves a special mention in these days of labour scarcity which seems to induce an indifference to the work in hand, knowing that vacancies on all sides are open. Mr. John Thirnbeck, foreman of the work, superintended the details of the rush fork.

Another Hole In New Act

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

TORONTO, Oct. 11.—The distillers of Ontario claim to have discovered another serious loophole in the Ontario Temperance Act. One at least of the leading distillery firms of the province has sent out a circular letter to the two hundred former shop licensees, advising that chase 139 of the Act would appear to permit upon the payment of excise duties direct deliveries to private consumers in Ontario from any bonded warehouse in this province. The letter expresses the belief of the firm that all bonded warehouses will now practically take the place of retail shops of former times.

GREATER EFFORT NEEDED ON THE PART OF US ALL

Five weeks' sojourn in England and France with the knowledge it brought and evidence it afforded of the grim struggle in which we are engaged, the tremendous issues that are involved, the opportunity of seeing personally the toil, the suffering, the sacrifices and the heroism of our men in the trenches, the havoc and woe the war had wrought in all directions in Europe, the sight of the maimed, the wounded and the dying in hospitals in France and England, all impressed upon me the necessity for greater sacrifices, greater earnestness and greater exertion on the part of all of us if we are to measure up to what the Empire and our men in the field have the right to expect of us.

"Many of use are following our daily avocations, but little inconvenienced and little disturbed by the terrible conflict upon which the future of the British Empire and the happiness of the world depend. Surely it is time to take the war more seriously to heart, and bend every energy and make every sacrifice that may be necessary to supply more men and more munitions and to support our men in every way possible in the field, so that the present conflict may be brought to an end as speedily as possible."—Hon. W. H. Hearst, Prime Minister of Ontario.

The 93rd Battalion Has Ceased To Exist As A Separate Unit

Staff is Being Transferred to 39th Eastern Ontario Training Battalion---Rumour That 235th Battalion May Winter in City---Pte. Marvin King of Peterboro' is Wounded ---Artillery Brigade Commences Recruiting Here--To-day's General Military News.

That the 93rd Peterborough Battalion has ceased to exist as a separate unit of the Canadian Expeditionary Force is evidenced by a cablegram received yesterday from Capt. J. H. Burnham, Paymaster of the 93rd. Capt. Burnham's message was to the effect that the staff of the battalion are being transferred as the 39th Reserve Battalion. It is generally known that many of the officers and the vast majority of the men of the Peterborough Battalion are now in France to take up the work for which they enlisted and now with the transferring of the staff to the 39th the 93rd Battalion has passed into history. A short time ago it was announced that the 93rd were to be converted into a training battalion which would have meant that the Peterborough unit would have retained its identity and been used to prepare fresh drafts from Canada for the firing line. This plan has apparently been done away with. The 39th Reserve Battalion has ever since its arrival in England been the training unit for Eastern Ontario troops and is evidently to remain so. The officers of the 93rd who are transferred to the 39th will be used in the work of putting the final touches on the new soldiers from Canada. It is likely that the fine staff of non-commissioned officers of the 93rd will find that their services will be required in England for instructional purposes and for a time at least not many of the Sergeant's will see the firing line. Letters received by the Examiner yesterday show that the 93rd Bugle Band has ceased to exist. The majority of the buglers and drummers have gone to France with the different drafts selected from the battalion, and those left in England are too young to go to the firing line. The brass band was still intact according to the last word received.

OTTAWA, Oct. 11.—A request has come from England for five hundred more Army Service men from Canada. A special recruiting call for them will be made at once from each District Headquarters. They are needed in connection with transport and supply work.

LONDON, Oct. 10.—Speaking in the House of Commons to-night, the War Minister, Mr. Lloyd George, said the valuable assistance of the Canadian Forestry Battalions was fully recognised. It had been already arranged for a proper co-ordination of their work, and that all the Battalions, whether at home, or abroad, should operate under the direct control of one expert Canadian officer. The suggestion made that all lumbering should be under Canadian control was being carried out as regards soft wood in France, but it was not desirable to disturb the existing arrangements for other kinds of timber in the war zone.

The War Minister was replying to Bennet Goldney, who had urged, that all timber cutting should be put under Canadian control, owing that the Canadians had proved themselves of superior in this work here.

OTTAWA, Oct. 10.—An organization session of the National Service directors was begun this afternoon at the Chateau Laurier. It will continue for perhaps three days, when a statement will be issued announcing the plan upon which the duties allotted to the National Service by the Government, are to be performed.

There were present to-day the Director-General Sir Thos. Tait and the following directors from the military districts named:

Lieut.-Col. H. Brock, Toronto; J. H. Sherrard, Montreal; K. W. McKay, London; Capt. W. H. Bowen, Kingston; Lieut.-Col. C. A. Chauveau, Quebec; G. S. Campbell, Halifax; Major L. P. D. Tilley, St. John; E. B. Chapman, Winnipeg; A. S. Haining Saskatchewan, and R. F. Green, M.P., British Columbia. Mr. R. B. Bennett, M.P., of Alberta, is expected to be present to-morrow.

Ten Thousand Dollars' Worth of Property Consumed including the Methodist Church and Four Residences—Loss Partly Covered By Insurance

HELP FROM MILLBROOK

MILLBROOK, Oct. 11—About two o'clock yesterday afternoon fire broke out in the residence of Mr. Ira Palmer, Pontypool and before the flames could be checked, four residences and the Methodist Church were destroyed.

The fire was first seen in the roof of Mr. Palmer's residence and was supposed to have started from the chimney.

The inhabitants of Pontypool and surrounding country turned out en masse and did all they could to extinguish the fire; their only means being water buckets. These were put to the best possible use by a large corps of willing workers, and by strenuous efforts the flames were subdued but not before the above damage was done.

There was a strong wind blowing at the time which made the task of fighting the fire most difficult. A call was sent to Millbrook for help and a number of the firemen and others went out in automobiles but did not arrive in time to be of much service.

The loss will be about $10,000 part of which is covered by insurance.

Grocers' By-law Became Effective Last Evening

Last evening marked the inception of the Grocers' by-law, which compels all groceries or grocery establishments to close their stores not later than 7 o'clock each evening, and remain closed until 8 o'clock the following morning. This by-law affects the fruit dealers who handle a few groceries just the same as the man who deals exclusively in groceries, according to the interpretation placed on the latest civic mandate by the police department. Last night all fruit dealers were ordered to close up despite many protestations. Their only remedy under the existing by-law is to dispose of their grocery stock and confine their activities to fruit alone. The by-law was enacted at the request of more than three-fourths of the grocers of the city, with the result that the City Council had no alternative but to adopt it in accordance with Provincial Legislation.

LARGEST SUM ON RECORD

Methodists of Canada Raised $681,000 for Missionary Purposes.

TORONTO, Oct 10.—The Methodists of Canada this year have raised the largest sum in their history for missionary purposes. Despite the call of many other funds to which Methodists have responded most liberally, the total income augmented last year to over $681,000. The report was presented by the treasurer, Mr. H. H. Fudger, to the Mission Board this afternoon, and showed a balance of $30,000 of income over expenditure. A sum of $200,000 was spent on mission work in West China and Japan, where a force of one hundred missionaries is maintained. $100,000 was spent on foreign work in Canada, and the balance expended on home mission fields in new districts.

The total assets of the Methodist Missionary Society now amount to $1,303,000.

On concluding his report Mr. Fudger made a strong plea for the maintenance of a conservative policy for next year. While he did no advocate the cutting down of the present scale of expenditure he opposed the taking up of any new work which would mean a largely increased outlay.

A Bad Fire In Otonabee

Mr. Edward J. Fife, 4th Concession of Otonabee, is a heavy loser by reason of a fire which broke out on his farm last evening, and destroyed all the barns and outbuildings. The origin of the blaze is a mystery, but the flames had obtained considerable headway before the fire was detected. All this year's crops and a quantity of farm machinery and implements were destroyed, and six pigs and three cow, four cows were burned. The damage will be at least $6,000 fairly well covered by insurance.

FIGHTING FOR PRINCIPLE.

We may think we are doing well in subscribing a 200 million dollar war loan. It is only a drop in the bucket to what Britain's average daily expenditure is now, twenty-five million dolalrs per day, more than a million dollars per hour. At that rate our 200 million dollars would last her only a little more than a week. Great Britain is making the immense sacrifice implied in such a scale of expenditure, not for her own national advantage directly, but to keep her name and reputation as the friend of freedom and humanity, good, to keep good faith and honour in the earth, to save the down-trodden and protect the weak nations from international bullying. Great Britain may be a nation of shopkeepers, but she makes money as the instrument of good. She did not put down slavery in her American colonies as she might have done, by the strong arm, but she paid for their liberation. She is spending money now to destroy a worse thing than black slavery, the slavery of militarism. Great Britain is making sacrifices greater than any other nation ever did for conquest or even self preservation, for so intangible a thing as principle.

WHAT WILL HE DO?

The United States may be, as President Wilson as interpreter of its state of mind, "too proud to fight," but it looks now as if it would have to fight, from the mere animal instinct of self-preservation. Germany has declared war upon its most cherished interests—its material interests. President Wilson allowed the United States to pass over the murder and drowning of its citizens, as a matter not more serious than to justify the sending of polite and innocuous diplomatic notes; but when the interest of a few virtually contraband traders was held to be threatened by the action of England, taken as much in the interests of the United States civilization and liberty as that of any of the down-trodden small states or of the allies, a good deal more "pep" was put into the protests to a civilized government than in the protests against German piracy and murder.

It cannot be otherwise than that President Wilson and his advisers will take real cognizance of the last act of German "frightfulness"—an attack on the United States in her own waters. The submarine piracy of a day or two ago represented a virtual blockade of United States ports, an assault on her commerce, an interference with her own domestic trade. Ships laden with consignments to United States ports from Canadian ports were sunk, and the wonderful thing was the presence of United States destroyers, which stood by and witnessed the piracy. The very boldness of the attack seems a challenge to the United States, a blow in the face which Germany, arguing from the past, thinks the United States will not resent, but may regard as a ground for demanding peace— with the author of such infamy and of ten thousand other infamies against liberty, humanity and civilization, unpunished. Germany knows and we know that carrying the war into America won't in the slightest degree influence the grim determination of Britain, and her allies to wage the fight to a finish; or in any material sense, be of the slightest military advantage to Germany or disadvantage to her antagonists in this war.

Election or no election, President Wilson, if he has red blood, will be forced to at least match the virtual blockade of United States ports, or the virtual declaration of war and defiance of the Monroe doctrine by Germany. The fight in United States waters between submarine pirates and civilized commerce, refereed officially by United States destroyers flying the American flag, is more the concern of that country than of Canada or Great Britain or the allies. To use a "Bobby" speech, it has become "their funeral", and we shall look with interest for development of United States public opinion in respect of the crowning insult, an assault, next door to an overt act like the bombardment of the city of New York. The question has now become, not what President Wilson, as the ruler of the United States, will say, but, what will he do?

HAVE WE MOVED?

Yesterday the Examiner printed a sketch of a Presbyterian minister who lived to the advanced age of 99 years and had been continuously preaching—till within a month or two of his death—for 66 years. To-day is printed a sketch of a Methodist minister who yesterday celebrated his ninety years, who has been in harness sixty-seven years and like Moses, "his eye is not dim nor his natural force abated." A hundred years ago they made strong men, and when we recall the strenuous lives of these two remarkable men, it would seem that preaching the gospel tends to longevity. How many million messages have these two men proferred to sinners and how many sheaves are to their credit! How many changes both have seen, not only in the condition of the country, which is subject to change, but in the conditions, attitude and beliefs and practises of their respective churches, which are supposed in these regards to be unchanging, to have been founded upon eternal principles. Is the Christian of this day as robust as in the days of these two great men? Has it the same influence upon the lives of men, not in regard of its essence, but in its exploitation. These were two great men, and though the fruit of their work is not a matter of statistical record, it is probable that they have done more good, influenced more men for good than scores of men whose names and deeds are blazoned in history. Theirs were the days when men served for the sake of the service, not for the sake of the salary. Rev. Dr. Griffin's first yearly stipend was $70, and he did more hard work, suffered more hardships like a good soldier, and possibly did more good in one year than many a modern minister does in his brief career. Nowadays the average minister would scoff at $70 a year; and even a we away a salary twenty times as great — $1,400 — and bargain for thirty times the early preacher's modest salary and think himself scantily paid. The rule of the world is that service is paid according to merit and results; but it is a question whether the average preacher of a century ago, with his pitiful salary, did not do more good than the preachers of to-day with their princely stipends. But we are told that times have changed; conditions have changed, and that preaching and Christianity and even theology, must show increasing pliancy and must adapt the gospel of Him who is with out variableness or shadow of turning to the changing outlook and moral caprices of a developing humanity. This may be all right, but it is barely possible that Christianity is not to-day doing the work it is expected to do, as thoroughly and effectively, as it did in the days of simple faith and fruitful preaching at the rate of 20 cents a day instead of $10 per day. Have we moved forward or retrograded since the palmy pulpit days of David Tully and W. S. Griffin?

TU QUOQUE.

By repeating daily that a vote for Laurier is a vote for Bourassa The News hopes to make its readers forget that Hon Frank Cochrane brought Bourassa up to Sudbury at the last election to fall his fellow-countrymen that a vote for Borden was a vote for Bourassa.—Globe.

MUST EXPLAIN.

The time will come when American Democracy will need to explain how it was that the United States gave house-room to Count von Bernstorff after Germany brazenly broke its treaty regarding Belgium in 1914, murderously sank the Lusitania in 1915, and stood off the "three-mile limit" with its thumb to the nose, mocking at the American Republic in 1916.—Globe.

"Bourassa is not now 'stumping' for Sir Robert Borden, and never did."—London Free Press.

For whom, then, was he stumping in the election of 1911? For whom was he stumping when, on the invitation of Hon. Frank Cochrane, he entered Ontario and stumped Nipissing in that election? For whom was he stumping all over Quebec in 1911, when he was fighting against every Laurier candidate in that Province and supporting every candidate favourable to Borden. If he was not stumping for Borden throughout the last general election, why was his campaign financed, in large part, by the backers of Borden? And, when the election was over and the Laurier Government defeated, why did Sir Robert Borden call four of Bourassa's elected supporters into his Cabinet if Bourassa had not been stumping for Borden?—Toronto Star.

Is Germany Holding "Big Stick" Over Uncle Sam?

Probably it is not a mere coincidence that Germany's exhibition of frightfulness off the coast of the United States should synchronise with the return of Ambassador Gerard. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Gerard's visit, whether the primary object be a vacation or not, is being made the occasion of negotiations of the most important nature between Germany and the United States. It is quite possible that Mr. Gerard has been asked to inform his Government either that Germany demands that no more munitions shall be sold to the Allies, or that Germany now wishes the active intervention of the United States in the interests of peace. The latter is the more likely.

Whatever message Mr. Gerard brings to his Government, evidently that message is accompanied by a threat, for a New York World representative, who is travelling with Mr. Gerard, declares that the former brings the news that, in the case of certain eventualities, submarine warfare is to be resumed without regard to results and "more ruthlessly" than was the sinking of the Lusitania. A demonstration of submarine activity off the coasts of the United States would fit in with the rumored mission of Mr. Gerard, as being in the nature of a hint as to the possibilities of absolutely ruthless submarine warfare.

Meanwhile Washington is taking the situation calmly. Semi-official announcements are to the effect that so far international law appears to have been observed by the raiding submarine, but the real official opinion is shown by that fact that American warships have been sent out to search for and succor crews and passengers turned adrift in open boats at sea; also that preparations are now being made to establish a warship patrol along the American coast. The work of rescue shows beyond any argument that the Washington authorities do not consider that the crews and passengers were taken to a place of safety by the raider, as international law requires.

Americans who are not too proud to fight will ask themselves whether Germany, too scared to make good her "blockade" of the United Kingdom, is not going to try as an alternative a blockade of the United States. They will wonder why, if this orgy of wanton destruction is in accordance with international law, it is quite right to sink Dutch and Norwegian ships trading to United States ports, although those ships belong to nations just as neutral as is the United States. They will ask themselves whether it can be true that Germany is within her right in sinking a vessel running from Newfoundland to New York, thus destroying all the personal effects of many Americans, as well as other neutrals and non-combatants, to say nothing of turning everybody on board adrift in open boats. A lot of pride will have to be swallowed by Americans before they can answer these questions in the affirmative, and meekly thank Germany for such strict 'observance' of international law.

Nonogenarian Methodist Minister

Rev. Dr. W. S. Griffin, is 90 years old to-day. Old? Well, his eye is bright, his mind keen, and his humor as entertaining as ever. He has been confined to his house, 90 Madison avenue, for months, but from sciatica. Dr. Griffin is younger than most men. He is ninety years young.

Dr Griffin was born at Waterdown, north of Hamilton. His father was Ebenezer Griffin, and his grandfather Smith Griffin. The latter, a U. E. Loyalist, founded and named Smithville, on the mountain, back of Grimsby. Dr. Griffin's father was born in 1800, and, therefore, was only a boy during the war of 1812 to, but he was in the militia in 1837. Dr. Griffin was educated at Hamtilon and Victoria College, Cobourg.

IN MINISTRY SINCE 1849.

"I have been in unbroken connection with the Methodist ministry since 1849," said Dr. Griffin to-day. "It is a record, I should say, certainly for the Dominion of Canada. I have been at work for 68 years."

In 1849 young W. S. Griffin began his ministry on the Seneca circuit. In 1803 he filled his last pastorate, that of Galt, also on the Grand River, and came to Toronto to accept his present position. Between 1849 and 1893 he was stationed in most of the important towns and cities of Ontario.

The Methodist Church has grown since Dr. Griffin's ordination. When he made his first circuit trip he had twenty-two appointments and only two churches, the services being held generally in school houses.

HIS FIRST SALARY $70.

His salary for the first year was the princely sum of $70, and he had paid $100 for his horse. That first year was not a financial success, as the horse went lame and another had to be procured.

When Dr. Griffin became treasurer of the connexional funds the investment fund was under $200,000, now it is about $800,000.

"My friends have not forgotten me to-day" said this pioneer. "Messages have come from everywhere. The good people congratulate me on my vigor and activity."

NO BELIEVER IN UNION

"What do you think of Church Union?" The Star asked.

"The whole question, with its agitation, is a calamity, and I think it has inflicted great damage upon the Methodist Church for the last ten years. I think that these churches—Methodist and Presbyterian—could work side by side more effectually than if houses together with their creed differences and prejudices. If they are united it will not be long before the break will come. It was never proposed that the Methodist Church should surrender all her membership and churches and personages and funds and colleges to obtain organic union with half of the Presbyterian Church. The Presbyterians are divided and there will still remain a Presbyterian Church. We are called upon to surrender everything, and a large part of the Presbyterian Church will continue as if there were no union. I do not believe that the Methodist Church will stand for that."

THE QUESTION OF HELL.

The Star asked Dr. Griffin, rich in years, wise in human wisdom and devoted to his sacred calling, what he thought of Rev. Dr. Henderson's attitude toward the material hell of fire and brimstone.

"Dr. Henderson was misreported. His views on future punishment and future happiness are shared by many. He said that the future of the ungodly would not be inflicted in a material place where fire and brimstone predominated, but that there would be a spiritual punishment in the future world. The brimstone theory belongs to the past. What would a spirit care for fire?"

Dr Griffin was asked as to politics.

"What I am politically doesn't matter," he said, "but I regard Sir Wilfrid Laurier as the greatest man living—in the political life of the country."

Dr and Mrs Griffin were married fifty-nine years ago the fall.—Toronto Star.

ANNUAL MEETING OF FEDERATION LIBERAL CLUBS

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Oct. 11 1916.—Year after year since its formation in 1913, the Liberal Club Federation of Ontario has had a successful career, culminating, as far as this season's work is concerned, in the fourth annual meeting, which opened here this afternoon under the most favourable auspices.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. N. W. Rowell and Premier Norris of Manitoba arrived in town at noon ready to speak at the monster banquet to be held in connection with the federation meeting this evening.

This afternoon was devoted to the business of the federation and a discussion of public problems in both the federal and provincial field. There was a great splash of delegates from Western Ontario points and also a large number of others from Federation Clubs in Toronto and from the eastern and northern parts of the province. Mr. G. D. Conant of Oshawa, President of the Federation, was in the chair with Mr. E. H. McCreath of Toronto, the Secretary-Treasurer, at his left. Mr. Sidney Little, President of the London Liberal Club, welcomed the out of town delegates and the Federation on this, its first official visit to London; and the members of the London Club proved most hospitable hosts.

The President and Secretary of the Federation outlined the work done during the past year, emphasizing once again that the greatest achievement of the Federation since the war began was the long lists of officers and members of the Liberal Clubs throughout the province who had joined the Canadian army, many of whom had already laid down their lives. The report emphasized the various patriotic undertakings of the Federation during the past two years.

After the discussion of business a number of topics were discussed. The problem of "Agriculture" for example was taken into consideration by agricultural delegates including J. D. Wylie of Cardinal and among the issues talked about were rural credits, agricultural education. New Ontario and land settlement. Mr. H. B. Cowan, Editor Farm and Dairy Peterborough told what he thought the farmers of the province wanted.

Mr. George Wilkie of Toronto spoke on the nickel question, a subject in which the Federation members showed the keenest interest.

As in previous years there were representatives present from the Provincial Women's Liberal Association who brought greetings from their organization to the Liberal Club Federation and who in turn were heartily welcomed by the President and delegates who included a review of women's problems on their agenda.

Labour and social reform were discussed under such aspects as Labour and capital after the war, food prices, provision for workmen in old age, sickness and unemployment. "Citizenship" was discussed, including graft and the patronage evil, franchise; initiative and referendum. "The problem of returned soldiers" was considered, including pensions, employment and vocational training for the wounded.

The Water Supply Shows Improvement

At yesterday's meeting of the Board of Health, Dr. C. H. Amys, medical officer of Health reported that there was some considerable improvement in the quality of the city's water supply. Dr. Amys states that there is still a little contamination in the water and for that reason would recommend that it be boiled. At present there is no typhoid fever in the city and in fact no contagious disease of any kind with the exception of one case of diphtheria in the Isolation Hospital.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

HOW BOSTON LOST THE THIRD GAME OF THE WORLD'S SERIES

By Frank G. Menke.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 10.—Bill Carrigan tried a dangerous experiment this afternoon and it cost his Red Sox the third game of the world's series. He sent Mays to the mound in the hope that his subway delivery would baffle the Dodgers and the Brooklynites promptly mazed it for four runs and seven hits, which gave them the battle by a count of 4 to 3.

Living up to their "never say die" reputation, the red-hosed warriors from Boston tried gamely and desperately to overcome the handicap but they fell one run short. It was a ball game featured by plenty of clean hitting and devoid of any glaring errors; a contest that was won by the Dodgers because they outbatted their rivals and outplayed them and now the series count is Red Sox 2, Dodgers 1, with the Dodgers thoroughly recovered from their initial nervousness; with the clansmen of C. Hercules Ebbets back on earth again and playing the kind of baseball that lifted them to the crest of the National League.

It looked like the Red Sox to win in four out of five at the most after that first miserable exhibition in Boston with the qualification "if the Dodgers don't get hold of themselves immediately". But they have made that clutch, those Dodgers, they are playing now like world series veterans. They have come to realise that a titular combat is not one whit different than any other and they are playing it that way. Best of all from the Brooklyn viewpoint, is the fact that Jacob Daubert, premier swatsman of the outfit recovered his batting vision this afternoon, which augurs well for the Dodgers in future games.

But the defeat must not reflect upon the Sox. They have not lost their wallop, their fighting spirit or their superb ability. They went down to defeat because their leader put in a pitcher who began to wobble immediately and who for some strange reason was permitted to remain longer after it was to be seen that the Dodgers had him measured for a severe walloping.

CARRIGAN BLAMED FOR DEFEAT.

If any individual was at fault on the Sox squad it was Carrigan, for allowing Mays to linger—and still linger.

Ivan Olson, shortstop party for the home gang was the real hero of the fray from the Brooklyn viewpoint and all others. By his brilliant work on the defense he stopped several assaults of the red-hosed gentry and with his war club he hammered his associates through to victory. It was Olson who cinched the game in the fifth innings with a tremendous three-base hit to left, which scored two runs—the brace that enabled the Dodgers to win. Minus that one clout of Olson's a different story would be chanted to-night in baseballdom—a story that would tell of three straight triumphs for the Sox.

The Dodgers annexed their first tally in the third when Daubert singled. Stengel followed with a short single and Cutshaw delivered a blow down the right field foul line which was hefty enough to permit Doubert to slip across the plate. The second Dodger score was made in the fourth. Olson started off with a bunt single and promptly was sacrificed to second by Miller. Then came Jack Coombs with a single to right centre that scored Olson.

COOMBS WAS TAKEN OUT

That smash ended Jack Coombs. He had held the enemy in check early in the fray but in the sixth they began to solve him. When Gardner soaked him for a four-baser Wilbert Robinson halted operations and replaced "Old Jack" with Jeff Pfeffer, who promptly choked off further batting rallies.

Hennery O'Day has become very unpopular in Brooklyn and vicinity. It is all because he refused to permit Daubert a home run in the sixth stanza. Jacobus slammed one to the left field bleachers and it looked like a certain homer. Lewis threw to Scott and he relayed to Thomas at the plate. From the stands it seemed as if Daubert was safe by two feet. Hennery thought so too at first and waved Jacobus home while the crowd went mad with joy.

But the light-heartedness was shortlived. Even as Hennery signaled that Daubert had accompanied a clean drive, Thomas, still squatting upon Daubert howled at the umpire and Hennery then peered underneath Thomas and Daubert, peered long and intently and then waved out Daubert while all the folks registered anger and hatred and lust for the umpire's gore. The only explanation for Hennery's reversal seems to be that Daubert's toe was an inch or so from the plate at the moment the umpire did his squinting, although when Daubert first slid both his feet crossed the plate or an optical illusion occurred in the press box.

The loss of that run did not have any critical result on the game. If it had, well you know they have pelted umpires with bottles and things like that before—and habits cling.

The conference, which opened to-day, was called by Sir Thomas Tait for the purpose of placing before the local directors the terms of the order-in-Council constituting the National Service, and of having a general discussion as to the best method of securing the necessary data as to employees, classes of employment, etc. The programme set by the Government is a large one, and involves a number of questions bearing upon employment and recruiting.

Sergeant Instructor L. L. Hicks of Peterborough, is the only wireless instructor in military camps in Canada. Sergt. Hicks enjoys the distinction of being the only wireless class instructor in military camps in Canada. He will open another class upon his return to Kingston, and this will be in the city, as the cool weather is closing the camp soon. It is expected that this class will be opened in the Queen's University, as the wireless sets in use are owned by Prof. McGill. A thorough training in wireless is given to each student who becomes proficient in the installation of wireless apparatus, and is taught how to put into working shape a section which has been damaged, also how to put out of commission an enemy station. The student actually receives messages from distant stations of hundreds of miles away, and carries on conversation with stations within the range of the set in use. Reports show that these students are already doing excellent work in the present war.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught was highly pleased with the work going on and stated to the Commanding officer, Maj. D. C. Mundell, that this is the only one at present in Canada.

Sergt Hicks returns to Kingston on Thursday at 1.30, by G. T. R.

ARTILLERY RECRUITS

For the first time in a number of weeks artillery recruits are being sought in Peterborough. To-day Capt. O'Leary and Lieut. G. G. Cameron of the Artillery Brigade now being completed in this district, comprising the 72nd, 73rd, 74th, and 75th Batteries, C.F.A., are in the city to arrange for a recruiting campaign for their units. Lieut. Cameron will remain here for the next few days, and is hopeful that there are a number of Peterborough young men anxious to join their comrades who are already in the 74th Battery. There are many opportunities for advancement and Lieut. Cameron will be glad to talk over the matter with men of military age and fitness.

There is a rumour in town to-day that the 235th Durham and Northumberland Battalion, now on a trek through the united counties will be sent to Peterborough to spend the winter quartered at the local Armouries. Cobourg, Bowmanville and other places have already been spoken of in this connection and whether there is anything in the story of the 235th coming here or not the Examiner is not prepared to say.

PTE. KING WOUNDED.

No. 455638 Pte. Marvin King, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported wounded to-day. The official message sent to Mr. Wm. King of Peterborough, states that Pte. King is reported admitted to No. 6 General Hospital, Rouen, on September 29th, wounded in the right arm. This is the only Peterborough casualty reported to-day, the smallest list in two weeks.

Lt.-Col. Johnston and a number of other officers of the 247th Battalion are on a recruiting mission at the Norwood Fair to-day.

Lance Corp. Harold Losey, of Peterborough, son of Pte. A. J. Losey of the 93rd, sends some interesting particulars of the recent fighting in France in a letter to his mother, 872 Water street. He says in part: I have been through the greatest advance the Canadians ever made and I know there was a Guiding Hand helping me through the battle. I can never describe the awful things that were left on the field after the Germans retreated. Few sights at any time or place have ever equalled what we saw on that field as we swept over it. I saw things that I can never forget. Germans by the hundreds came to our trenches to surrender, and even their officers pleaded for mercy. I was sent out in charge of two German prisoners and they said they were both Prussians. One of them said he had won an Iron Cross at Ypres last June and was wearing the ribbon. The other was wounded in the jaw. They were both glad to be taken prisoner.

Lance Corp. Losey has just been promoted. He was a private until a short time ago.

TUNNEL HAS QUEER USE.

Running beneath the St. Louis city hall at ground level is a tunnel which has been used as a shadow box for testing the headlights of more than 5,000 automobiles and adjusting them in conformity with that city's new anti-glare ordinance.

By dropping a black canvas curtain over one end of the tunnel the place is thoroughly darkened. The law requires that the main shaft of light from headlights shall not be higher than three feet from the ground, seventy-five feet in front of the car.

In this darkened passageway the lights are directed against a board surface, measuring six feet high and four feet wide, painted white, and framed in black curtains. By means of a graduated scale an officer judges the direction and intensity of the lights and adjusts and tilts them until the main rays fell on the three-foot line.

When all is satisfactory a seal is affixed to the car, showing that the owner has complied with the law.

Britain Turns Out 30 Expert Flyers Weekly

BRITISH CENTRAL FLYING SCHOOL, Oct. 10.—Putting wings on the birdman is the stern war duty of this unique school. Eight weeks of fair weather and almost the rawest recruit who was never higher than he could climb has won his "wings" and is off for real war at the front in France. They are turning out about thirty expert flyers every week.

Instructors as England's central flying school, and, incidentally, the largest of its kind in the world, are men who have been through all the fire that modern war flying can generate. The recruit is possibly a schoolboy or young civilian who thinks he has the "birdman" in him.

He arrives at the "nest". For a few days he simply flies with experienced flyers and learns to ride his aeroplane as the novice learns to ride his bicycle. Then he enters his initial class with other budding British eaglets.

LEARN WIRELESS CODE.

Learning the Morse wireless code is one of the preliminaries. Inside a small wooden building, grouped with other class buildings, is found a topographical reproduction of a part of the British front in France. Miniature woods, houses, bridges, and rivers lie below a full sized aeroplane suspended in the rafters of the classroom.

Below, to the rear, is, theoretically, a British battery. Near this battery is its wireless. An operator sits under a headpiece jotting what the aeroplane observer, theoretically, ten or twelve miles away, but in fact thirty feet away is signaling.

The accepting observer is the embryo birdman learning how to destroy a bridge or building or shell an enemy force somewhere within this small square of artificial scenery below. He sees a small bridge, and, if his imagination is good, he knows it is useful to the enemy. Therefore bridge must be destroyed.

He taps a Morse signal to the battery wireless. He gives the range and position. The battery fires.

RESULT OF SHOT FLASHED

On the little flat map the result of the shot is flashed by a small electric lamp. The aviator in the rafters tapes out a correction in the range. Instantly the battery wireless has it and adjusts the delicate mechanism on the gun to throw the shell a little forward or to the left or right.

The next shot is nearer. The range practicers, again goes back. The third shot makes it decidedly unhealthy for the bridge. The young birdman in there in the rafters taps out his fourth correction. The fourth shot is clean. The bridge falls. It's a little battle won by the British airman.

If everything goes well, a few weeks more will find this man who sat among the rafters trying his skill on a real bridge. "Somewhere in northern France.

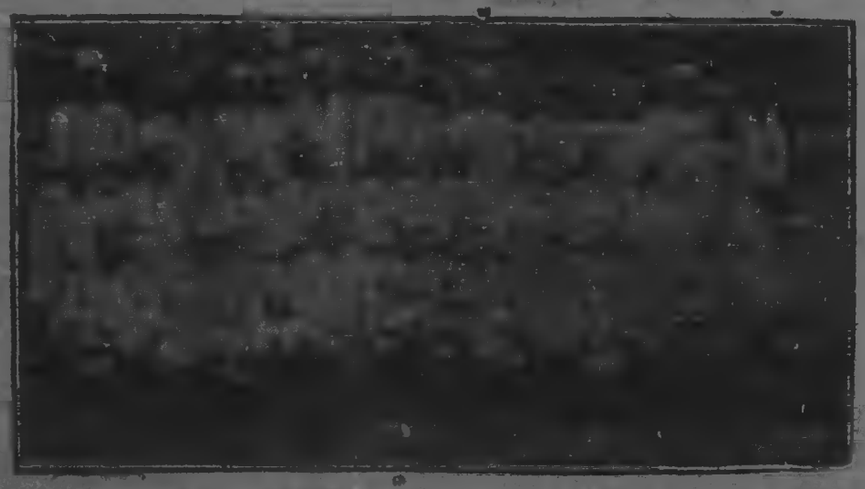
Slowly—day by day—the young British birdman works his way through all the great hangars and classrooms of the world's biggest aerial school. He learns the whys and wherefores of every cylinder, spark plug, exhaust valve, and nut or bolt in a dozen different makes of aeroplane engines.

He learns by labour the assembling of biplanes and monoplanes with all their component parts. He finds out how to aim and fire a machine gun. He knows how to repair a broken strut or a torn wing and he crams as much knowledge into his head as these classrooms and hangers can give him. Then he strats to fly.

AT LAST A BIRD OF PREY.

Soaring for several hours a day over the great barren plain, on the edge of which the British eagle's "nest" is built, he learns how to bomb, dive, shoot, plane, ascend, and how to direct the fire of real gatteries tucked away in the wrinkles of the rolling waste which England calls her greatest plain.

Finally the British eaglet's yellow fuzz has disappeared and he's rough awkward, gray beaked bird of prey, anxious to fight the black eagle of the other side of "No Man's Land" in northern France.



THE BOSTON RED SOX—FAVOURITES FOR WORLD SERIES—Boston Red Sox, world's champions last year, who entered the world's series games this year as favourites, against the Brooklyn Robins. Manager "Bill" Carrigan expects to bring the flag back to Boston again.

Britain's Note On Submarines

Memorandum Is Now Made Public

LONDON, Oct. 10—The text of the memorandum recently sent by the allies to neutral governments respecting the admission of belligerent submarines into neutral waters of ports, as as follows:

"In view of the development of submarine navigation, and by reason of acts, which in the present circumstances may be expected from enemy submarines, the allied governments consider it necessary in order not only to safeguard their belligerent rights and liberty of commercial navigation, but to avoid risks of dispute, to urge neutral governments to take effective measures, if they have not already done so, with a view of preventing belligerent submarine vessels, whatever the purpose to which they are put, from making use of neutral waters, roadsteads, and ports.

NOVEL CONDITIONS

"In the case of submarine vessels the application of the principles of the law of nations is affixed by special and novel conditions: First, that by the fact that these vessels can navigate and remain at sea submerged, and can thus escape all control and observation; second, by the fact that it is impossible to identify them and establish their national character, whether combatant or non-combatant, and to remove the capacity from harm inheren in the nature of such vessels.

SHOULD BE EXCLUDED.

"It may further be said that any place which provides a submarine far from its base with an opportunity for rest and replenishment of its supplies, thereby furnishes such addition to its powers that the place becomes in fact, through the advantages which it given, a base of naval operations.

"In view of the state of affairs thus existing, the allied governments are of the opinion that submarine vessels should be excluded from the benefit of the rules hitherto recognised by the law of nations regarding the admission of vessels of war or merchant vessels into neutral waters, roadsteads or ports and their sojourn in them. Any belligerent submarine entering a neutral port should be detained there.

"The allied governments take this opportunity to point out to the neutral powers the grave danger incurred by neutral submarines in the navigation of regions frequented by belligerent submarines."

Paris is favouring Grecian lines and Empire and Directoire are hailed as the next fashion.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Egypt's Ruler a Strong Ally of Great Britain

Sultan Declares There is an Ever-Growing Feeling of Confidence in Albion—Only Fanatics Opposed the Existing Administration—Education for Egyptian Women is One of the Sultan's Many Plans.

GREATEST OF LIBERAL POWERS

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt, October 11.—"I have great hopes for Egypt. I believe that under the protection of England, the greatest of liberal powers, the future of Egypt is assured."

It was his highness, Hussein Kamil, the new sultan of Egypt, speaking. The occasion was an audience granted to a representative of the Associated Press. The sultan is a man of magnetic personality and a charming conversationalist, democratic in his ideas. Throughout his life—he is 65 years old—he has been a student of the world, and has a profound knowledge of many subjects.

His highness expressed satisfaction with the progress made thus far as regards the change in ideals and sentiments of the people since his ascension and added that there was an ever-growing feeling of confidence in Great Britain.

"When I was asked to assume the position of sultan I declined at first," continued his highness. "The situation then was a complicated and difficult one. After careful reflection I decided that I could do Egypt a service by accepting. Accordingly, I cast my lot with Great Britain. I have shaken hands with the British; I have pledged my faith, and I shall carry my agreement to a finish, understanding well that it is in the interest of my country.

"Had it not been for my faith in the British government and my belief that there would be a gradual increase in the rights granted us in the matter of self-rule, I should never have undertaken the task.

ONLY FANATICS OPPOSED.

Speaking of the attitude of the Egyptian people to the protectorate at the outset, his highness admitted that there had been some hostility and stated this was due primarily to so-called religious reasons, the mixing up of politics and religion.

"Such feeling of resentment as there may have been," said the sultan, "was among that class of people whose religious conceptions had been rendered faulty and who had arrived at a certain fanaticism entirely foreign to Islamism, which Germany and other powers had exploited in their own interests."

Asked to amplify his statement regarding the attitude of the people of Egypt toward the protectorate, the sultan said:

"I will go back to the time of my predecessor and give you an illustration which may help to explain this difficult and delicate point. Under the ex-khedive the condition of government was such as might be compared to a house with three doors. These doors were represented by the Egyptian government, by the khedive and by the British agency. Each of these three forces was working more or less individually. Their interests were different and there was not the cooperation there should have been. As a result the people never knew through which of these doors they were being led. Now the three forces have amalgamated and their interests are one, namely, to work for the good of Egypt."

EDUCATION FOR EGYPTIAN WOMEN.

Hussein Kamil is a great believer in education as a means of establishing good government and prosperity. One of his most striking declarations was that he was an earnest advocate of education for Egyptian women.

"I have many plans for education in Egypt," he said. "For one thing, I hope for the establishment of compulsory education for both boys and girls. As to the girls, we already have some normal schools for them, established by the provincial councils. There is a growing tendency on the part of the young to take advantage of the education offered."

Since agriculture is the main stay of Egypt, the sultan also has plans for assisting the farmers in the matter of agricultural education. His highness has been an ardent agriculturalist himself, devoting much of his time as a prince to his estates.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading, containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which then assumes the responsibility.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—With your kind permission I would like to make a further effort to convince the Council to their mistake in passing the early closing by-law in such hot haste, as a gentleman who is in a prominent business in the city expressed himself to me this evening. The Council have made a false step in the wrong direction, if they are looking for the support of the people next January when they will be called on to give an account of their stewardship. The Book of God Laws says as a man sows so shall he reap. The result passing this bad by-law, as it effects me, simply takes out of my pocket three full hours of my business time for earning money to pay my expenses, every night that I am compelled to close my store at 7 o'clock. my hours of business are from 8 in the morning till 10 at night, and I have put in twenty-two years at these hours. Of course I have no clerk now, if I had I would not ask them to stay so long, so I am deprived of this three hours value by the by-law. After I have paid my landlord for the time to use in my business, is it fair to take this three hours of mine and give me nothing for it? I leave my friends and fellow citizens to judge if this is justice. There has often been harsh, cruel and penal laws passed and put on the statute books of the nations of the world, for instance, "slavery." The law upheld this awful crime to traffic in human flesh and blood, with all the barbaric cruelty that demons could devise, and it cost the United States, whose star-spangled banner which floats in the breeze, and says that all men are free and equal — it cost the United States one million of her noblest and bravest sons' lives to free the slaves and abolish accursed slavery—the trend of the world at the present time is for place and power, from the Kaiser down to those in minor positions. The word Boss seems to have an offensive ring in it when we read and study the Sermon on the Mount, and put into practice its teachings; e will be more careful of the interests of our fellow men; there will be no more penalizing by-laws for early closing. I have refrained from using harsh words and have avoided any personalities, simply presenting any case as I see it and pointing out to the citizens how this by-law will effect their interests and mine. It simply takes from me, by force, the best opportunity I have of doing business. If facts like these get out it we will be more careful of the interests city, and any who may be looking for a place to settle in, give us the go-by. I am a resident and taxpayer for nearly forty-five years and in all that time, in connection with the municipal laws of the city I have never met with anything that has hurt me so much as this early-closing by-law. I have every confidence that when the Council is fully aware of the mind of the merchants and of citizens they will rescind the by-law.

Yours sincerely,

James Sutherland,

332½ Water Street.

Going Hatless 10 Years To Cure Baldness Fails

MOBILE, Ala., Oct. 10—Adolph Danner, who ran a delicatessen shop in an isolated corner of Mobile as a side line, but made a business of fighting for his hair, exploded the theory that going bareheaded will prevent baldness. He tried it for ten years after which he declares there's nothing in it.

Observing evidences of increasing baldness, Danner went to work to foster his little remaining crop of hair by abandoning hats. He determined not to go further than his home, a block away, until he got his hair back. For ten years he never went more than 200 feet from his shop.

WITHOUT HAT ALL THE TIME

In all that time he never wore a hat, and believed nature would do the work of keeping him from growing bald. He gave up all pleasurable pursuits to nurse his hair. It became a mania with him. Not once during that period did he visit the shopping district, ten minutes' walk away.

But, do what he would, Danner's hair gradually disappeared, and at the end of ten years' trial he was bald. Then he decided the hatless theory was all wrong and hiked to the retail district to purchase a hat.

It was new and tight and felt strange to him. People stared at him, and newsboys demanded to know where he got it. He felt conscious as crowds followed him and made all kinds of remarks.

POPULAR AS A STREET FAIR

The one plain citizen wearing an ordinary hat attracted as much excitement as a street fair or a pyrotechnic display since he had gone without a hat for ten years in a heroic fight to escape baldness.

Three thousand people soon collected to learn what the trouble was all about, and Danner fled from the scene. He got a job that required him to wear a hat, and declares he will never again go bareheaded, hair or no hair.

BIGGEST SEARCHLIGHT OF WORLD IS IN BROOKLYN

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—The world's most powerful searchlight is being constructed in Brooklyn, on the new Sperry Gyroscope Company's building in Flatbush avenue extension, near the approach to the Manhattan bridge.

When complete it will have the strength of 1,500,000 candle power. It is as tall as the ordinary man. Elmer A. Sperry is the inventor of the light. He said it was being constructed solely for experimental purposes.

It will be 40 per cent stronger than the searchlight tried out at the Brooklyn navy yard a few months ago, which could be seen thirty-five miles.

PETERBORO' CHILD IS BADLY HURT

Little Son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McKee Falls From a Balcony

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald McKee met with a serious accident in Toronto on Thanksgiving Day. With his parents he was in the city for a short visit, and in some manner fell a distance of 10 or 12 feet from a balcony and it is feared he has been seriously injured. The parents will receive a great deal of sympathy. The little chap has not been in very robust health for several years but just lately had been decidedly improved.

TO DARKEN HAIR APPLY SAGE TEA

Look Young! Bring Back its Natural Colour, Gloss and Attractiveness

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will prove a revelation if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome. An easier way is to get a 50-cent bottle of Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.

This preparation is a delightful toilet requisite and is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.

TALES FROM LONDONERS IN THE BIG PUSH

BY A CANADIAN OVERSEAS

"We were holding a captured German trench. The shelling was terrific. Big and little shells were falling all around like rifle bullets from rapid fire. I had been told off to fetch water and had gone about 200 yards, dodging from one shell hole to another, when a high explosive flattened me out.

I was unconscious all the time; saw a red mist and nothing more. The Huns had just shelled this particular spot, and the shells burst all around me with deafening noise. I couldn't see; found I had got it in the eyes. I heard men passing and called to them, but they did not heed. You could not blame them; it was practically sure death to stop in this zone.

Then my good samaritan came along. I heard him stumble into my shell hole, and called to him. For God's sake, old chap, get me out of this; I can't see, but lead me out," I said.

He did not hesitate a second. "Put your arm around my neck matey," he replied, "I'll get you out of this or we'll both be killed," and he did. It was a fine thing to do. Providence was with us. We had narrow escapes in finding the dressing station, but got there unscathed. The dressing station was a dug-out 300 yards away. We had only just got down the steps and safe below ground when a monster shell fell right at the entrance and blew to pieces several poor stretcher cases.

A pal of mine was down in a shell hole for four days. He was badly wounded in the thigh. A comrade was helping him back when a shell took his head off and left my chum untouched. He lay in the open for some hours when a stretcher bearer on another case paused for a moment and helped him into a shell hole.

On the fourth day my friend had only half a bottle of water and one biscuit with him and he knew he must either get out unaided or die in the hole. He had finished his biscuit, his bottle was dry. Just then a shell falling nearby smashed down a tree. This gave him an idea. He struggled across, improvised a crutch from a broken branch and hobbled back to the dressing station.

Two days before I got knocked out I had a miraculous escape. I wanted to borrow a pull through for my rifle and had just left two pals. Just then a big Minnemerfer came over and fell in the spot I had left and there was never a sign of my two chums. The day after we were marching to a certain spot. A friend of mine was in the platoon ahead, when a big shell fell among them, killing a number and blowing my friend's body high up in a poplar tree.

LADY HUGHES INJURED IN MOTOR ACCIDENT

Is Shaken Up and Daughter, Mrs. Green, Seriously Hurt Near Peterborough

LINDSAY, Oct. 10.—An automobile accident which might have been attended with fatal results occurred Sunday evening shortly before 6 o'clock in Omemee, when a car containing Lady Hughes, her two daughters, Miss Aileen, Mrs. Major Byron Green, and Mrs. Green's two children, turned turtle near Lamb's tannery. The party were on their way back from Peterborough, where they had left Lieut.-Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, and when entering Omemee an attempt was made to pass another auto. The right of way being crowded somewhat, the Hughes auto was quickly turned on to a gravel stretch when it turned turtle, throwing the occupants out. All fortunately escaped with slight bruises and a shaking up, save Mrs. Green, who was pinned beneath the car. After being extricated she was taken to the residence of Dr. Earle in an unconscious condition. It was found that her back was severely hurt, and she also sustained serious bruises about the body. She regained consciousness soon afterwards. Dr. McAlpine of Lindsay reached Omemee soon after the accident and rendered medical aid.

PAPER TOO HIGH SAY PUBLISHERS

OTTAWA, Oct. 10.—Progress is being made in the conference between the newspaper publishers and the Minister of Finance regarding the price of newsprint. At the conclusion of yesterday's conference, at which there were also present representatives of the pulp and paper manufacturers, sub-committees of both interests were created to meet together at the call of R. W. Bradner, the Government tariff expert, and to endeavour to reach a satisfactory agreement on the question. Failing this, the Government will endeavour to bring about an adjustment.

Quotation too High.

At yesterday's meeting the pulp and paper manufacturers quoted a figure at which they would be willing to grant contracts for the coming year. They explained that the price quoted was based not only on present cost of production but on probable future cost, coupled with the prevailing demand. They contended that in no other country at present was the price lower than that which they charged.

Attention was called by the publishers to the fact that in Norway a price had been fixed by the pulp and paper people which was lower than the regular market price. The price had been fixed, not so much on the cost of production as in order to avoid its prohibited exportation, which would otherwise have been put in force.

50 Per Cent Increase.

The publishers pointed out that the price now quoted to them was from 50 to 60 per cent. higher than that at present charged, and realized their very worst fears before coming to Ottawa.

Municipalities Are Skimping Fire Departments Said Chief Howard At Insurance Probe

TORONTO, Oct. 10.—The charge that municipalities were shirking their responsibilities and skimping the fire brigades, was made by Fire Chief Howard of Peterborough, when Mr. Justice Masten continued the fire insurance probe at the Parliament Buildings to-day. He also declared that over-insurance and the loose methods of certain insurance companies were responsible for many fire losses.

"We maintain that the careless habits of the people of this Province in the past have been responsible for a very large percentage of the disastrous fires that have occurred," said the Chief. "We further believe that it is within the rights and the reach of the Provincial Legislature to enact laws that will diminish the fire waste of the future, and further, we are firmly convinced that if the fire waste of the Province is materially reduced, that as a consequence the rates of insurance will of necessity be reduced, provided the Ontario Legislature will enact statutory Legislation that will permit competition in the fire insurance business."

FIRE MARSHAL HEATON RECALLED.

Mr. E. P. Heaton, Provincial Fire Marshal, was recalled at the request of the insurance companies, and was examined by Mr. D. L. McCarthy. Mr. Heaton said he had been connected with fire insurance business for nearly 40 years, starting with the London & Lancashire Co. in 1881 until he became manager of the Guardian Co. in 1903. From 1906 to 1914 he was manager of the insurance department of the C.M.A. From then until his appointment as Fire Marshal he was engaged as an insurance broker. Mr. Heaton stated that the Underwriters' Association declined to have anything to do with him or his department of the C.M.A. In 1915 he had been asked by the Attorney-General to make a report. His instructions were to make a report upon the control of insurance rates within the Province of Ontario, using the history, policy and practices of any body which influenced or had anything to do with the control of rates. He received no complaints against anybody at that time, nor at any time during his work on the report, although it was common knowledge to him and many others that complaints had been made. Mr. Heaton said that it was at his own suggestion that he made the report on what was being done in the United States along the lines of Government supervision of rate-making. He was not aware that this could be found anywhere else.

"Were the conditions in the State of New York parallel with the conditions in Ontario now?" "Conditions were not the same."

Mr. Heaton said that the general conduct of insurance business in New York State was on parallel lines with the Province of Ontario. He thought he had stated the fact when he said that the attitude of the people in the United States was more hostile towards rate-making bodies than it was in Ontario.

Would it be fair to say that this insuring public was hostile towards the Underwriters' Association in Ontario?" asked Mr. McCarthy.

OPINION DECIDEDLY HOSTILE.

"The trend of opinion as I have got it for some years, always has been, and is now, decidedly hostile," replied Mr. Heaton.

Mr. McCarthy suggested that the lowering of insurance rates would lead to an increase of incendiarism. Mr. Heaton said that was more theoretical than demonstratable. He thought, however, that there would be an increase in the "burning ratio".

Mr. McCarthy xpressed the opinion that it was Mr. Heaton's suspicious mind of his (Mr. McCarthy's) working that led him to differentiate in terms. Mr. Heaton denied this, and explained that "burning ratio" was the relation of loss to premium. He explained that if rates were lowered premiums would naturally be decreased, and the proportion of loss to premium would go up.

"The fire waste on the American continent is appallingly larger than in Europe, is it not?" asked Mr. McCarthy. Mr. Heaton replied that it is, and agreed that his duty was to try and reduce the fire waste in Ontario.

At this point the Commissioner suggested that a number of the chiefs present should be heard, and Mr. Heaton's examination resumed later in the day.

Fire Chief Howard of Peterborough chairman of the Legislative Committee of the Dominion Fire Chiefs' Association, and speaking for that committee, declared that many disastrous fires were due to the positive difference of the parties interested, owing to the feeling of satisfaction and contentment brought about an over-insurance.

The looseness with which fire insurance business is being conducted by certain companies is a temptation to indiscreet and dishonest people who carelessly allow fires to occur, continued Mr. Howard. "Drastic legislation should be enacted to curb this national evil."

In support of this the Chief cited an instance where a person carried $1,000 worth of insurance on $400 worth of goods. It was his opinion that agents were not thorough enough in finding out how much insurance was placed. A remedy he thought would be to pay agents on a straight salary basis rather than on commission.

CONCERT WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

57th Chapter, I. O. D. E. Gave Good Programme at Royal

The concert in the Royal Theatre last night in aid of the 57th Chapter, Daughters of the Empire was a very successful affair, both financially and artistically. The programme opened with a number of splendid films, including some splendid views taken among the British and Canadian troops in France. The following numbers were then given:—

Duet—"March Irresistible"—Miss Gladman and Mr. Huyske.

Solo—"Mother Machree"—Mr Huyske.

Fancy Dance—"Highland Fling"—Miss Eileen Wedd.

Solo—"Ma Ain Folk"—Miss Elsie Staples.

Encores were demanded in each case and to Miss Gladman who arranged the programme much credit is due.

Capt. Layfield Sends Sympathy to Wife Of Sergt. F. Thomas

Mrs. Fred Thomas, wife of the late Sergeant Fred Thomas, has received the following letter from R. E. Layfield, Quartermaster of the 80th Batt., Bramshot Camp:

"By a recent copy of the Examiner of Aug. 31st just received by me I note your terrible loss. Your dear husband worked for me, or rather with me, for several years, and we were the closest friends. God help and keep yours and you in your hour of trouble."

Mrs. Thomas was also remembered by the Park street Baptist church boys in the 83rd, who conveyed their condolences in a letter signed by Corp. J. Haw of the 83rd, and expressed their regret at the death of Sergt. Thomas.

GRATINGS PROJECT ABOVE SIDEWALKS

Several complaints have been received of late concerning minor obstructions on the streets which might be attended to with but little difficulty and expense. At the Hunter street side of the George street corner, north-east, in front of Kent's window, the iron grating is projecting above the surface of the sidewalk, causing persons to trip on it. This is a very busy corner and it should be some person's duty to remove troublesome conditions of this kind. The Utilities Commission have recently overlooked their "keys" in the sidewalks, and Mr. Parsons may be able to turn a man loose at this kind of work before the snow flies. At the corner of Rubidge and Dalhousie street on the west side of Rubidge the grating over the crossing gutter is in a position to trip pedestrians and is really doing so. Why not have them remedied? It only requires a few minutes' attention from a workman who might be sent over the entire city to examine other gratings.

The reputation of the house for never making an error seemed to be at stake but the bright mind of the junior partner found a way out of it. He wrote:

"Gentlemen: We are sorry to hear that your consignment did not suit you; there was, however, no mistake on our part. We have looked up your original order and find that it reads as follows: 'Rush fifty boxes eggs. We want them bad.'"—Exchange

Options Will Be Secured

Meeting Held Last Evening Failed to Produce Tangible Results —Committee Appointed

The committee appointed to consider the question of the site for the proposed sewage disposal plant, also the feasibility of establishing a site for the Fair Grounds adjoining the plant, met last evening, and, like a number of previous meetings, failed to come to any definite decision. In all probability another meeting will be held next Tuesday night. At last night's meeting a committee was appointed to secure options on properties adjoining the site authorized by the Provincial Board of Health for the disposal plant.

A number of North Monaghan ratepayers, representatives of the Fair Board and the City Council were present at last night's meeting. Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., President of the Fair Board, made it plain at the meeting that the Fair Board had no desire to participate in a controversy over the matter. If it was possible to co-operate in an amicable understanding the Fair Board would be willing to continue as a party to the negotiations. Failing this the Board would withdraw altogether and deal with the proposal respecting the present site of the Fair Grounds.

Would Oppose Move.

Mr. A. Saunders, resident of Monaghan, said he would oppose the closing of McKellar street, from Chester to Park Streets. Mr. J. T. O'Connell was of the opinion that the city was buying too expensive property. He, together with a number of others, advised the city to go farther away, where land could be purchased at more reasonable prices. Mr. Samuel Newball informed the meeting that the site selected was very low and in the springtime the land in that vicinity was navigable. Someone wanted to know why he built at that point if such conditions existed. The matter drifted along until it was decided to form a committee and secure options on properties adjoining the present proposed site.

War Pictures At Salvation Army Temple Were Good

The S. A. Temple was standing full last night to see the war pictures, together with a number of slides of the local boys.

Everybody enjoyed it immensely, as evidenced by the applause given so often.

Then the roosting of the Temple with open chairs may be attempted by New Year's.

Won't Twist Lion's Tail This Time

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—The U-boat raid off the Massachusetts coast is commented upon in some quarters as another exhibition of German bullheadedness in short-sighted sacrificing diplomatic advantage for insignificant material gains. Just as Germans torpedoed the Lusitania at a time when sharp exchanges between the United States and Britain might otherwise have been expected, so she has now raided the American coast at a time when a tail-twisting attitude towards the Lion might have been expected from men of both parties who wish to reap advantage of the German vote in the coming United States election. The U-raids have made this tail-twisting act risky. The grievance against Germany is so great that any grievance against Britain becomes a minor matter.

Major Davidson Moved From 93rd Against His Will

A Brother Chaplin Discredits An Unwarranted Assumption and Explains the Conditions of Service

The following letter appears in our evening contemporary in discredit of unwarranted deductions from correspondence appearing recently in its columns. The sub-joined letter vindicates Major Davidson's relations to the 93rd and discredits the assumption that he was in any danger of being "deposed as Chaplain of the 93rd" by the efforts of some one connected with the Battalion, or that he ffailed in any way in loyalty to his duty or the 93rd:

Editor Review: I was shocked to see your paper of September 23th with the paragraph, "May be deposed as Chaplain of the 93rd." Knowing Major Davidson as I do, and the good work he has done in Peterborough, I could not have believed that any newspaper could be found to publish such an untruth. Major Davidson was removed from the 93rd Batt. by his superior officer against his wish, just as so many chaplains have been, and are being removed for apparently no cause whatever.

I could name you at least twenty chaplains who started out like Major Davidson, with the fullest intention of going right through to the front with their battalions, but their heads were chopped off and no explanations were forthcoming.

I was senior chaplain of the First Contingent, the first clergyman to enlist, the first on the ground at Valcartier, and though I had served in the Militia as chaplain for seventeen years, and my battalion wanted me with them—all these things counted for nothing. The order came that another chaplain was to take my place, and I went to the eastern instead of to the western front, much against my will. Precisely the same thing has happened in Major Davidson's case.

Thanking you for allowing me to explain this matter.

Fred C. Piper, Major.

A Good Way To Prevent Baldness

Says This Recipe Will Often Grow New Hair in Two Weeks' Time.

Men once take baldness as something inevitable though why it passes understanding. There is no more reason why hair should cease to grow on the top of the head than on the sides of the face—and most men have to shave to the end of their days or wear a beard.

If your hair is growing scrawny or getting thin to baldness and you find great quantities of it in your brush and comb, the following recipe for a good home made hair tonic can be strongly recommended. Get from any druggist 2 oz. of Lavona de Composee and .5 oz. of pure Bayrum. Mix together, adding one-half drachm of Menthol Crystals and a little perfume if you desire it. This mixture should be allowed to stand over night, when it is ready for use.

This preparation will in almost every instance stop falling hair within two or three days and numerous instances have been reported in which it has been the cause of new hair growth after years of partial baldness. It is quite important in using the prescription to apply the tonic directly on the scalp, rubbing briskly into the pores with the finger tips so that the hair roots can absorb its full nourishment. While the preparation contains no coloring matter and will not make the hair greasy or sticky, it often will restore hair to its natural color by its revitalizing action on the hair roots.

TO ENSURE A SUPPLY OF WHEAT AND FLOUR

LONDON, Oct. 10.—The British Parliament assembled to-day for the autumn session. There are few matters of importance to come before Parliament with the exception of questions pertaining to the war.

Financial aspects of the war were referred to by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Reginald McKenna.

In response to a question in the House of Commons, Mr. McKenna said the decision to issue six per cent. Exchequer bonds had been taken because the amount did not appear to be the most favourable to put out a long-dated loan. He could not give a pledge as to the issuance of such a loan, he said, but intended to recommend such a floatation at the first favourable opportunity.

Irish Nationalists also decided to make an effort to have the Irish question discussed in the House of Commons as early as possible.

John Redmond was required to give notice of the following motion, and ask facilities for its discussion.

"That the system of Government at present maintained in Ireland is inconsistent with the principles wherefor the allies are fighting in Europe, and in or has been mainly responsible for the recent unhappy events, and for the present state of feeling in that country."

The Government has decided to appoint a Royal Commission, with Lord Crawford as chairman, to take steps necessary to ensure adequate and regular supplies of wheat and flour. Announcement of this effect was made in the House of Commons to-day by Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade. Mr. Runciman said it had become clear that the supplying of wheat for Great Britain could not be left for Private enterprise. In anticipation of this the Government has made a large purchase of wheat in Argentine.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE PROTESTANT HOME

Encouraging Reports of the Year's Work Were Presented Yesterday at Business Meeting—Officers Elected

The following officers were elected for the ensuing term:

Hon. President—Mrs. T. G. Hazlett.
President—Mrs. W. Roger.
1st Vice-Pres.—Miss Nicholls.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. R. Birdsall.
Secretary—Miss Flora Davidson.
Treasurer—Miss S. Robinson.

Directors elected to fill vacancies for three years—Mrs. W. Roger, Miss Nicholls, Mr. H. Rush and Mrs. R. Waddell.

Votes of thanks were passed to Mrs. Roger, the secretary, the treasurer and the superintendent.

The secretary's report was as follows:

The year which has just closed, like former years, has been a quiet and peaceful one for the Home, everything being done to make the old people happy and comfortable. The total number of inmates, 39—23 men and 16 women, with a total number of days 10,047. The number remaining in the Home at present is 39. The number discharged were four for various reasons, and five have died. The usual Christmas entertainment was provided. Mr. Mackenzie of Knox church, having the religious exercises. Mr. Allan, with Miss Dorothy Allan and other members of St. Paul's choir, assisting with the music. The donations and gifts from the friends were most acceptable. In February the directors and women representatives of the different churches met, tied and quilted at least a dozen quilts, which had been made by Miss Lancaster and some of the old ladies who were able to sew.

In March Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Robinson with their usual kind thoughtfulness, sent automobiles to convey the old people to the Empire Theatre, as it was the first ride in an auto some of them had ever had, also the first moving pictures some of them had seen. They much enjoyed the diversion. The Board has been most fortunate in securing Mr. J. C. Hamilton for janitor and gardener, notwithstanding the poor year the garden has been most successful. As usual we have made many improvements and repairs, both inside and out, in order to keep the building and grounds up. We as a Board cannot let this opportunity pass without tendering our sincere thanks to the clergymen for their faithful services on Sunday morning, to Dr. F. L. Robinson for providing the conveyance and the doctors of the city who have given of their time and skill so freely to ease the old people in pain. Also the gentlemen who have acted auditors, the press, who have always been so courteous, and all the friends who have by many ways shown their interest in the Home.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Flora H. Davidson,
Secretary.
